It gives me much pleasure to be able to hand over to the Indian Famine Fund two subscriptions, one of 2s. 2d. from "Little May," who says:—"I am a little girl eleven years old, and I thought I should like to help the starving children in India. These are my farthings which I have saved up;" and another of 2s. from George Easton, who is six years of age, and says, "Mother often tells me about the Indian Famine. I am sending my birthday present to feed some of the poor children. It must be sad to be hungry."

Will the following please send me their addresses:—Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Evelyn Moir, Charles N. Wright.

The Story of a Great Work.*

THIS biography of one of the most remarkable women of the century ranks high in importance, from the fact that it covers the period of the entire Women's Movement from its inception to the present time.

Not the least interesting portion of the first volume is the earlier part, which depicts the life of Quaker Christianity in the New England States a century or more ago. Susan Anthony came from a good, sterling stock, whose sturdy if somewhat crabbed piety contributed much to her own forceful character. The discipline of her school life, however, is as awe-inspiring in its pedantic demands as it is amusing in its method, and the wonder is that it did not tend to wreck the mental balance of its victims. A wandering thought, a roaming eye, an innocent smile during tuition were deemed to be heinous sins, while spectral fears, born of morbid introspection, made hideous the solitude of the night watches, or the dread hours of composing the periodical letter home.

It is not often that a pioneer lives to see such substantial development of his aims, or such progress along the thorny path of reform, as has Miss Anthony. Few persons born in later years can conceive the bitterness of persecution, the injustice of vested interest, the malice of unprincipled opposition, that beset the way of this noble woman in her struggle for freedom. Says her biographer:—

It must seem a strange contrast to the woman who has worked so perseveringly in the face of untold difficulties—this change that a few years have wrought. It has not been so very long since she was the universal butt of ridicule, lampooned and caricatured, with all that malice, in its coarsest and most brutal form, could suggest. Her age was the favourite theme of the callow witling, her cause a never-failing subject for reproach and abuse. It is all over and done with, thanks to the new race of men which women themselves are training and educating. There are no words for her nowadays but those of praise and affection. She has lived to see truth survive and justice vindicated. Men no longer regard her as the arch enemy to domestic peace, disseminating doctrines that mean the destruction of home and the disorganization of society. They perceive in her, rather, the advocate of that liberty which knows no limitations either of sex or of condition—a freedom which, achieved, means the incalculable advancement of the race.

It is noteworthy that the emancipation of the slave and the claims of temperance were the first to elicit Miss Anthony's active sympathy. But she had not proceeded far along this line, especially in the latter cause, before the disabilities of her sex were forced upon her attention. Step by step the advance had to be forced, whether over mountains of prejudice, or in valleys of despair; up rocky steeps of misrepresentation, or through the pleasanter meadows of kindly and well-meant criticism.

With all the positions contended for we may not agree, nor follow her in all her ambitions concerning Women's Suffrage, which was the one great and ultimate plank in her platform. Our admiration is excited rather by the fearlessness of speech, the desperateness of purpose, the relentless persistency of will, which characterized the advocacy of her ideal; coupled with a nobility of mind, a gentleness of soul, a charity of disposition unsullied and unembittered by the scathing ordeals through which she passed. Here is an illustration:—

The members of Congress always knew when Miss A. had arrived in Washington. Other women accepted their word that they were going to do something, and waited patiently at home. Miss A. followed them up, and saw that they did it. If she could not find them at the Capitol, she went to their homes. If they promised to introduce a certain measure on a certain day, she was in the gallery looking them squarely in the face. If they failed to do it, they found her waiting for them at the close of the session. Senator Blair wrote this humorous note: "I thought just as likely as not you would come fussing around before I got your amendment reported to the Senate. I wish you would go home. Cockrell has agreed to let me know soon whether he won't allow the report to be made right off without any bother, and I have been to him several times before. I don't see what you want to meddle for anyway. Go off and get married! I hope you will always live in this world. Heaven has got more than its share of good people already."

Miss Anthony's declining days (she has just passed her eightieth birthday) are deservedly brightened by the universal esteem in which she is held; and she is fortunate in having a biographer so impartial and yet so appreciative, who sums up her character thus:—

Steadfast! No other word so fitly defines the keystone of the arch of noble attributes upon which this heroic life is founded—as constant to a principle as to a friendship. There is nothing of a martyr in Miss A.'s nature.

"I do not look back upon a hard life," she says; "I have been continually at work because I enjoy being busy. Had this never-ending toil made me wretched in mind or body, I have no doubt that in some way I should have gotten out of it." "What thanks did you receive for the stand you made?" once was asked her. "I had my own thanks for retaining my self-respect," was her reply.

The volumes are a marvel of selection and judicious compilation. The mass of material to dissect was stupendous, and nothing less than heroic was the task to which the gifted authoress set herself. But she has done her work with a skill which goes far to establish one of the principles for which the subject of the biography has so long contended—the ability of woman under equal conditions to do work which had been regarded as the monopoly of the sterner sex. Patience, resourcefulness, and exceptional literary gift are as evident in Miss Harpur's labours as in those of Miss Anthony herein set forth. She has given us a perfect encyclopædia of events incident upon the evolution of women's rights from women's wrongs.

God's Last Argument.

GOD has done all He can to bring man to reason. The consequences of revolt have been made known. His holiness, his power, and his wisdom have been declared; yet the arms of rebellion are not grounded, and enmity still holds the citadel of our being. We act as though God had not spoken.

But mercy rejoices against judgment, and God's ultimatum is not the sword, but the Cross. Where all else had failed, love conquers. "We were reconciled to God by the death of his Son," "I couldn't break my mother's heart" has been the answer of many a young man to a life of sin. "I couldn't bear to see the Son of God crucified for me, to hear Him cry, 'My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?' It broke my heart. I couldn't stand unmoved at Calvary. There I saw sin slay the Son of God; there I saw hatred trample upon the Divinest pity; there I saw the fruit of disobedience; and, when the multitude turned away, I remembered Christ's prayer, and cast myself upon the mercy of God."

The Habit of Swearing.

ADVERTING to a recent note on the use of bad language, an esteemed correspondent sends us the following lines, written in 1817, by Lieutenant J. W. Poyntz of the 30th Foot:

A FRIENDLY HINT.

It chills my blood to hear the blest Supreme,
Loudly appealed to on each trifling theme!
Maintain your rank, vulgarity despise:
To swear is neither brave, polite, nor wise.
You would not swear upon a bed of death—
Reflect: your Maker now may stop your breath.

Friends, who may be so disposed, are at liberty to reprint these lines, the circulation of which may be influential of much good.

Lectures for City Men.—Under the auspices of the London Banks' Prayer Union, four lectures are to be delivered by Rev. Dr. Samuel Kinns, F.R.A.S., in the Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate Street. They will deal with the Historical Accuracy of the Bible, as confirmed by reference to the Assyrian and Egyptian monuments in the British Museum and elsewhere. The first of the lectures, which are not exclusively for bank employés, will be given on Tuesday, March 6.

The Life of C. H. Spurgeon.

AT length the monumental Life of C. H. Spurgeon is completed.* The fourth volume, now before us, like its predecessors, is largely autobiographical; and, while as interesting as the others, it is specially attractive by reason of the frequent reference to events that are well within the memory of thoughtful persons of mature age.

This volume takes up the narrative in 1878, and ends with the great preacher's departure from this life in 1892. There is an admirable index to the entire work, while the illustrations are numerous and of a high order. From first to last the pages are singularly attractive; as we read, we hear again the melodious voice of "the prince of preachers."

It was fitting that the concluding volume should, in a measure, be descriptive in character. "Son Tom" relates how he shared a furlough with his father at Mentone; the story of Westwood is told; a typical week's work is outlined; and "Mr. Spurgeon as a Literary Man" is the text of three charming chapters. Other sections deal with the pastor's silver wedding, and describe the development of the institutions which grew up under his care. Twelve pages are devoted to "The Down-grade Controversy, from Mr. Spurgeon's Standpoint," and the treatment will doubtless meet with general approval, for it combines charity and candour in happy proportions.

The pages devoted to Mr. Spurgeon's letters are some of the most readable and instructive in the book. Then again we have communications from many of his friends and admirers, several well-known American brethren being in this worthy class, including Messrs. Moody and Sankey, Drs. Cuyler and H. L. Wayland, and Mr. J. B. Gough.

While there are many passages by quoting which we should have liked to sample this great biography, we must at present confine ourselves to a few striking sentences that are displayed in a frame in the penultimate chapter of the fourth volume. They are Mr. Spurgeon's last words at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, spoken on July 7, 1891, as follows: "If you wear the livery of Christ, you will find Him so meek and lowly of heart that you will find rest unto your souls. He is the most magnanimous of captains. There never was his like among the choicest of princes. He is always to be found in the thickest part of the battle. When the wind blows cold, He always takes the bleak side of the hill. The heaviest end of the cross ever lies on his shoulders. If He bids us carry a burden, He carries it also. If there is anything that is gracious, generous, kind, and tender, yea lavish and superabundant in love, you always find it in Him. His service is life, peace, joy. Oh that you would enter on it at once! God help you to enlist under the banner of Jesus Christ!"

While giving us an admirable idea of the pastor's Christian life and testimony, these volumes also exhibit the man of genius and humour, the powerful writer and the faithful exponent of Divine Truth.

Lagos.—Prince Fayemiwo, of Owo, recently visited Lagos in order to be baptized, and to invite Dr. Mojola Agbebi, of the native Baptist Church, to visit his country, which is 300 miles distant. After some instruction, Prince Yayemiwo was baptized, on profession of faith, in the Lagos river, in the presence of a large crowd of people, which included Mohammedans and heathens, as well as Christians.

The "Golden Lectures."—The second course of the "Golden Lectures," by Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A., will commence on Tuesday, March 6, at 1.15 p.m., in St. Margaret's Church, Lothbury (opposite the Bank of England). Under the general heading of "Examples and Warnings from the New Testament," the following subjects are announced:—(1) The Man who commended the Wine, (2) The Man no Christians spoke well of, (3) The Woman who showed Great Faith, (4) The Man who neglected his Soul, (5) The Man who looked into Eternity, (6) The Woman who wrought a Good Work. Papers announcing the services can be obtained of W. Green, 127, Great Portland Street, W.

Rifts in the Cloud.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

The Antidote to Fear.

"What time I am afraid I will trust in Thee." "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear?" "I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me from all my fears." "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me." "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Ye believe in God, believe also in Me."

FEARS are the foes of peace, and the tormentors of the soul. Their name is legion. For, although the root is one, the branches are many. The first fear of which we read was the offspring of sin. "I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid." Since that gateway of fear was opened—how it has come in troops into the heart and life of man! The uncertainties of life, the perils that surround us, the wants that daily return upon us, the weakness of which we are conscious, are so many channels of fear, besides those which spring out of conscious guilt, or the many forms of sin dwelling in the breast.

There is, however, a perfect antidote to fear. "Perfect love casteth out fear;" and so does a perfect confidence in God. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid upon Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." One beautiful life crossed the stage of human history without fear. He was the Author and finisher of faith, the great Leader and example of a perfect trust in God.

However far the believer may come short of it, yet it is his privilege to live a triumphant life, free from fear. How often our Lord rebuked the disciples for their fear through unbelief! He who knew all the secrets of heaven, earth, and hell told his disciples to have no fear. "Ye believe in God," said He, "believe also in Me." This was to be the sure antidote to fear. There was to be no fear about food, or raiment, or the power of man, or any other power of evil. Even death may be disarmed of its sting, and they who all their lifetime have been in the bondage of this fear may be delivered through faith in Him. What peace we forfeit and what ills we suffer for want of faith in God! Many of our fears are groundless, rising from our own doubting hearts. If the thing we fear comes upon us, it is often different from what we dread. Grace too is given according to our need. Unexpected deliverances come; and timely, tender and true is the help of Him who goes before us with the blessings of goodness, dropping them in the pathway we shall have to tread. In old times, when dangers threatened, Asa called upon Him and the Ethiopians were overthrown; Hezekiah spread the threatening letter of Sennacherib before Him, and the Assyrians were slain; David called upon Him and was delivered out of his distresses. God is ever with his people, caring for them in love, guiding them in wisdom, and upholding them with the arm of his power. Our fears in reality are needless if we walk in the pathway of obedience. The triumphant life of faith is shewn in the language of the Prophet:—"Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be on the vine; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

Give to the winds thy fears,
Hope, and be undismayed;
God hears thy sighs and counts thy tears—
God shall lift up thy head.

The Late Rev. J. R. McDougall, D.D.—A service in memory of this honoured and devoted worker was recently held in the Scottish Church, Florence. Dr. A. Robertson, of Venice, gave a brief sketch of Dr. McDougall's labours in connection with the condition of Italy before and after its unification. Dr. Robertson has written, by request, a short account of Dr. McDougall's career, for publication in Italian and English.

The Paralytic healed (Mark ii. 1-12).

Golden Text: "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins" (10).

Introduction.

CAPERNAUM again (1). See last lesson: Jesus inside a house, crowds coming to see Him and hear Him speak. If Christ is in the house, your neighbours will soon know it.

"Scribes" (6) (see Luke v. 17) and Pharisees, etc., were there. Their character is given in Luke xviii. 9.

"Preached" (2) (See Luke viii. 1) "glad tidings" (Isa. lxi. 1).

Key to plan.

1. The paralytic was bound by an invisible "chain," the "chain of sin;" his body was helpless—it was but a picture of his soul. Christ's first words to him were, "Thy sins be forgiven thee."
2. His getting up, taking up his bed (mat), was but a picture of Christ breaking that chain; no longer held by Satan's bonds, he is free.
3. The chain has vanished, his walking and worship is a picture of all souls forgiven for Christ's sake, walking in the path to heaven and living for the glory of God.

The Paralytic.

(1) His Malady.—Paralysis, a helpless, hopeless sort of disease, common in Palestine. He could not walk or even sit up.

Four friends carry him (3, 4): nothing shall hinder them, or keep them from the Mighty Healer. Explain an Eastern house; courtyard full, flat roof, steps up from outside, tiles easily removed, poor man on his mat lowered right in front of Jesus (Luke v. 19) (tiling).

All souls are paralytic, bound by Satan with chains of sin, hopeless, helpless. No way of getting free but by coming to Christ. Let nothing hinder. Friends pray together for any such soul. "Where two or three are gathered," &c. One condition, that soul must be willing to come. The paralytic evidently was willing.

Christ always cures with kindness (5): "Son" (Matt. ix. 2), "be of good cheer." It was a complete cure (11, 12)—"walked." Jesus not only cured his body, but his soul too—"forgiven," "pardoned" (5) (Psa. ciii. 3). Proof of his cure—"Praising God" (Luke v. 25). The people joined in the praises. "Bed" (11): a mat easily rolled up.

(3) Christ's Power.—Golden Text and Luke v. 17: "For thine is the power."

Christ's power was shown as well in his reading the thoughts of those crowds of people present (Matt. ix. 4; xii. 25). Four times in Luke we are told Jesus knew their thoughts (8).

In 8, see the questions. They look upon Christ as quite an ordinary man. They will not recognise in Him their Messiah. True, only God can forgive sins; but Christ is "Immanuel" (Matt. i. 22).

Lessons we Learn.

A Sinner Seeking Christ, and Coming to Him is Forgiven and made Free to walk, and Glorifies God.

1. Sinners seeking, will always find (Matt. vii. 7).
2. Christ's great word of invitation is "Come" (Matt. xi. 28).
3. The result of seeking and coming is to be forgiven, to be made free to walk the Christian life (Col. ii. 6), and to glorify God (Matt. v. 16).

"Beyond the Madding Crowd."

AN evangelist, who has laid upon his heart the needs of our country villages, writes:—"It will give you a little idea of the poverty in our villages when I tell you that yesterday afternoon friends proposed a collection for me, the little chapel was crowded, and the dear souls seemed so pleased with the collection and thought it extra good—it was exactly 6s. My travelling expenses to get here were just about double that sum. I return for work in Devonshire, where two or three working men have taken a temperance hall for me to have a mission. They wrote to say they were very poor, and to ask if I could supply the bills, which I shall gladly do when I return home.

"The Lord knows all about these poor and needy places, and He also knows I delight to help such all I can, and He does and will supply all our need. Oh, the joy of winning souls to Christ, and I have had such joy hundreds of times, and long to see thousands more.

"The Lord is saving precious souls at almost every meeting, so we are going to have a thanksgiving service. At a similar meeting some years ago over eighty gave bright testimonies for Christ, and my heart has been cheered greatly to find so many bright and earnest Christians amongst those we had the joy of winning then."

"The Hem of His Garment."

St. Matthew ix.

The power of God, and the wisdom of God."
"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

Only the hem of his garment! but the healing work was done,
Only a hand that trembled! but the gift of Christ it won,
He turned and looked on the woman, his sweet voice thrilled her soul,
'Daughter, be of good comfort—thy faith hath made thee whole."

Multitudes, no man can number, sheltered and safe to-day,
Where the river of life is flowing, where the tears are wiped away—
They touched the hem of his garment—so little and yet so much,
Life, even life everlasting, was won by that faltering touch.

Perhaps from the land of childhood, there floated a verse, a word
With the precious name of Jesus, from lips long silent heard,
And a heart that was weary listened to that echo of far-off days,
A hand went forth to the Master, a soul awoke to his praise.

Or out on the ebb of the current, nearing the roar of the sea,
There came the cry of the drowning, "Lord Jesus, remember me."
And dying eyes beheld Him, shining with love divine,
And a voice came over the waters, "Fear not, for thou art mine."

Oh, love, that we cannot fathom! Oh, patience and hope untold!
Feet that have spurned the Master are treading the streets of gold,
For He followed them through life's journey, albeit they shunned Him still,
And He wrenched the prey from the mighty, where the river of Death ran chill.

One by one, through the ages, they come with the trembling plea,
"Lord Jesus, I am a sinner, but Thou hast died for me!"
Only the hem of his garment! Only the cry of a soul!—
And ever and ever Christ's answer—"Thy faith hath made thee whole!"

Notes & Comments

IN our next issue, we hope to give the first of a new series of Scripture meditations, from the pen of Rev. F. B. Meyer, on John the Baptist, the great New Testament character, of whom the Lord said: "Among them that are born of women there hath not arisen a greater than he." For years Mr. Meyer has been studying the life and work of him who came "in the spirit and power of Elijah;" and those who will read are asked to pray that God will bless the papers, and give his people more of the courage and faithfulness of the bold Forerunner of the Messiah.

Our readers will be sorry to hear that Major Whittle, who for many years had been the successful co-worker with Mr. Moody, is still laid aside at Clifton Springs, marvelling why God should have taken his robuster friend and left him behind. While attempting to walk across the room, in the absence of his nurse, he fell down, and injured his foot, so that he is more than ever confined to his bed.

Friends of Gospel simplicity on the basis of Scripture truth will learn with satisfaction that arrangements have been made for Mr. James Neil, M.A., to deliver a course of Bible Lectures, illustrated by the display of his life-sized oil paintings of Palestine life. Mr. Neil will begin his work shortly in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W. During many years past, through the Press and on the platform, Mr. Neil has laboured to expose error and defend truth, as relating to Holy Scripture and its teachings; and his present important undertaking may well command the sympathy of Christian people. There are various ways in which friends may help, and of these particulars may be had from the hon. secretaries, Holy Land Lectures Fund, Newcourt, Acton, W.

No one was surprised on Monday when the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in presenting the Budget to Parliament, proposed taxation and other measures to meet the cost of the South African War. Such conflicts absorb treasure as well as shed blood; and if it will be long before the tears of mourners are dried, so also it will take many years to wipe off the heavy debt incurred. For the most part the taxation proposed will affect familiar commodities; and, while there may be divergence of judgment on points of detail, a readiness to fall in with the Chancellor's plans has been very generally expressed.

The drink traffic will be made to yield a large proportion of the money; and in view of the mischief it works, this seems quite fitting. We are not anxious, however, that the money calculated to come from such a hurtful source should be realized. Let "the trade" decline, and other industries will assuredly advance, and the general well-being will be improved in proportion.

It is far from satisfactory to find that during last year the increase in the drink bill for Great Britain and Ireland amounted to no less than £6,169,465, the total being £162,163,474, an expenditure amounting to £3 19s. 11½d. for each man, woman, and child of the entire population. Dr. Dawson Burns, in calling attention to this huge increase, says:—

> How a different expenditure might have blessed and increased the nation must be left for each one to consider. . . . A very large sum must be added as economic loss in the support of drunkards, criminals, and in the maintenance of institutions that would not have been required in a sober country.

In the face of these facts there is only too much room for very vigorous effort in the direction of temperance reform.

Dealing, with the question of legislation for the Sunday closing of public-houses, a weekly contemporary, which claims to represent the views of the socialist and sceptical section of the working classes, says, after urging that the movement is simply a Calvinistic and Puritan one of making the first day of the week "unlovable":—

> Sunday will take care of itself. The working man does not get drunk on Sunday. He has no money left to get drunk with.

This only goes to show that earlier closing on Saturdays would certainly lead to a better observance of the Sabbath, and consequently to the greater welfare, spiritual and temporal, of the working-classes.

Mr. John Hilton is our authority for saying that there are 420 men—out of 670—in Parliament whose names are in the almanacks of the brewers as pledged to support the trade. Both parties are implicated, and one can no more be depended upon than the other to effect a temperance reform. The trade will make reprisals, as far as it can, for any action that seeks to limit its scope of operations. Of course the electors have the power, if they only had the will, to defy the trade and to shield any man who might work and vote for the nation's emancipation. The Press could do much to teach, guide, and strengthen the nation in the path of temperance if only it would rise to the occasion.

Our Queen knows well how to enhance any gift she bestows by the graciousness with which she confers it. Lately she sent the Victoria Cross which was awarded to Lord Roberts' son (who died after the gallant deed which had secured his recommendation for it) to the young soldier's bereaved mother. She mentioned that her own hand had placed the Cross in its case. A slight fact, but one which may teach us the art of gracious giving. Many a kindly-meant deed has been robbed of its charm by a tactless method; many a tiny gift has been rendered invaluable to the recipient by the words with which it was accompanied. Our Queen is truly "Her Gracious Majesty." The same kindly spirit is evidenced in the substitution of a visit to London, for her intended stay at Bordighiera at this time of the nation's anxiety.

As a proof of how far some critics go in assailing the Scriptures, we may quote these astonishing sentences from an article by a well-known American preacher:

> The Bible is the literature of a movement. The movement produced the literature, and not conversely. The movement is superior to the literature, and controls it. The literature gains its peculiar character from the unique quality of the movement. The movement is the master and the Book is the servant.
> Within a certain very circumscribed area inside the Church, and within about three centuries of time, the servant has been unwisely elevated into a position to which it never claimed title. This action has been confined solely to a portion of Protestantism within Great Britain and the United States.
> The task now is to remove the Bible from the unwarranted place assigned to it, and to do this in such manner that it will not suffer diminution of the honour which belongs to it of right and in its own place. But the task must be done.

What is "the unwarranted place" assigned to the Bible? We should say it was time rather to give the Bible its rightful position as master of the world's conscience. It is strange that clerical critics do not see that every step they take in belittling the authority of Scripture is undermining their own authority as preachers.

If the Bible is only literature created by a "movement"—whatever that may mean—then preachers have no warrant for calling men to repentance, or instilling into them the principles of a Divine life. "The Book is the servant." Then how can it claim any authority? Servants do not decide the rule of a household; they are "under authority." Despite all the destructive work of Biblical critics, apparently none of them agree so completely as to venture on publishing an edition of the Scriptures with all the omissions they suggest as unveracious. The critics of one generation answer those of another; and the Bible retains its hold on the world in spite of all the assaults made against it.

Attention is being drawn to Nonconformist disabilities in relation to training colleges. The undenominational colleges freely admit episcopalian candidates who have distinguished themselves in their examinations, but the denominational or Church training colleges will not admit Nonconformists within their borders, though largely maintained by public funds. In this way a double weapon is wielded for the advance of Church influence and control in our school system. The relentless way in which this advantage is being used constitutes a very sore place in our educational system, and helps to exacerbate the relations between Anglicanism and Dissent still more. There is little hope of any interference on the part of the Government just now; but in the meanwhile it is well that the facts should be known.

During the recent P.S.A. Conference at Birmingham, the question of the character of the services was debated. Instances were given of the highest success having been attained by the P.S.A. movement where it was decidedly spiritual in its Sunday meetings. There is need for great care in the direction of such a movement, because many excellent people imagine that all manner of topics—political, social, scientific—will attract and benefit working men on a Sunday afternoon. But there is the clearest evidence that such apparent success is short-lived and useless. Leaders of P.S.A. meetings should aspire to the degree of "O.O." which Mr. Moody used to define as—"Out and out for Christ"—if they desire permanent results to be gained.

The movement towards unity among the Christian churches is taking definite shape across the Atlantic, where a conference has been held, at which it was determined that "the time had come for the institution of a National Conference for federation among churches and Christian workers in the United States." The scheme of operations is to be worked modestly at first, centres being formed here and there where conditions are favourable, and spreading as good results appear. Of course, as in England, the federation is to consist exclusively of Evangelical churches. This uniting of Christian forces, if it is carried through on truly spiritual lines, cannot fail to be fruitful in good results, provided that first things are kept first.

The cancelling (in consequence of a vigorous protest) of the luncheon of the Wesleyan Methodists, at which Mr. Chamberlain was invited to speak, was a wise movement, which will, we hope, help to check the custom of asking prominent politicians to preside or speak at religious gatherings, irrespective of their spiritual qualifications. There is nothing gained and much lost by such a custom; truly it is "more honoured in the breach than in the observance." The basis of all such invitations should be community of conviction on vital religious questions; any other basis is rotten, and unworthy of the Christian Church. Many pleasant things doubtless can be conscientiously said at such gatherings by prominent political leaders, about the good work done by the churches, but there is an air of unreality about the whole thing which cannot but lower the tone of such meetings.

"In what esteem ought an organization to be held which can point to the erection under its auspices, during 1899, of a handsome structure as often as once in ten days?" This question is asked in the Boston Congregationalist. From it we learn that the Y.M.C.A. Associations of North America have really done this, many of the buildings erected costing from £10,000 to £40,000 each. It is not in the mere construction of edifices that we rejoice. But each completed building, occupied by bands of young men "whose hearts the Lord has touched," becomes a centre of religious and moral influences which radiate in every direction. What auxiliaries such organizations are to the spiritual work of the Churches! A nation may well be proud of an association which is doing such honourable service for Christ as the Y.M.C.A. The prospect for another year's work in North America is equally encouraging.

In the will of a wealthy benefactor of the Church, which was proved recently, the stipulation was made that the church which benefited should retain the Protestant character of its services. Such a proviso is perfectly reasonable, in view of the prevalent dallying with the Church of Rome. At the same time, it may not be easy to define exactly what constitutes Protestant services, and the difficulty suggests once again the advisability of people giving in their life-time, when they can personally explain what they want, and "see that they get it." Many cases have occurred wherein large sums have been frittered away by legal disputes owing to the ambiguous conditions stated in a will.

It seems to have been inevitable that current dissensions and controversies in the National Church should have effected unfavourably some departments of her work. Upon the growth of sacerdotalism, and the inexplicable inactivity and optimism of the bishops in relation to the entire situation, a large section of the warmest supporters of the Establishment feel acutely. This has reduced the total incomes of several church organizations that have done splendid service in the cause of Christianity. Foreign Missions as well as Home Missions suffer a decline. A considerable drop is noticeable in the Bishops' Funds. Although there is an increase in receipts for diocesan inspection and training colleges, the annual contributions for day-schools register a falling off from last year's amount of more than £100,000. Church building also shows a decrease; but the income for the endowment of benefices and for other support of the clergy has improved. No comment could be as eloquent as are these facts upon the present crisis.

Converts to Roman Catholicism soon begin to write and discuss their new faith. Mr. Algar Thorold is one of the latest. An essay on Catholic Mysticism is being issued by Mr. Kegan Paul. Mr. Thorold is the son of the late Dr. Thorold, Bishop of Winchester. His essay is understood to voice the new movement, whatever that is, in Roman Catholicism. The writing of Mr. Gibson, son of Lord Ashbourne, and the more recent controversy with Dr. St. George Mivart show very clearly the difference of views nowadays held by Roman Catholic authors. Yet apologists for the Church of Rome are claiming constantly that the unity of thought which prevails in the Church is one of its greatest attractions to a distracted soul. The fact is that Roman Catholic authorities suppress discussion or argument as much as possible, but nevertheless a few outward manifestations prove how disunited the thoughtful writers in that Church really are.

The exciting events that are succeeding each other so rapidly on the fields of battle should not blind us to the fact that "peace hath her victories no less renowned then war." The struggle with social evils at home is far more important than with enemies abroad. Mr. Chaplin's Bill for for the better housing of the poor, inadequate as it is, is an important step towards grappling with the overcrowding problem, which is the worst that now confronts us in this country. If the cheering protest of the Vicar of Lambeth against the tendency to look upon the poorest quarters of London as actually poisoned by crime and shamelessness is true, it is nevertheless unquestionable that the conditions under which at least a million of our fellow citizens live are provocative of the worst forms of vice; and anything that can be done to better these conditions is a greater boon to the Empire than the addition of thousands of square miles to our territory.

The fact that the population of London increases at the rate of about 60,000 per annum adds another important factor to the already pressing question of the insufficient provision for the temporal and spiritual needs of the people. The difficult problem of the housing of the poor becomes week by week less easy of solution in view of the continued and steady exodus from the villages, in many of which the conditions under which the labourers live are little, if any, better than those of the East-end and other overcrowded districts of the metropolis. To a certain extent the state of things in London is a result of the unhappy environments of life in the villages, and the effect would be far-reaching if the Christian philanthropists in more remote places would band themselves together in the resolve to enforce the carrying out of the necessary remedial measures. Where morality and common decency are rendered almost impossible, the path of the Christian teacher is blocked by obstacles which should not be permitted in any civilized community.

Russia must be suffering greatly from the loss of so many of its noblest-minded citizens. Only a year has elapsed since it expelled the ten thousand Quakers, who found a home in Canada; it keeps up a pitiless persecution of the Stundists; and now the Finns are leaving their country to seek a better lot in the United States. Whole communities are said to be going forth. If the strength of a country be its people, then Russia is doing itself a great wrong, and will, sooner or later, proportionately suffer. When the best of its citizens are gone, where will be the salt to purify the community? It is a strange madness to drive away those who are the most peaceable, the most industrious, the most law-abiding, save that they claim to worship God in the way approved by their consciences.

The nature of God will always remain the profoundest mystery of all, just because God is God; nevertheless, we get thoughts concerning Him which are supremely helpful, and are, no doubt, some small portion of the vast realm of truth. Never do we remember to have seen the truth of the Divine immutability, and the Divine sensitiveness to good and evil so forcibly put forward, or placed in such a striking light, as by Professor Godet:—

> Love of good and hatred of evil form the invariable law of his being, and from this it results that each instant infinite changes take place in the mind of God in accordance with the moral condition of his creatures. We must not represent to ourselves the Divine immutability as though it were like that of a stone; it is comparable rather to that of a column of mercury, which, in constant obedience to the same physical law, rises or falls in the tube in perfect accord with each change in the atmosphere. As a friend once said to me, God is, of all beings, the most delicately and infinitely sensitive. From afar He sees and rejoices over the first movement of a heart that turns towards good; and equally does He perceive and is grieved by the faintest drawing of the soul towards evil.

If anything is wanted as a complement to this forthsetting, it is a remembrance of the fact that, through all alternations of feeling and conduct in us, God remains unchangeably the same in his desire that all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth.

Whatever theory of the Atonement thinkers may hold, there seems to be a very general admission that the substitutionary theory is that by which evangelistic work becomes a force and converts to Christ are made. It is the mightiest power for awaking the soul, causing a sense of sin, breaking up hardness and selfishness, and turning sinners into saints. Is not this practical test a better one than that of logic, or the appeal to a sentimental feeling which has not been ploughed and harrowed by the sense of sin and the fear of God? The Holy Spirit would not employ teaching that is fundamentally erroneous as the means of guiding souls into truth. Liberty would not be proclaimed to the captives by a falsehood. And if it be said that our real and final court of appeal must be the Scriptures, then we have men of the highest scholarship and of the ripest religion saying: "The 'for me,' understood as in the sense of 'in my place,' is the centre of the Gospel, as it is the nerve of the Christian life."

In the Hour of Victory.

"WASTED shade is worse than wasted sunshine," as Sir Henry Taylor—a writer unappreciated by the present generation—remarks in one of his most thoughtful poems. The Empire has been in the shadow during the last four months, and we believe the shade has not been "wasted." Now, as the light changes, we are concerned that the sunshine should not be accepted merely as Britain's due, but received with a devout gratitude.

Not long ago in this column we referred to the lessons which the nation had been learning in the school of suffering, anxiety, and disaster. The lessons are not over, though their aspect may have altered. The change of feeling which every victory produces is liable to be tinged with vanity and reliance on the work of men's hands, instead of producing a humble recognition of the Divine Hand which has guided the course of events.

We learn least when we have most. The sun of success dazzles our eyes and keeps them turned toward the earth, rather than lifted to heaven. Few can hold the cup of triumph with a steady hand, and at this time of national satisfaction there is more than ever a tendency to ascribe success only to the valour of troops, and the skill of generals. From the gloom of the last few weeks we have passed into the transitory sunlight, but we must consider our ways with all the deeper desire to do God's will, if the sunshine, as well as the shade, is to be a valuable educator. The removal of the load of anxiety which has been weighing on the Empire ought to have the result of sending our thoughts heavenwards, just as the detachment of a heavy weight releases a balloon and allows it to soar into the sky.

Now that we have entered upon a series of military successes, perchance we have also come to our gravest national dangers. Excitement, a sense of power, pride, and the determination to be paramount in South Africa, may make us careless of those great laws of righteousness which work on with unvarying effect through all the ages and in all lands. When we consider how, for half a generation, the passions of two nations have been centred round the fatal word "Majuba," to utter which was to arouse a storm of unholy feelings on both sides, it was the more remarkable that General Cronje should have been forced to surrender on the anniversary of the British defeat in 1881. Let the one event now neutralise the other, and so help to heal the bitterness of sentiment occasioned by the memories of the past. That would be the beginning of a brighter day for South Africa.

While yet the echoes of "humiliation services" were in the air, there came the loud note of victory; and we must be careful we do not ignore our national sins while rejoicing over our hard-won triumphs. Britons have enjoyed for so long prosperity and extension of empire that the recent defeats in South Africa came with peculiar force upon the nation. We had taken so many gifts from God that at last we regarded them as our rightful heritage. Then, when the moment of awakening came, we were stunned into solemnity. The shade has not been "wasted," if in its darkness many have turned to the Light of the world.

This phase of national experience has its parallel in every individual life. There are the days when all is gloomy and sad, when business is bad, and illness comes. "The clouds are never at an end," says a modern writer, "but each one passes and melts away." And so from the shade we pass into the sunshine. It is then that the crisis of many a life has to be met. Not when all is joyless, and the world's smiling face is turned away from us, is our life in most spiritual danger; but when the clouds have chased one another across the horizon, and the sun is blazing down with all the genial warmth of prosperity.

The day of defeat is less hazardous to many a soul than the hour of victory. Self-satisfaction, independence, self-reliance—these seize the man who imagines that his success has been wrought by his own strength.

So let us not repine when we are sent into the seclusion of the sick room. Just at that time we shall be quite unable to do the will of God anywhere else. Or, if our schemes of work fail, and we are in danger of becoming petulant, let us not forget that afterwards will come the season of clear shining, and we shall not need less but more grace to bear ourselves in the time of triumph.

Some men will never know how much they have gained in their hour of what the world called failure. Let our utmost ambition be that His will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven. Then, whether we succeed or fail in an earthly sense, we shall receive the "Well done, good and faithful servant," and enter into the joy of our Lord.

The Real Presence.

MANY who teach the corporeal presence in the "Sacrament" do so thinking they thus honour the Son of God and strengthen the faith of believers in the actual presence of Christ in his Church. But in some cases may not this have a contrary effect? Some may say, "Christ is actually present in the Holy Communion. He cannot be thus present at other times and places." This may weaken faith in the real presence of Christ at all times. He said, "I am with you alway," and "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." This is "REAL" Presence. The body of Christ is actually in heaven; but the Spirit of Christ is ever in his Church, and in the heart of every disciple. Is not this forgotten by many in the mere outward circumstances of social or private worship? Would not a constant hallowing assurance of the presence of our Lord in every act of worship be more honouring to Him and more profitable to ourselves than the homage paid to his presence exclusively at the Holy Communion? NEWMAN HALL.

House of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, N.W.—At the Pillar Room meeting last Friday afternoon, Rev. A. B. Evans (co-pastor with Rev. F. B. Meyer) gave a suggestive address on "Character." Basing his remarks on Heb. i. 3, he showed by parallel passages in Scripture that the end of redemption is the Christian's likeness to Christ, and that, as He is the image or picture of the Father, so the Christian should be the image or picture of Christ, manifesting forth his character to those around. In the evening Col. Oldham addressed the meeting on the seven "ifs" found in the 1st Epistle of St. John.

The Liberator Fund.—So far, £92,000 have been raised towards the £100,000 for which Rev. Stockwell Watts has appealed to aid the sufferers by the "Liberator" collapse. This amount has brought some surcease from trouble to thousands who had invested the savings of a life-time in the Balfour Companies. Recently a lady having £1,000 to invest, was arrested by the heart-stirring appeal of Mr. Watts for help to complete the sum aimed at. She forthwith sent the whole amount to him, thereby foregoing the investment. We have faith enough to believe that ere long the sum upon which Mr. Watts has set his heart will be raised, notwithstanding the multiplicity of urgent calls upon Christian love and sympathy.

"Diversities of Ministries."

READ 1 COR. xii. 4-11.

NO two leaves of any tree are perfectly similar. No two faces are quite alike. Probably no two persons, from Adam to the last man, have ever been or ever will be, in all respects, the counterparts of each other. Neither are the mental or spiritual qualities and capacities of any two individuals identical. Nor is the life-work of anyone the same as that of any other. All Israel nationally, and every Israelite individually, were God's witnesses. "Ye are my witnesses that I am God." The Church as a body, and every individual member of it, are Christ's witnesses. "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth" (Isa. xliii. 10-12; Acts i. 8).

But no witness is the exact repetition of another. Therefore they who measure themselves by themselves and compare themselves among themselves are not wise. Neither are we permitted to pass judgment upon one another: we are incompetent to do so, being ignorant of the purpose which the Master of assemblies has concerning each. "Judge not that ye be not judged." "Who art thou that judgest the servant of Another? To his own Master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up; for God is able to make him stand" (2 Cor. x. 12; Matt. vii. 1; Rom. xiv. 4).

Every man of God in every age has had his own line of things marked out by the Ruler of all, and the Apostle was taught of God and guided by his Spirit when he determined not to boast in another man's line of things made ready to his hand (2 Cor. x. 16).

These principles are of utmost importance at all times in the Church of God. A number of witnesses are not summoned to a court of justice simply to say ditto to each other. Each has his own peculiar point of view. And so God's witnesses of old had each his own special line of things, which no other could imitate. Seth was not a repetition of Abel, nor Joshua of Moses, nor Elisha of Elijah, nor the Lord Jesus of John the Baptist, nor Peter of John, nor Paul of James.

George Müller and others, his predecessors and contemporaries, were called to be witnesses of God's faithfulness as the Hearer and Answerer of prayer. God laid it upon their hearts to care for orphans, and made them understand that the covenant was between them both; that the servant should only breathe his needs into the ear of the Master, and that the Master would supply all his needs, in all that He required him to undertake, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

But there have been, and are, other of God's servants who seem to have been called to bear witness to the Church and to the world that society is responsible for every helpless child; that the principle, "Ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak," does not apply to one Christian more than to another—nay, does not apply to a Christian more than to any other man: for the two great commandments, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thyself," are not of limited, but of universal obligation, and will form the test of obedience at the great assize.

Therefore they whose witness lies in this direction are called to "Cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." In every appeal—e.g., which philanthropists make—they virtually say to society, "The care of these waifs and strays, these children whose parents were left behind in the race of life, these weak and incapable ones who are pressed to the wall by the capable, the enterprising, the pushful, and the violent, are those of whom the Creator of all men, the Father of believers in Christ Jesus, has said, 'Ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please yourselves.'" The men and women who care for widows and orphans, for hirelings oppressed in their wages, for girls in peril, for "unfortunates weary of breath," for those whose crime is the colour of their skin, for those who suffer from any of the many ills that flesh is heir to, have every right to appeal, and are doing right when they appeal, loudly, importunately, to those whose proxies they are, in fulfilling duties and responsibilities which belong to every one according to his ability.

So also with God's faithful servant, D. L. Moody. Some have thought that, having begun as an evangelist, he ought to have devoted his every energy and talent to that one object, and not to have built schools, nor founded Bible Institutes, nor set an army of colporteurs to work in carrying pure and wholesome books to thousands who never entered a bookseller's shop to buy them, and would not always have found them if they had.

God uses one agent for many purposes. Fire, air, earth, water—how many functions they each subserve! Paul was an evangelist of the highest order, but he was also a pastor and a teacher, a help and a government, and above all other men, a man of letters. We cannot limit the varied ministries for which the Lord the Spirit may qualify a servant who begins his new life with the question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" continues it in the prayer of his Lord, "Father, glorify thy name;" concludes it with "I am ready to be offered," "God is calling me;" and with his last breath whispers the dying testament of his Saviour, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." M.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey.

In a letter to us, Mr. Ira D. Sankey says that on account of the death of Mr Moody he will not be able to visit Great Britain this spring, as he had expected. It has been announced in several papers that he would be present and sing at the World's Christian Endeavour Convention in London in July; but having promised to assist in the Northfield Conventions this summer, he cannot be in this country earlier than September.

It is not Mr. Sankey's intention to engage in evangelistic effort, in the strict sense of the term; but he hopes to visit some of the scenes of his early work, and revive memories of labours in association with his departed colleague. It was the desire of both to cross the Atlantic once more, but in the wisdom of Providence that purpose has been frustrated.

Mr. Sankey will no doubt hold services in the places visited; but the visits will necessarily be of short duration, and the meetings will probably consist chiefly of services of Sacred Song and Story, such as he has lately been holding in many of the large cities in the Eastern States, where the well-known singing evangelist has lately taken part in a number of Moody memorial meetings.

A Promising Organization, with many useful possibilities, is being developed under the supervision of a special committee of the Sunday School Union. Its designation is the "Home Department," and the idea is to enrol in its section those who are unable to attend the regular sessions of the school. Numerous branches have already been established in Great Britain with gratifying results. Full particulars of the movement will be furnished by the Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

A Grateful Gaolbird.

One of the most grim and pathetic scenes of the great panorama of London work-a-day life is the discharge of a batch of prisoners from one of the great gaols. As the prison clock chimes nine the head of the forlorn procession emerges from the little wicket-gate on one of the huge rivet-studded doors.

The released men present, indeed, a piteous spectacle. They have just assumed the garments—generally tattered, but occasionally smart and stylish—which they wore prior to incarceration. As they pass into the roadway, bands of friends come forward and hand them bottles of spirits and clay pipes filled ready for lighting, or escort them into the inviting bar of the NEAREST PUBLIC-HOUSE.

Here, a sobbing woman, pale and thin, clad in rusty black, throws herself on the neck of a shivering wretch, who first affects unconcern; and then, with a gesture, melts into tears. There, a mother is rudely repulsed by her son, a ferocious youth of the costermonger type. Many, however, have no personal friend to greet them, and seem almost as much isolated from their fellows without the prison walls as within. Gazing furtively round, in a sort of agony of loneliness, they gather their garments close and stride rapidly away, or turn again to speak to the eager representatives of the St. Giles' Christian Mission.

The work of the mission in question, dealing as it does with the vast army of discharged prisoners, is necessarily of a difficult and exacting nature. Not readily do hardened criminals turn into the narrow way. For one influence that would guide them aright, there are a score to confirm them in the paths of evil. Yet the encouraging signs are many, and among them it may be profitable to glance for a moment at the case of an old gaolbird, whom we may call George Oldham. His term had been five years' penal servitude for larceny. His papers are before us, the blue "description," with his photograph, the warning to "report yourself to the chief police station in the locality to which you may go within forty-eight hours," and the printed catalogue of terms on which he was reminding him that he, a convict, is liable to a sentence of twelve months' hard labour—

if found in any place, whether public or private, under such circumstances as to satisfy the court before whom he is brought that he was about to commit or aid in the commission of any offence punishable on indictment on summary conviction, or was waiting for an opportunity to commit or aid in the commission of any offence punishable on indictment or summary conviction.

George Oldham was, however, wise in his generation. Spoken to prior to leaving prison, he had accepted the kindly offers of Mr. Wheatley, the prison philanthropist, and his papers are endorsed, "Destination, St. Giles' Christian Mission." In due course, he arrived at the institution in Brooke Street, Holborn, where so many ex-prisoners have found shelter, and was set to work as a kind of odd man to undertake such matters of repair and manufacture as are affairs of daily need in so large an establishment. Then ensued a wonderful change. The ex-convict, influenced by words of spiritual counsel and invitation, became a converted man, and in the most devoted and unostentatious way set himself to do all he could for the Mission. The modest amount of his workman's pay seemed to him quite heavy in comparison with the extreme need for helping friendless discharged prisoners such as he had been, and he earnestly begged Mr. Wheatley to reduce the sum. After some demur this was done; but George Oldham still held to his Good Samaritan purpose, and proceeded to pay every spare copper into the Post Office Savings' Bank, for the benefit of the Mission. Once, at a time of special financial strain, he drew five pounds, which was duly paid but by small contributions he soon made the amount in hand larger than ever. A few weeks since he suddenly became ill, and in a few days passed away. His total savings were willed to the Mission.

A pathetic passage in the life of this grateful ex-convict refers to his children. It would appear that he had lost all trace of them, while it is to be feared that his wife made a separate pathway for herself. Among his few simple belongings were found, after his death, two letters from one of his daughters—the first in large, childish round-hand, and the second somewhat more developed. The latter runs:—

Dear Father,—

I received your kind and loving letter. I will do as you tell me. I am very glad to hear that you will soon be released. George, Ernest, and Rose, and also myself, send our very best love to you. My dear father, . . . I hope mother is quite well for she has not answered my letter. Dear father, I hope you will soon be able to come and see us, for I am longing to see your face once more. Dear father, I will read the Bible as you have told me, and we will all try to be good. I am very glad to think that you are soon coming to see us. . . . Cheer up, father, don't be sad; look to Jesus and be glad. I wish these kisses were on your cheek instead of on the paper. "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."—I remain, your loving daughter, Lydia.

By what means parent and children became permanently parted, it is of course impossible to say. Suffice it, that the St. Giles' Christian Mission workers performed the last sad offices to the mortal frame of George Oldham, and do not despair of being able some day to find and extend a helping hand to his children, should they be in need. But in any case the workers will not readily forget the self-denying toils and timely gifts of the grateful ex-convict.

Habitual Prayer.

At the closing meeting of the recent National P.S.A. Conference at Birmingham, Dr. Alex. Whyte delivered an address on the power and blessing of habitual prayer. He dwelt in particular upon the life and work of William Law. When, as a student, that remarkable man went to Cambridge, he made a resolution, to which he adhered during the whole of a fruitful life, that, over and above his morning and evening devotions, he would go aside for special prayer three times a day, as he went aside for his meals.

William Law used to sleep with his window facing the east, and get up at five o'clock every morning of his long life, singing hymns and repeating psalms to himself as he dressed. And even the most literary and philosophical person might find it an edification and inspiration to cultivate this habit of audible singing and praise to God. He will prove that the very constitution of our minds and bodies is such that we can affect the heart by the voice, just as the feelings of the heart can deepen and enrich the voice.

Moreover, Law made it a habit of his life to pray steadfastly for one object. He used to say that the devil of pride was in his heart, and he would pray every single morning that he might be made of humble mind. This should teach us to concentrate our thoughts on one object in prayers, and to avoid generalities. Then again he prayed at noon that he might learn to love his fellowmen. He found that the surest way to destroy envy and jealousy of another's prosperity was to pray for him. Prayer would make room for love, and under its influence we shall come to rejoice in our neighbour's prosperity and to wish him well. In the afternoon Law prayed for contentment with the Divine will, until he should learn to take everything from God's hand.

Free Dinners for School Children.—The Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund has suffered to a great extent by reason of the enormous demands made upon the public for sufferers in other lands. Many poor children attending the day schools are thus in great distress. The annual report and other information will be forwarded to friends sympathizing with the movement, by Miss Anna Pennington, hon. sec., 16, Crossfield Road, South Hampstead, N.W.

SUNDAY, March 11. Psa. xxvi.

THE psalm begins and ends with protestations of integrity; and the psalmist bares his heart before God, asking to be examined and searched: "Examine me, prove me, try my heart." This is not an attitude of soul which we are wont to imitate for ourselves, or commend in others. We are inclined to associate it with a proud self-assertiveness which is the precursor of a fall. But it differs from this by a whole heaven. It is rather akin with the apostle's avowed rule of exercising himself that he might have a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

Is it not possible for us to take our integrity too much for granted, to suppose that all is right, and in this way to evade, or burke inquiry? The business man who supposes that he is making a profit, but never calls in the auditor, may be surely approaching a sudden and irretrievable failure. It is good to expose oneself to God's searching scrutiny, and after it has been exercised to be conscious that there is, so far as our consciousness goes, no cloud between God and us, no controversy, nothing to call for his rebuke. This, of course, does not mean that we are faultless. We shall never be that, until we are presented before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; but it does mean that we may be blameless up to the measure of our light.

Wash your hands in innocency before you compass God's altar, whether in public or private prayer. The clean heart will be the glad heart, which causes its thanksgivings to be heard; and the loyal one, which loves the place where God's honour dwells. May we wash our hands in innocency! But, best of all, may they be cleansed in the blood of Christ!

Whatever God is to you, there is always something to seek after. If He be light in dark hours, and salvation in dangerous ones; if He be the strength of the life when imperilled by hosts of foes, still there is a boon to be craved and received—the white stone in the heart of the breastplate, which is only given to the pure in heart; and it is the dwelling in the Lord's house, the beholding of the Lord's pleasantness, the inquiring in his Temple. O happy soul to whom that boon is granted! It stands evermore at an altar, presenting sacrifices of joy.

But such exultation leads to supplication; and at the middle of this psalm (7) we hear the voice change its note from singing to entreating and crying. This was in response to God's call to seek his face. How good it would be if we never disappointed God! He comes to us so often saying, "Seek ye my face," and we turn our face away. Oh that we could respond, instantly and always, "Thy face, Lord, will I seek." It would be such a vision of that face as would transform our faces. But too often, when we are sunk in lethargy and absorbed in a thousand trifles, and refuse to seek his face, we come to find, when we need it, that it is hidden—turned away in anger.

But if once God has taken thee into his fellowship, fear not that He will cast thee off. Father and mother may forsake, false witnesses may rise to breathe out cruelty, dark clouds may come up upon the wind; but He will still teach and lead, and thou shalt see his goodness in the land of the living. Oh, wait on the Lord; be strong, and let thine heart take courage! Faint not, believe to see. The hour shall dawn when faith shall be turned to sight.

The silences of God have been the problem of devout hearts in all ages. As in the case of the Syrophenician woman, in spite of all our prayers and tears, it seems so often the case that God answers never a word. But silence is not denial; silence is not disregard; silence is not a sign of lack in love. God waits that He may be gracious. He is silent until the golden moment comes when He can speak with best effect. During the long spell of silence, which appears as though it would never be broken, He pours in his grace and help, that the expectant soul may be able still to endure.

There is another side, however, to God's silence. We remember that Jesus said, "If it were not so, I would have told you." From this we may gather that sometimes God's silence is a tacit consent. When the great deep of the heart is broken up, and the instinctive yearnings of our nature assert themselves, crying for immortality; for the restoration of broken ties the other side of death; for the recognition of loved ones in the world to come; for the adjustment of injustice and misrule in the world—the fact that no answer comes from the infinite and unseen God may indicate that He will not fail to gratify the instincts which He Himself has implanted.

The psalm clears itself. Blessedness already steals into the singers soul. He says softly: I am helped; God hath heard; my heart greatly rejoiceth. How often we have felt this! The answer has tarried, the deliverance has not been wrought, but in the dark we have found God; we know Him as our strength; we hide in Him as our stronghold, and we feel his mighty arms bearing us up.

It is not necessary to explain that the occasion of this psalm was a thunderstorm that rolled up from the Mediterranean. The thunder was reverberating through the heavens, which the psalmist recognised as his Father's voice. With the ecstasy of the poet and believer combined, from some coign of vantage he watched it pass over the land from west to east, until it died away on the table-lands of Kadesh beyond the Jordan.

For us the practical lesson is the contrast between the effect of that voice on the world of nature, and its result in making the priests of the temple—yes, and every whit of the temple—say, Glory. Child of God! Have you learnt this lesson? When the storms of war, and anguish, and soul-travail are abroad, hurtling through the sky, do you know what it is in his temple to meet every intonation with the response, Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost? Let this be the attitude of your nature—to stand and worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, giving to Him glory and strength. There is nothing which becomes a consecrated heart more completely than to cry, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace.

The rush of water reminded the psalmist—as R.V. indicates, v. 10—of the flood. At the flood the Lord sat as King, and on every flood He sitteth as King for ever. Do not be afraid of the flood. The waves broke over Canute's throne, placed by his courtiers within their margin; but no waves shall ever shake the throne of the Eternal God. At the moment when the storm is highest, He will say: Peace, be still. Again the stars will shine, while the raving winds drop into a calm. "The Lord will bless his people with peace."

THURSDAY, March 15. Psa. xxx.

When God has raised you up, raise Him up; when He has wrought a great deliverance, tell Him of it. Love likes to recount the excellencies and kindnesses of the beloved; the troubadour beneath the castle window would sing the praises of the fair and brave. Let us tell the beads of mercy, and find in each the beginning of a new sonnet.

Weeping is for the night—the brief Eastern night—and it only comes into the heart-house to tarry as a guest in an inn. There is a limit to your sorrow; it is a parenthesis in the golden stretches of light. It is as the shadow of the tunnel, cast for a moment on the passing train. Weeping will presently have to call for its account, pay it, and depart. And in her place, as the morning breaks, joy comes for the long summer day. Joy will stay for ever, not because the mountain is firmly rooted in the socket of the earth, but because God makes it to stand strong. There may be momentary hidings of God's face; but the sun will shine again if we confess and put away our sin. Then, He turns to us in mercy.

This psalm was composed as David entered a new home. It is at such a time that we review the past. We remember all the occasions in which mourning has been turned to dancing, as though it were the raw material for joy, as the dark clouds are the elements out of which sunsets are made. How often God has come, and with his gentlest touch has loosed the sackcloth round our loins, and girded us with gladness. O, my soul, the glory of my moral nature, sing praise to Him, and let every new abiding-place become the home of song!

Very sad and lonely was the psalmist at this time. Because of his iniquities his life was spent with sorrow and his years with sighing. Because of the affliction which he was bearing as the result of his misdeeds, his neighbours and friends stood apart, and his enemies took counsel together. But he had the strength of faith which dared to trust God. In spite of his mistake and sin, notwithstanding that to a large extent he deserved all the obloquy and hatred which had befallen him, he turns to God for extrication and deliverance. Still, he dared to trust Him; still, he appealed for Divine leading and guidance; still, he asked that the face he loved so well should shine again upon him; still, he anticipated the time when God will show him his marvellous loving-kindness in a strong city.

A profound lesson is here. When we suffer wrongfully we do not hesitate to appeal to God; but when we suffer the results of our faults, whether they be errors of the mind or of action, we are disposed to consider that there is nothing to be done but suffer. It is quite right to suffer patiently; but amid it all let us never flinch from avowing our unfaltering trust that God will step in to help us, that He will bow down his ear, and deliver us.

And according to our faith, it shall be done. His presence shall environ us with its covert: his pavilion shall keep us with its secret place. He will preserve those who dare to trust Him, and repay the proud doer to his face. Hope in God, friend, who hast lost hope in thyself, thy friends, and thy strength. He shall strengthen thee and make thee strong, and put thee back in the old place, with a deeper experience of the abundance of his grace.

David has just been assured of forgiveness. What rapture is this! The elder brother, dwelling always in his Father's home, can form no adequate conception of the ecstasy of the forgiven prodigal. Our soldiers will value home and fatherland with a new devotion because of the hardships of the campaign.

For a whole year the king had kept silence. He had refused to acknowledge his fault. He had been too proud to confess his transgressions. The words of confession suggested from his conscience stood petrified upon his lips. Finally, Nathan's appeal had broken down the barrier. Through the open sluice-gates the torrent of his emotion had poured in tears and cries, and had been immediately met with the assurance of forgiveness. But it was an experience never to be forgotten. That anguish of soul, inducing fever-heat for the body and ague for the bones, came back to memory, and served as the background for the joy which now shed its light upon his heart. He realized not only that his transgression was forgiven, but that his sin was covered; and that word contains the thought of propitiation and atonement, as the mercy-seat covered the law. Let us distinguish between forgiveness and justification. It is much to be forgiven; but it is more to know that our forgiveness is based on justice, and that the claims of a violated law have been met.

Shall God forgive, and can He not deliver? Will He not instruct and teach the obedient soul in the way that it should go? Will He not check us on the brink of the precipice, and direct us on the King's highway of holiness? Only let our regard to Him be as tender as the mouth of a well-trained horse. Then mercy, gladness, joy and shouting shall take the place of penitential tears.

Other Lands.

To Help the Stundists.

IN consequence of the fierce persecutions of the Christians in Russia, it is well known that many whole families have escaped from their own country to others where more toleration and religious liberty are granted. Several Stundist families have fled to Roumania, where, after the persecutions they have endured in Russia, it has been a wonderful rest and comfort to them to be able to breathe freely in a country blessed with entire religious freedom.

Only lately eight of the Stundist brethren have been condemned to banishment to the Transcaucasus. Even should the Stundists in Roumania get permission to return to Russia, they would still not be free; their return would be followed by close surveillance from the police for several years, and free religious development and a quiet peaceful life, such as the Apostle recommends as the object of our prayers, are out of the question.

Because of the prevailing famine in Roumania, a Stundist woman sought leave to go back to Russia with her children, but failed, the authorities explaining the refusal by saying that "the wife of a Stundist would have a bad influence on the Russian population!" From Russia, then, there is evidently no help to be expected for our brethren in Roumania; and yet it does seem to us high time that these poor persecuted ones—on whom their manifold trials and terrible experiences have left marked traces—should have rest at last.

Roumania, like all Balkan States, is a war-like nation, and foreigners only receive the right of citizenship after ten years' residence in the country. During those ten years they have to fulfil all the duties of a citizen. Against the Russians the Roumanians have a special antipathy; and these are the conditions under which our brethren in Roumania live. They cannot expect to feel themselves at home, nor could they wish it, as most of them are convinced that they, as Christians, and their children as well, should avoid the compulsory military service. They are, therefore, now directing their attention to British America, especially Canada, whither—thanks to help from the Friends—7,000 Dukhobortsi from Russia have lately emigrated.

At a council held by the Stundists about three months ago, seven families resolved, God willing, to emigrate to Canada this spring if by that time the necessary means for such an exodus could be obtained. It was further calculated that on arrival each of these seven families would require a sum of at least £40 with which to make a start, in case the British Government should grant them land for a settlement.

These poor Stundists have no resources other than the help of Christian friends. There are many believers in Roumania, especially Germans, who would be deeply thankful if the money for the passage to America only could be given them, as the condition of things in Roumania is getting more and more insufferable. Communications may be addressed to Herrn Patvakan Tarainz, Strada Militara, 30, Constantza, Roumania.

Paris City Mission.—When it is remembered that, out of a population of 3,000,000 in Paris, only 40,000 are Protestants, there will be no explanation required for the steps taken by the Paris City Mission, to increase the number of missionaries. The committee are anxious to aid the McAll Mission by engaging the services of Mons. Bouiteau, an earnest French evangelist. At the forthcoming exhibition twelve missionaries, including a converted Roman Catholic priest, will assist at the daily services to be held in the new Salle Evangélique, to be erected, as well as distributing and selling Bibles, Testaments, tracts, &c. Reports of the Mission and full particulars may be had from Mr. H. E. Weylland, secretary, 14, Nicoll Road. Harlesden, London.

Off to the Philippines.

AN esteemed worker in Spain, Mr. L. B. Armstrong, of San Gerrasio, near Barcelona, writes to us: "The American Baptist Missionary Union has resolved to open a strong mission in the Philippines, under the direction of one who has for many years laboured in Spain—a very capable man. God brought to him a young Philippine, a native of the Visayas, and under his supervision this young man has translated into Visayan the four Gospels, and also some tracts. This young man was converted in Barcelona, and at his own request received believers' baptism.

"Though Spain will, under this arrangement, lose one of her best missionaries and I a dear Christian brother, I cannot but rejoice. For I am sure that God has 'much people' amongst these simple Philippines, who, in spite of three centuries of Spanish and Romish domination (what a duo!), have been preserved by God from being contaminated as Cuba and all South America, where family life is at such a low ebb. In the Philippines, I am told, large families are not uncommon, nor three generations living in the same town or village. Sixty per cent. of the natives, I am informed, know how to read, having been taught by each other, and not by Spaniards.

"There are regular public Gospel meetings in Manila; civil marriage is in force, and the Philippines make use of it, afterwards going to the Protestant chapel for the religious rite. What a change! It is said that the Tagalo Roman Catholics elected as their bishop, without any reference to Rome, a Tagalo priest. Thereupon the Archbishop of Manila excommunicated the priests—this being all he can do now under American law. There are many American and English families in the islands."

"Blood-Stained Rubber."

HAVING regard to a remark attributed to him in the report of the recent Missionary Conference at Sunderland, Mr. P. Whytock is anxious to prevent misconception on the part of African traders. He writes:

"It would be most unjust to charge all with cruelty to the natives. It is true unscrupulous men amongst the white traders have been tempted by greed for gain to adopt cruel and illegal practices in forcing the people to gather rubber, for which some have been punished by the Congo State authorities. His Majesty King Leopold of Belgium, we rejoice to know, has issued humanitarian orders through his agents on the Congo, and the directors of the rubber companies make it known that instead of countenancing inhumanity to the natives, any case of alleged misconduct on the part of any of their agents will be inquired into, and if proved, duly punished. This they have done on more than one occasion, so that things have greatly improved on the Upper Congo.

"Not a few of the rubber agents encourage the missionaries to preach to the men who bring the rubber to their stations, giving unique opportunities of evangelizing representatives of remote towns and districts otherwise difficult to reach. It would be a pity if the impression got abroad that the missions were antagonistic to the traders, for this is not the case. In our Congo Balolo Mission, our workers are particularly directed not to interfere between the people and the State and the traders, but, as far as they are able, to encourage them to submit to authority and to habits of industry."

Portugal and the Gospel.—Cheering news is to hand of the progress of Protestantism in Portugal. Those who belong to the Reformed Churches in that country are but a feeble folk, their numbers being only 15,000 in all, with but 2,000 or 3,000 communicants. There are four Protestant Churches in Lisbon, two being Anglican, one Presbyterian, and one Baptist. These are united by the closest fraternal bonds, and work well together, and the number of converts is constantly increasing.

British Soldiers in India.

INDIA is not the most favourable location for British troops, as the climate is hot and uncongenial for the greater part of the year. It is not, perhaps, generally known that English soldiers enjoy the benefit of summer sanatoriums, which are provided in the hills of the north-west country by the Government. To these pleasant resorts several thousands of the British soldiers are marched up every year in the month of April, and are allowed to remain there until October. Each of the thirteen sanatoriums has a commodious hospital for invalids, as well as barracks for the accommodation of those sent up simply to avoid the summer heat of the plains.

Writing from Chakrata, Mr. Thomas Evans says: "This is one of the finest hill stations in the country, and has barrack-room for 2,000. The spiritual welfare of the soldiers is not overlooked. There are ministers for the various denominations, prayer, reading, and temperance rooms." In one of the Welsh regiments, there are over 400 total abstainers. The Gospel is preached in Welsh, and the majestic Himalayas resound with the praises of God in the sonorous and powerful language of that Principality. Mr. Evans adds that, in spite of over 23,000 abstainers in the ranks, the consumption of beer is prodigious and emphasizes the necessity of recruits being urged to take the pledge before leaving England. Drunkenness, he suggests, should be visited with far heavier penalty than at present, while total abstainers should be rewarded with badges of honour. Such a rule, thinks Mr. Evans, would tend to diminish the evil habits of drink and debauchery in the Army.

Notes from New York.

THE Salvation Army annual meeting at the Carnegie Music Hall, took place Tuesday, February 13. There was a large audience consisting chiefly of officers, soldiers, and attendants of the Army meetings in this and neighbouring cities, although a number of wealthier persons occupied most of the boxes. The greater part of the stage-platform was occupied by a number of children in coloured caps and blouses, the company being so arranged as to afford a fairly correct representation of an Army flag.

Commander Booth-Tucker, in his address, confined his figures reporting progress chiefly to the period of the last four years as a whole, and these mostly dealt with the social side of things—lodging-houses, farm colonies, &c. But he promised that during the next twenty years (it being just twenty years since the Army first entered the United States), the Army would have 1,000,000 people at its penitent-forms, provide 26,000,000 meals, and 6,000,000 Christmas dinners, and find work for 1,000,000 persons.

The infant son of Commander and Mrs. Booth-Tucker was dedicated to God and the Army, Colonel Higgins receiving him on behalf of the organization. Mrs. Booth-Tucker gave a lengthy address of the conventional Salvation Army type, upon the enthusiasm and hard work of the Army, and Commissioner Howard, of London, spoke more briefly, and made a very favourable impression.

English Services in Paris.—Mr. George Whelpton, of the Evangelistic Methodist Church of France, writes expressing the need for a voluntary worker to take charge for some weeks of an English service each Sunday at St. Servan, St. Malo. The congregation is one of residents and sailors, and meets in the French Chapel. Mr. Whelpton may be addressed: 4, Rue Roquépine, Paris.

English Girls in Paris.—The secretary of the British and American Mission Homes in Paris, Mrs. A. Brewer, calls attention to the necessity of ladies volunteering as secretaries in the homes, or for the Exhibition work. Each lady pays for her board in the home, and gives her assistance free. Copies of "Guidance for Lady Workers," and other information may be obtained from Mrs. Brewer, 21, Westwick Gardens, Kensington, W.

Soldiers in South Africa.

IT is not generally known that soldiers are not supplied with underclothing, beyond the small outfit they receive on enlistment, so that some gifts of this kind which we were enabled to send to the field hospital, were greatly appreciated; as also were some carpet slippers which are now worn by the orderlies, as the sound of their heavy boots on the boarded floors was not conducive to the patients' recovery.

We have also been enabled, by Colonial friends, to send a yard of mosquito net for each patient—the flies being such a plague, and preventing sleep.

In addition to our daily Gospel meetings, we have started a daily Bible reading at 2 p.m., a time which allows of the attendance of Christian soldiers. Every Sunday afternoon all are invited after the meeting to take tea in the Soldiers' Home marquee, and in addition to soldiers and workers a number of chaplains and evangelists join us.

A word as to the workers connected with the Camp Homes. Most are men who have been thrown out of employment on account of the war—refugees from Transvaal or other towns, who are living on their small savings. We cannot offer them remuneration, and they seek none, but they are heart and soul with us in the work, witnessing for Christ, and seeking to win souls. (Mrs.) M. S. Osborn Howe.

With the Highland Brigade.

A booklet of much interest—"Scripture Readers with the Highland Brigade"—contains items from the pages of Adam Tervit's diary, relating many striking instances of the wonderful working of the Spirit in the hearts of the soldiers, both during the voyage and the march to the front. The proceeds of the sale of the publication are to be added to the emergency fund for providing additional Scripture Readers for the troops.

The Livingstonia Mission.

THE February number of Chambers' Journal contains a strong testimony to the power of the Gospel in the salvation of the heathen races. Dr. George Smith, C.I.E., after dealing with the historical, commercial, and imperial aspects of the subject, says:

"As a mission to the dark races, that which so worthily bears Livingstone's name may claim, in this the twenty-fifth year of its operations, to be the most thorough and complete in its methods, and the most rapidly and permanently successful, in both its direct and its secondary results, of all Christian missions, ancient and modern. Preaching has the direct and immediate aim of conversions, resulting in a self-governing, a self-supporting, and a self-extending native Church. Here, before the eyes of this generation, the process has been evident and rapid, in a way rarely seen elsewhere. How soon may a new mission be expected to see true and working converts?

"The question shuts out the old system of mass movements such as brought into Christendom our fathers, and consolidated the great Russian Church. On the individualistic system of at least Scotch missions, the early result must be slow, but all the more thorough and certain in the future. In British Central Africa the first Chinyanja convert dates from 1881, six years after Laws began his Bible translation; in 1883 there were nine, of whom two were women; in 1889, forty-eight; in 1894, 277; in 1899, about 1,300. Among the lately bloodthirsty Ngoni around Ekwendeni, as among the once enslaved Atonga around Bandawé, there have of late been scenes of almost national covenant-making and personal consecration such as have not been surpassed in the revival and hillside sacramental seasons of Scotland, but free from all excess and physical manifestations"

A Bright Spot in Natal.

THE mission which has been carried on in Ikwezi Lamaci by Mr. and Mrs. Aitchison since 1877 is undenominational and independent of any society. Its progress has been watched with eager interest, and its reports have been a source of pleasure and inspiration to those who have assisted in its development.

A valuable addition to the mission property is the Girls' Home. The cost of the building has been almost defrayed by one donation. For a good many years it has been Mr. and Mrs. Aitchison's earnest desire to have a large number of girls under training at Ikwezi, for the conversion of the natives of the future to Christianity must, to a certain extent, be accomplished by influencing the children before they come under the bondage of the heathen superstitions and customs. The home is worked in conjunction with the mission. The plans adopted for the education of the children have proved successful. Except so far as Mrs. Aitchison has been able to train a few girls in domestic work in the Mission House, and to bring them under personal influence, it has not hiterto been practicable to do much for the girls, although many have passed through her hands with encouraging results. The parents are not willing to allow their daughters to be taught to give up the customs of the heathen. They do not mind so much about the boys; but they expect that, when the girls are married, to receive payment in oxen for letting them leave their homes. Mrs. Aitchison's experience, however, proves that she can induce the parents to let her have their girls, provided she can keep them as in a boarding school. The Kaffir boys go away to other places for work, on railways, docks, in gold mines, &c., become accustomed to European clothes and food; and when they return with their savings and prepared to marry, there are but few girls who have had any training or education. Trained Christian girls are wanted, and then it follows that, with more Christian mothers, the practice of sending children to school will in time become general, and the future success of the Mission will be assured.

In a recent communication Mrs. Aitchison wrote: "We are encouraged and sustained, as from time to time some one or other emerges from heathen darkness to rejoice in the light of the Gospel. From this centre the seed is constantly and faithfully sown over a wide area—it may be in weakness; but the power of God is manifested, and He can bless the instruments in his hands."

Much anxiety has very naturally been felt for the safety of the mission workers, owing to the restlessness of the natives on account of the war. "There is not a white family in this district," says Mrs. Aitchison, "who has not either husband, sons, or relatives as volunteers, which of course has brought trial and suspense to numberless hearts and homes. The ruin throughout the colony is already appalling, and the homes can never be as they were before."

Notwithstanding the numerous difficulties which have been encountered, it is gratifying to learn that the influence and utility of the mission are extending. One of the evidences of this is the large increase in the number of children attending school. There are now over 260, and there are many places where the people are crying out for schools. First and foremost the Gospel message is proclaimed, and is being received with increasing appreciation, with the result that the natives are being brought under the influence of the only religion which can overcome their heathenism and break the bonds of superstition. By means of education they are brought into touch with the great world which lies beyond the undulating grass-lands which surround their homes, extending for miles in every direction.

Much has been written about the superstitions and customs of the natives of this part of Africa, and it is a subject which calls for the prayerful and practical sympathy of all who realize that the tidings of God's love to the world is the only potent weapon that can be effectually applied for dispelling the darkness and ignorance of heathenism. Communications respecting the mission should be addressed to Mr. E. A. Page, Y.M.C.A., Needless Alley, Birmingham; or to Mr. G. Gilkes, Lynnside, Kendal.

Starving Armenians.

IN a letter to the secretary of "Friends of Armenia," Dr. Raynolds gives a pitiful description of the present condition of that country. Already deaths from starvation are being reported. Fully three months must elapse before even the poor substitute of roots can be dug up to preserve life. Those who possess fields are selling them to the Koords, or mortgaging the next year's crops, in order to keep themselves alive. In this way the Christian population is being rapidly thinned out—some starving, others managing to secretly flee the country. The Industrial Bureau continues its beneficent work; the average number of women entitling them to obtain cotton for spinning is 1,035, and upwards of 6,000 persons are dependent upon the bureau. The applicants for aid are becoming more numerous and importunate, and the clamorous demands of the starving more oppressing. Communications for "Friends of Armenia" Society may be addressed to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Hector Munro Ferguson, 47, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

THE VAN ORPHANAGE.

The past year's history of this Orphanage, which is associated with the Women's Armenian Relief Fund, gives cause for much praise and thanksgiving. Nearly all the 100 children recently received through the offices of Pastor Lohmann, of Germany, are small—ten years being the average age. So great was the crowd of destitute applicants who besieged the doors of the orphanage when it became known that some admissions were to be made, it was heart-rending to make a selection, and turn back the poor little ones, not only to poverty, but to ignorance and hopelessness of finding a Saviour.

The condition of the orphans is most satisfactory, and from the youngest to the oldest show themselves amenable to the influence of love and kindly reasoning. The Orphanage has eleven boys and one girl engaged in teaching village schools, and there are more than a hundred different villages represented among the inmates. The experience of the past strengthens the hope that the future will bring forth blessed results.

Communications respecting the Van Orphanage may be addressed to Mrs. Cole, Danehurst, Putney, S.W.

Cairo Soldiers' Home.

WHEN at Keswick Convention in 1898, I asked four of the Black Watch who were there, to pray with me that the money to purchase the Alhambra, Cairo, to be used as a soldiers' home, might be given me. A lady kindly invited us to her house, where, with a few friends, we waited upon the Lord. I wish it were in my power to convey to the readers of The Christian the pathos of the prayers of those rough Highland soldiers.

"O God," one prayed, "only You know what it is for a poor lad to leave his barracks for the first time with his uniform on, and go out into a strange town where he has no friend and no home, and nobody to care for him. O God, give our sister the £3,000 to buy a house for us poor soldiers; give it to her, Lord; give it to her." He wept, and I think we all wept. It was in broad, Scotch, and the wail "Na frien'," "na hame," "na body ta care fur him," was unspeakably touching.

On the Monday following, it was my privilege to plead for the soldiers, and when the meeting was over, one of the Lord's stewards said the Lord had told her to give me £1,000. Next day another friend had it laid upon her to give £1,000 (although I did not hear of it for some days after), and within a week another friend sent £1,000 for the purchase of the Alhambra.

At Magersfontein, one of these men who prayed with me was wounded on both sides of his head, and, when found, was quietly singing the praises of Christ. On being offered a drink of water he said: "No, give it to the man next me; I've had a drink of the Water of Life." And so he left the field of battle and death to be with Christ, which is far better.

The Home in Cairo is fast approaching completion, and we hope ere the summer to occupy it. We have paid for it, with legal and other expenses, £3,800 sterling. We have in hand £1,700 towards the £3,552, the estimate for alterations, painting, &c. The property is a valuable one, and will grow more so as the ground in the centre of the city is being rapidly taken up. For furnishing, and to complete the building, £2,000 is still required. I hope to go out at the end of March, and would be so thankful to be able to open our Home free of debt. Perhaps some one would like to help to furnish a room to be used as a prayer room, in memory of Robert Wilson who died at Magersfontein, and through whose prayers, with those of his comrades, we will have a place where many a soldier lad will learn to "drink of the Water of Life."

Serious Outlook in Patagonia.

MR. HUGH DAVIES, the presbyter-in-charge of Llanddewi church, Churbut, in a recent communication describes the conditions of life in that colony as precarious and distressing. The devastation wrought by the terrible floods which followed the heavy rains last July are being attended with disastrous results. Not only were the dwellings of the people demolished, school-houses swept away, and places of worship destroyed, but the crops were ruined by the inundation, and fodder is extremely scarce. "There is no prospect of another harvest for two years at least, as the canals and their adjuncts are partly demolished or rendered useless." Mr. Davies adds that his church and home were miraculously saved from destruction. Mr. Hugh Davies is labouring under the auspices of the South American Missionary Society, and may be addressed: Bryn y Neuadd, Upper Valley, Colonia del Churbut, viâ Buenos Ayres.

The Northfield Home.

IT is a beautiful winter day, the air sharp, the atmosphere clear. After days of abundant rain, the frost set in again the previous night, and transformed the melted snow into une mer de glace. Walking upon the slippery surface seems dangerous. So the rough-shod horse climbs with us to Round Top, and we, the first pilgrims from the other side of the Atlantic, alight at the spot where the earthly remains of the "man of God" are buried.

Evergreen covers the grave, and we notice a beautiful wreath, the love-gift of friends, on his sixty-third birthday, February 5. Beside the head is a pillow of mountain violets and immortelles, bearing the name, "Grandpa." The devotion of a daughter prepared it, and the little hands of a tenderly loved grandchild deposited it there as a birthday memorial.

We learn that a lady kindly offered to erect a monument to his memory, but the family declined, having decided for a simple headstone. "A monument as proposed would suggest death to us," said Mrs. Fitt, "and we love to think of him as a living one." With saddened voice she added: "Nowhere do I feel so far away from father as here. What little comfort there is in the pilgrimage to a grave! I am nearest him when I lift up my heart to Jesus. He is there, and not in the grave.

THE ALHAMBRA SOLDIERS' HOME, CAIRO.

"No, not here," we exclaim with her, remembering how many times his voice rang out the triumphant assurance: "When they tell you some day, D. L. Moody is dead, don't believe it. He will be MORE ALIVE THAN EVER."

As we look around us upon and beyond the school-buildings, we see the distant ranges of the Green Mountains. White fragments of ice appear like water-lilies floating upon the Connecticut river. In the bright sunlight, dale and hill are clearly defined. On Mount Hermon we can discern the tower of the newly-built chapel, the last addition to the living monument which the faithful servant, on entering his well-deserved rest, left behind him. Could there be a more magnificent memorial than the throbbing life in hundreds of souls, as, among other important subjects, they are taught the most vital one—the way to heaven?

America is fragrant with the memory of D. L. Moody. Even papers hostile to Christianity admit his genuineness and sincerity. Also, that he died comparatively a poor man, answers many questions and refutes many a false assertion. His conciliatory spirit won a multitude of friends. To use the expression of a prominent minister—"Many are trying to capture him after death, and proclaim him as their own, who had no spiritual kinship with him during life." As varied and as manifold as his powers were, are now the testimonies to his sterling character. We heard him being compared with the leaders of the past. Lincoln and he are called the

TWO GREAT AMERICANS OF THE CENTURY.

As the statesman's reforming genius upheaved and transformed society, and as his influence is being felt to the present day, so will that of the great evangelist have a lasting future. "He will do more good," said one, "in the coming fifty years, than he has done during his lifetime."

Whatever may be said about the achievements of his public life, the picture cannot be considered life-like without those beautiful little touches of womanly tenderness, thoughtfulness, and devotion in home life, which combine to bring out the perfect loveliness of his character. It has been said that there was something in Mr. Moody that discouraged the expression of love for him.

This is true, yet there was no more loving man on earth than he. While incessantly about the King's business, he found ample time for his sick grandchild. To drive her about, to win a faint smile from her lips, to surround her with loving, motherly care, was as natural to him as addressing thousands, and saving souls. Never did he leave his family without feeling home-sick as soon as he entered the train; yet he never hesitated to follow a call from God, even if thousands of miles afar. "I have always been ambitious," said he to his loved ones a little time before he went, "not for money, but for work." In this respect his bereaved family is of the richest.

It is touching to see how each member strives to walk in his footsteps. "What would father do?" is the question preceding everything that is being done. They are calm and resigned. "For," says Mrs. Moody, "we have no right to call him back. Love rejoiceth, self mourneth." The prattle and laugh of a little girl helps to dispel the gloom. She knows that Grandpa is with Jesus, and that he is playing with Irene and Dwight. His photo is in every room; his spirit seems brooding over the house.

In the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Moody, whose hearts, after the passing of their babyboy, and their four-year-old Irene, moaned "for the touch of a vanished hand, and the sound of a voice that is still," another pretty infant girl looks at the visitor with winning smile.

Mr. Moody was at Kansas City at the time of her coming. When the glad news reached him, he wrote to his daughter something to this effect: "It is like clouds and roses. I fear that this time I will be the cloud." After his return little Mary for once was put into his arms. We had the opportunity of hearing her voice, and hope that, like her mother, she will grow up to be a singer for Jesus.

At Northfield all are active. Mr. Fitt carries on the colportage work, while Mr. Will Moody is absorbed in the preparation of the large biography which promises to be intensely interesting. Miss Varley is also a valued co-worker on "The Record of Christian Work" and "Northfield Echoes." All intimately related with the institution have the assurance that the Lord will not permit the work to fail, but that it will be carried on in the spirit of the founder, by friends wishing to have a share in the great inheritance of opportunity and responsibility.

Mrs. Moody and Mrs. Fitt have mothers' meetings at their home. The latter has also been busily engaged in recruiting attendance for the revival services, held by Dr. Scofield at the Old Veterans' Hall, formerly the church. In spite of distance, rain, snow, cold, and the difficulty of walking upon a sheet of ice, these services were well attended. It was evident that the Spirit of God was moving upon the people at home, and on the assembled audiences. The clear, sound teaching of Dr. Scofield is most helpful.

A Suburban Mission.

WOODFORD, quiet and rural, nestling among the ancient trees of Epping Forest, is still a synonym for restfulness and recreation to the jaded citizen of London Town; but the ever-advancing waves of Metropolitan extension are lapping up to its borders. The enterprising builder has marked Woodford for his own; the greenery of the fair landscape is dotted by Queen Anne villas in terra-cotta, and red rows of spick and span residences proclaim that the old-time forest hamlet must soon be included in great Suburbia. This social condition imparts additional importance to so sound and comprehensive an undertaking as the Grove Road Mission, South Woodford. The in question rejoices in a remarkable record, and promises to become of increasing usefulness in view of the rapid growth in population. The fine buildings in which the work is carried on are the outcome of steady development, under the direction of the esteemed founder and honorary superintendent, Mr. Edward Hobbs.

It is now twenty-two years since, on settling at Woodford, Mr. Hobbs began to seek opportunity for ministering to the spiritual needs of the more neglected sections of the community. At first he commenced to hold gospel meetings in the front room and kitchen of a little cottage. The work prospered, and a removal was made into a humble, but suitable hall, originally designed to be a carpenter's shop. This was adopted to mission purposes. The people crowded to the services, and in the course of time a further extension became necessary.

At this time a plot of ground, conveniently situated, but intended by the owner as a site for a public-house, came into the market, and an estate agent, interested in the welfare of the rising Mission, offered the plot to Mr. Hobbs, undertaking to arrange a free conveyance of the land, and to allow five years in which to raise the purchase-money. Mr. Hobbs felt led to accept the offer, in faith that God's blessing would continue to attend the work. His next step was to issue circulars appealing for the necessary funds. At first, the result seemed discouraging, for only one response, and that a small one, was forthcoming. "Perplexed, yet not unto despair," Mr. Hobbs happened to relate his experience to a friend in the course of a brief conversation in a railway carriage. The talk was providentially overheard by a gentleman who was an entire stranger, but who a few days later sent for Mr. Hobbs in order to say that, in obedience to a leading which he believed to be divinely given, he desired to donate £200 towards the cost of the land. Other incidents of a similar kind encouraged the band of converts and friends who had gathered round, and soon a handsome hall was erected, which from the opening day to the present time has been a centre of evangelistic and pastoral work, conducted on undenominational lines.

At a time when the need for class rooms was keenly felt in connection with Bible study and the Sunday-school, Mr. Hobbs had been studying the and, by adopting the methods of that famous worthy when setting about the erection of a chapel, managed to get the necessary materials and labour given. Further developments were premises for a branch of the Y.W.C.A., a couple of rooms for a children's day nursery, and a handsome and commodious hall for Y.M.C.A. work. The buildings are free from debt, and, though erected at various times as a result of the Mission's gradual expansion, form harmonious and convenient whole, while the many flourishing departments of Christian effort carried on therein testify to the blessing which attends the labours of the enthusiastic workers who have ranged themselves by Mr. Hobbs' side.

One of most useful sections is undoubtedly the crêche, which has proved a great convenience for the poor mothers of the vicinity who have to go out to daily work. It is a model of cleanliness, and, under the care of two devoted sisters, the many little ones have a continual good time in the cosy nursing or play rooms. Certainly the most important branch of what may be termed the social side of the work is found in the Homes for the Aged Christian Poor. Three houses have been secured in close proximity to the Mission. Plainly furnished, but comfortable, quiet and homely, the institutions afford accommodation for eighteen old people, who are enabled to pass the closing days of their life in peaceful retirement, surrounded by

HELPFUL AND ENCOURAGING INFLUENCES.

A spirit of warmth and kindliness pervades these admirable homes. The inmates give the brightest of welcomes to a visitor, and delight to engage in conversation reminiscent of pilgrim experiences. One feeble but cheery old lady points to an intaglio text on the wall tells how the words have comforted her in moments of depression, and goes on to trace with a glad heart how the Spirit's guidance brought her to the Woodford Homes. Another, bent with age, but gives a little homily on the virtue of patience. Each member of the little colony seeks to contribute to the general welfare.

Another thoughtful arrangement for the benefit of the local poor is the setting apart of a room for the use of the relief officer when distributing parish allowances. Formerly a long distance had to be traversed in order to reach the relief centre. Some might regard this as a trifling matter, but at Woodford nothing is too small to consider that tends to help the poor and suffering. It should be added that, with the exception of the caretaker and the crèche nurses, the work is entirely of an honorary character. So, in the course of years, the seedling has become a sturdy tree, the gospel gatherings in cottage and carpenter's shed have developed into an extensive Mission, which, we may hopefully anticipate, will continue to be a fervent evangelistic centre and the spiritual birthplace of many in the days that are to come.

John Newton's Conversion.

Continuing the series of articles on "Notable Conversions," the United Presbyterian Magazine for March contains an interesting account of John Newton, from the pen of Rev. W. H. Macfarlane, Keith.

HAVING rehearsed the familiar story of Newton's early dissipated, wayward life, his experiences in the service of African slave-dealers, and his subsequent return to England, the writer says:—"The darkest hour is before the dawn, and the perils of this voyage, together with a chance reading of Thomas à Kempis started Newton into serious thought. At first, indeed, he affected to make light of the storm which arose shortly after the ship left the Newfoundland coast, saying it might serve as a jest over a glass of wine but when the utmost efforts of himself and others at the pumps seemed unable to keep her afloat, he cried involuntarily: 'If this will not do, the Lord have mercy upon us;' and then, surprised to hear such words from his own lips, he added: 'But what mercy can there be for me?' For long he had ridiculed the Gospel history as an idle tale, and plunged headlong into infidelity and vice; so that now he was without chart or compass—a more helpless wreck than the ship in which he sailed.

"It was on March 21, 1748, that 'the Lord sent from on high and delivered him out of deep waters.' When at last the ship reached the North of Ireland he engaged himself solemnly to God, went twice a day to prayers at Londonderry, and received the sacrament. Shortly after, a friend in Liverpool offered him the command of a ship, but as he had hitherto led such a wild, insubordinate life, he judged it more prudent to go as mate.

"The result, unhappily, justified his caution. The ship had not been long under way when he began to backslide, and when he reached the coast of Guinea he had so forgotten mercies and vows that, 'profaneness excepted, he was almost as bad as before.' A sharp attack of fever again roused him. Believing for a time that the door of hope was quite shut, he rose from his bed, while still weak and somewhat delirious, and, 'creeping to a retired part of the island, he here found a renewed liberty in prayer; but, daring to make no more resolves, he cast himself upon the Lord to do with him as He should please; whereupon the burden was removed from his conscience, and ever after he was delivered from the power and dominion of sin.'

"He had to plod his way through many a bewildering experience and painful conflict to fulness of knowledge and entire simplicity of trust; and when, at length, he was, delivered from all fear of relapsing into former apostasy, and taught to expect preservation, not from his own power and holiness, but from the power and promise of God;' he could truly say with the great apostle, 'The Gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it from man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.'"

Dublin Medical Mission.—Begun in prayer and dependence on the Lord, the Mission has been continued in the same spirit. It has now grown to such an extent that the committee is brought face to face with the necessity for further organization to carry on the work. We propose to do this by opening a branch dispensary in the north-east part of the city, as we have had over 400 patients in the last four months from the east of Sackville Street. We have also found that, unknown to the committee, other workers had been praying for a dispensary to be established in that neighbourhood. The work in Chancery Place has proved to be such a means of blessing, that we believe we ought to establish a similar dispensary within easy reach of others. We think we could accomplish this (for the first year) by an increased income of about £150, and an outlay of about £100 for initial expenses.

Jesus at Matthew's House (Mark ii. 13-22).

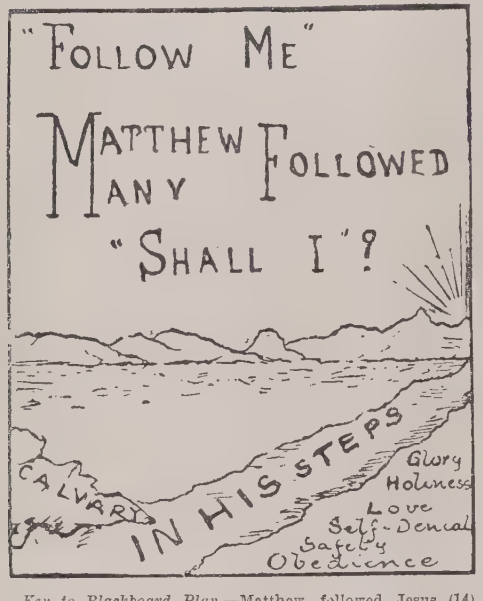
Golden Text—"He said unto him, Follow Me" (Luke v. 27).

Introduction.

FOR the third week we have the words, "He taught them" (13). To-day it is not in a synagogue, but out in the open air by the seaside.

Levi, son of Alphæus (14). His other name was Matthew. He wrote the Gospel of Matthew. He was a collector of taxes or tolls. Zacchæus was another tax-collector (Luke xix. 1-10).

Receipt of Custom—the place where the tolls were paid (Matt. ix. 9).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—Matthew followed Jesus (14). Many followed Jesus (15). Jesus calls to us to do the same. Where shall we follow? The way Matthew followed and thousands since. The way He has been before and left us an example that we should follow "in his steps." The way begins at Calvary. It is a safe way, it claims our obedience and. love and self-denial; it is a way of holiness, it leads to glory Shall we follow?

A Way of Safety.

"Follow Me" (14). It is always safe to follow Jesus; to begin to follow we must live (John iii. 16), and this verse was complete at the Cross of Calvary. Matthew at once rose up and, Luke v. 28 adds, "left all" and followed Jesus. He must have believed in Him to do this. If we are to walk in his footsteps, we too must do the same, and we shall find it is a way of safety that leads to heaven (Heb. vi. 20; John xiv. 6).

A Way of Obedience.

Matthew went at once (14). He did not hesitate; he did not trouble about his earthly gains; he promptly obeyed the Master's command, "Follow Me." Shall we not obey to-day? Not only is the first act "obedience," it will be obedience all along the way. See what Jesus said (John xiv. 15, 21; xv. 10, 14).

A Way of Love.

Matthew wished to show his friends that he not only meant to follow Jesus, but he loved Him (15, 16). So he invited Him to his house (Luke v. 29): "A great feast"—made specially for Jesus—"in his own house." He was not ashamed to own his Lord. Explain how Eastern houses are open to all sorts of people. At a feast it was the custom for many to come besides the invited guests. Among them were publicans, tax-gatherers, and sinners—outcasts (16). This shows us, if we love Christ, we must love all men. Christ did, therefore the way to heaven is a way of love.

A Way of Self-denial.

Matthew "left all" to follow Jesus (Luke v. 28).

"I came," said Jesus (17). Here was the deepest self-denial set by our Saviour in coming down from heaven to live on our earth (Phil. ii. 5-8).

Christ tries to teach the people what self-denial is (21, 22). That is, not patching, not trying to live the new life and the old together; but it must be a complete leaving, giving up, of the old self-life, and a new, clean life begun with the whole heart (Gal. vi. 15; 2 Cor. v. 17).

A Way to Holiness.

Jesus came to call to "repentance" (17), and true repentance is always followed by a life of holiness (Isa. lv. 7.; xxxv. 8).

"The righteous." There are none righteous (Rom. iii. 10), but some in Matthew's house thought they were (Luke xviii. 9). Let us take care lest we think this of ourselves. We cannot walk the way of holiness until we have taken our place first as sinners.

A Way of Glory.

He has gone before (20), but He has left light all along the way. And although He cannot be seen by human eyes, He is Himself the light (John i. 9; viii. 12; Prov. iv. 18)—"shineth more and more" (2 Cor. iii. 18)—from glory to glory.

Lessons to Learn.

The way to heaven is narrow, but there is no way on earth to be compared to it.

Let us do as Matthew did—follow Jesus at all costs—and we shall find the way He leads will land us in the glory-land.

Irish Notes.

THE Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance have issued their annual invitation for the observance of a day of prayer for Ireland. As March 17 falls this year upon Saturday, the Council suggest that the following day be observed, when ministers of all denominations are urged to draw attention to the claims of the people of this country, to the dangers arising from its unhappy divisions from the prevalence of intemperance, Sabbath desecration, and from the political animosities which have so long separated those who should be living in amity and concord, and cordially co-operating for the common good.

The Belfast Prison Gate Mission for men is doing an important work. Last year sixty-two released prisoners were admitted to the Home, while 197 were given a free breakfast on the morning of their realease and kindly spoken to. A Sunday morning Bible class has been regularly held, and the attention and behaviour of the men have been all that could be desired.

Dr. John R. Gillespie, M.A., has been ordained in Sandys Street Presbyterian Church, Newry, as a medical missionary for China, where his eldest brother, Dr. W. H. Gillespie, M.A., has been labouring in a similar capacity for several years.

The Open-Air Mission of Ireland has had a fruitful year. Forty towns were opened for the preaching of the Gospel in the streets, and 3,000 Gospel addresses were delivered, while 200 volunteers assisted, and several thousands of people listened attentively to the discourse delivered. This is a great change for the better as compared with a few years ago, when to preach on the streets in most parts of Ireland was as much as a man's life was worth.

Rev. F. Paton, son of Rev. Dr. Paton, of the New Hebrides Mission, has been addressing large meetings in Dublin, and has been awakening considerable interest in missions by stories of the glorious Gospel triumphs which he has witnessed in the South Sea Islands.

The Beacon-Light Village Missions, in Derbyshire, continue to flourish under the direction of Pastor Richard Howton. The trustees and members of the Mission are exerting themselves to reduce the existing debt on the Glossop Hall. The agencies of the Missions are varied and useful, and are supported by voluntary contributions. Communications may be addressed to the Pastor, Furness Buildings, Glossop, Derbyshire.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 11.

Mark xii. 1-9.

WE will turn from the historical and original meaning of the parable to the personal and practical. The vineyard is your heart and mine, enclosed from the world of men, and intended to bear crops of ripe fruit for God (see also Isa. v. 2). How much God has done for us to make us bear fruit! Is there anything more that He might have done?

The owner went into another country. That may be interpreted to mean that God leaves us to work out the principles of his Holy Gospel. He is absent so far as interference is concerned, though He is always at hand to help, and love, and bless. The faithful husbandman has Him ever near as an abiding Presence, else no fruit would grow; but the sin and misery of the unfaithful are that they think God afar off.

Then at the proper season God seeks for the result of all his care and pains. In the case of the Jews, He sent them the prophets, who met with habitual maltreatment. It is a remarkable fact that the Jews were uniformly hostile to their prophets. They always hated, and very often murdered them. And notice how their ill-treatment grew worse and worse, from less to more; from beating they went to wounding, and thence to killing. So God comes to us for fruit—love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith. But how often He has come to plead in vain! Yes, and in some cases we have not only refused, but have met his claims with contumely and violence. How often backsliders will grow wrathful and violent in their refusal of the message of God's love. The sun hardens clay, the feet of the sower trample the ground he treads on.

See how Jesus describes Himself. He knew that He was God's beloved Son. Had this not been proclaimed over the Jordan waters at his baptism, and did He not know it in his heart? He knew, too, that He was the Heir, to whom all the world of men and the universe had been bequeathed. Had not God said: "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession?" Is it not written, "Whom he made Heir of all things?" Are we not made "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ?" And how well Jesus knew his fate, that so far from being welcomed, He would be rejected; that He was God's last appeal, which would meet with the same answer as all the former ones; that as they had not listened to Moses and the Prophets, so they would not heed Him, though He rose from the dead.

The counterpart of this has been fulfilled in us also. By his Providence and Spirit, Jesus has come to us to plead for fruit unto God. As He came to the fig-tree in the early morning, so He draws near us seeking fruit. He stands outside and knocks. Too often we keep Him there, and drive Him away with contumely. This is what St. Paul calls crucifying the Son of God afresh, putting Him to an open shame, and trampling the blood of the Covenant beneath our feet. To reject Christ thus is to lay up for ourselves wrath against the day of wrath, and the perdition of ungodly man.

Even if a man rejects Christ he does not rid himself of Him. If you will not build on the stone of his foundations, you cannot escape that stone, for it will leap from crag to crag until it crush you. If we will not have Christ, He will pass to those who will. If we reject Christ, we shall be certainly punished by forfeiture of privilege. There is, says the apostle, fiery indignation awaiting for those who do not obey the Gospel. Let us bear fruit unto God, accepting and honouring the Son, that we may be accepted in Him, be built into the living temple, and bear much fruit.

C. E. NOTES.

The Tenth Legion enrolment has this week reached 16,265. This is an enrolment of Christian Endeavourers pledged to give to God at least a tenth of their income. The name was proposed by the New York C.E. Union, in memory of Cæsar's undaunted soldiers, who could always be depended upon when others shrank from the conflict.

Twelve Endeavourers pledged themselves on Dec. 15, to pray daily that at least one hundred souls might be saved during their revival services in January. 108 names were handed in.

Christian Endeavour in South Africa moves on undaunted. The Cape Peninsular Union, at its annual meeting, reported eleven societies on its roll, with an increase of 40 per cent. in membership during the year

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

A SPECIAL EFFORT AMONG THE YOUNG.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AGAIN and again in the course of the Campaign, indications have fallen from the lips of Mr. McNeill and other evangelists of their strong desire that some definite steps should be taken to deal with the sins connected with drinking, as constituting the great barrier to the success of Gospel work among classes and masses alike. This same feeling was in the minds of Mr. Moody and other leaders in 1874, when the Mizpah Band was formed from among 1,000 men rescued out of this particular pit. The band is still with us as a monument of the grace of God, and every succeeding wave of spiritual quickening which has passed over the city has led to additional action along the same lines.

After his Campaign service at Pollokshields last Monday evening, Mr. McNeill went to a temperance meeting which was being held in Free St. Peter's Church, and poured forth in burning words his feelings regarding this matter. He is not hopeless, because once and again in the course of his evangelistic tours he has seen not only the drunkard reclaimed, but the publican closing his shop at once and for ever. He believes firmly that the preaching of the Gospel is the one and only way in which the Church will get at the root of this or any other sin; but it so meets workers at every point that it compels them to pay special heed to it. Calling attention to the manner in which "God has our nation in his grip" at the present time, Mr. McNeill declared that Britain had as an instrument for his work become blunted and hacked on the edge. God's dealing had already been painful, and he was not sure but it might yet be more so; but he was assured that it was all for the purpose of bringing the people back to a state of usefulness. "Good will come out of it, because it is a process of healing and cleansing." He believed also that God had his eye specially on the drink traffic, and was dealing with it.

Another Campaign preacher who also came in to speak was Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie), and among others who took part were Rev. William Ross, Rev. George Gladstone, Rev. D. M. Forrester (all members of the Campaign Committee), and Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte (Edinburgh).

IN THE CENTRAL DISTRICT.

The Tent Hall has been during the last two weeks the centre of a very interesting work among the younger people of the central district. A special effort was made to reach the older lads and girls who attend the free dinner service on Sabbath afternoon, as well as those who, within the last few years, have outgrown it. Cards were sent out to all suitable persons whose names and addresses were obtainable, while the lodging-houses within reasonable distance were specially visited, and the younger residents especially invited. House-to-house visitation was organized, and by a regular patrol of the streets large numbers of young people were asked to come and hear the Gospel. The helpers at the regular open-air services were divided in order that other much-frequented localities might be visited. Above and beyond all, there was much prayer, and God has graciously granted his blessing.

Mr. J. W. Van de Venter addressed the meetings, and towards the close he was able to tell with a grateful heart that every evening there had been wanderers seeking the way of salvation. We have heard the remark made in different localities that the special class aimed at did not seem to be reached in any great degree. It is true that the poorest and outcasts are not seen elsewhere in very great numbers, but in the Tent Hall the waifs and strays are always well represented. Even on Sabbath evening poor, bonnetless women—and that means a great deal in Scotland—come freely, as well as men who are at the lowest ebb.

One lady worker has made a special effort among girls "in their teens," and her efforts have been crowned with success, as many as five on a single evening giving hopeful evidence of the great change. A gentleman who had spoken to a girl one evening received the reply, "No, I do not want Christ." But he persisted, and asked: "Would you like to speak to Miss ——?" "Yes," was the answer, and in a few minutes the girl was among the number of those who had sought and found Him whom before she seemed to despise. Those who had been brought into the light returned with their companions, one very interesting case coming under our own notice. We saw Mrs. Mackeith in earnest talk with a girl, and learned afterwards that though she believed she had been converted two days before, she had come back anxious to make "quite sure of it." Before leaving she seemed indeed to have her desire. Mr. Mackeith, Mr. Steel, Mr. Pratt, and many more, found much to do in dealing with the inquirers. We left Mr. Steel, on our last visit, on his knees alongside a man who had come for a temperance pledge card, that he might lay it on his counter the following day as an answer to any who came tempting him to drink. He got the card, but God had a deeper work to do in his heart, and there is promise of the new life.

Many young people who find their way to the adult free breakfast on Sabbath are at present showing a disposition to speak of spiritual things, and are being helped to make a new start in this life, as well as being pointed to the higher life in Christ.

GOOD WORK AT PARKHEAD.

After an absence, during which he has experienced much blessing in missions in the North of England, Rev. D. M. Cameron has been conducting his sixth mission under the Campaign arrangements in Parkhead Congregational Church (Rev. John Graham), Westmuir Street. The district, which has a large population of working people, is noted as a centre for open-air and other aggressive Christian effort, and the workers from neighbouring churches rallied loyally round the evangelist. On visiting the mission we found the United Presbyterian and Wesleyan Methodist ministers—Rev. William Young and Rev. Mr. Hirst—combining in the leadership of those who were engaged in the quest for souls. The meetings have been moderate in size, but, as Mr. Cameron testifies has been his experience throughout the campaign, there has been continuous blessing. The audiences were well mixed as to sex and age, and the deep hush and intent look on all the faces proved the depth of the interest aroused. In announcing the arrangements, Mr. Graham pleaded for daily prayer on the part of all Christians.

The preaching was direct and thoroughly Scriptural, and, as results proved, appealed very strongly to young people. "Abraham's Sacrifice" (Gen. xxii. 2, 3) we heard treated in a typical and most helpful manner. Two pictures—(1) of God, as represented by Abraham; and (2) of Jesus, by Isaac—led to a clear exposition of the substitutionary work in salvation. As a lad, Mr. Cameron had been in spiritual darkness for a number of weeks when meditation on this subject led him to see light through the cloud; and he related that the very companion who had taken him to evangelistic meetings remained himself under the cloud, until Mr. Cameron took him to an aunt who taught him also the doctrine of Substitution.

At the close of the address the offer made was to show any anxious ones "from the Scriptures" the way of salvation. A room set apart for inquirers was freely used, while workers and friends were enjoying a season of prayer. A number sought intercession on behalf of friends and relatives. After one girl had professed to find the Saviour, Mr. Graham gently invited all present to examine their own hearts with the question why they might not also realize the forgiveness; and at the close we found him in the vestry telling to a group of youthful inquirers the circumstances attending his own conversion at the age of fourteen. Mr. Cameron was specially urgent that workers should show willingness to accompany anxious ones to the inquiry room. His parting words to us were full of gladness: "The Spirit of God is indeed working, and souls are being saved here." God bless the lads and girls; it is among them that the greater part of the ingathering during the entire Campaign has been. God willing, it is Mr. Cameron's purpose to return to the work of the Campaign again before it closes.

A STIFF FIELD.

Mr. Hugh Paton has seen the Campaign work under various aspects. His latest change took him from the midst of a well-ploughed field, where the Good Seed proved its living power in rich measure, to one hard and difficult. The meetings are being held in Barrowfield Parish Church, Queen Mary Street. The workers from Bethany Hall, which is not far distant, have rallied round the evangelist, as they have done at several other Campaign centres, and God has set the seal of his approval on what they are doing. Preliminary prayer meetings could not be arranged, and for the first few evenings, after-meetings were not deemed expedient, but on Wednesday there was evidence of a deepening impression, and it was found that while many of the unsaved left with a vague promise "to see about it," a few remained with God's people to pray and to seek light. The message for the evening had been a very searching one on "Once to die, and after that the judgment." Mr. James Gillespie was rendering much appreciated help through the singing of the Gospel, and the open-air testimony was among the brightest and most attractive we have heard.

A WEST-END MISSION.

During last week Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie) conducted services in Woodlands Church (Rev. David Woodside). The attendances were good from the outset, and the gatherings deeply impressive. Times of refreshing were enjoyed by the workers from the various co-operating congregations at the preliminary prayer meetings and at the brief after-meetings.

On Friday evening the preacher addressed a special gathering of children before the adult service, on "The Deliverance of Peter from Prison," pointing out especially its lessons on the readiness of God to hear and answer prayer. At the close Mr. James Maclay told the story of a similar meeting of young people in connection with a mission fifteen years ago. At the close all who wished to decide for Christ were invited to remain behind for conversation; and, though at first all went out, one after another returned till ten boys and girls were earnestly seeking to know the truth. All the ten made profession of conversion, and are believed to be still maintaining a consistent walk. The old invitation was now repeated, and the workers had the joy of speaking to eight bright boys and girls in whom a deep interest had been aroused.

The addresses during the week gave a systematic presentation of the great facts of sin and salvation. On Friday the teaching was summed up in an address on Hebrews ii. 3, when there were pointed out (1) the necessity of making a choice, (2) that not to choose is to make the saddest choice of all, and (3) that putting off is the easiest method of rejection, and therefore the most dangerous.

Among other missions which have been followed by much blessing have been one for adults in Buchanan Memorial Free Church, conducted by the Brothers Weaver; and one for children in Polmadie by Mr. John Stewart. One of the interesting off-shoots of the Campaign is a mission now in progress, under the charge of Mr. Mackeith, among the inmates of Mr. Quarrier's Orphan Homes at Bridge of Weir.

An Ideal Household.

SUCH is Netley Cottage Convalescent Home, Folkestone, belonging to the London Medical Mission. The doors are open all through an early spring, long summer, and late autumn for the poor and suffering, and in some cases for the lonely. It is to a real home they come, and Miss Brown and her faithful helpers have welcomed many of the same patients for years past. One dear old woman, over eighty years of age, who was called "Grannie" by everyone, had been coming frequently for seventeen years or so. "And a letter, here in my pocket, my dear, to say Dr. Saunders would let me come at a reduced price. I've kept it all these years."

I used often to go in and sit with Grannie. She had known better days, and told me over and over again of the pleasant house she had had long ago, with gas even in the scullery, and now she lives in an apartment, and only a candle! On Sundays she arrayed herself in a very old black satin gown and a lace collar. It was a remnant of those old past days, which had been such happy ones to her. Grannie liked to talk to me about them, and of the sorrows she had then, and had now, and of her special joy in the love of her dear, good son. "Such a good boy he's been to me; and only the other day he sent me such a beautiful piece of cake and in husks. I'd only eaten one before in my life."

"A banana," suggested Miss Brown.

"Ah! is that what they're called? I'll just think of Dr. Barnardo; that'll remind me of the name." And then she went on to tell me of her granddaughter "such a dear girl. She came down here one year with me, and it changed her life completely. It was here she learnt her need of the Saviour, and found Him; and when she came back home with me, she so loved to read her Bible and engage in prayer, and now she's gone away to be with Him for ever."

Another woman who interested us very much was Mrs. M——, the mother of seven children, in very poor and straitened circumstances. It had just been discovered that she had cancer, and she came down to the home for a little bit of cheer. She stayed a fortnight, and then went back to her little family. A friend gave Miss Brown ten shillings to give her just as she was on the eve of returning home, and the following letter was received a few days after:—

Dear Madam,—I have been to the mission some years now, but never saw Dr. Saunders until last week at Folkestone. I have heard a great deal of him, and his kindness to the poor in London. Will you kindly tell Miss S—— that I have learnt my children that little verse she so kindly taught us in the sitting room at Netley Cottage about the clouds.

I am glad to tell you I feel much stronger than I did before my visit to Folkestone. What a blessing to know that we have such a loving Saviour and Friend to take our troubles and joys too. It was so easy to be good at Folkestone, under Miss Brown's teaching. It was so very plain: no one could ever leave Netley Cottage, and say they had not been shown the way of salvation. I am going to see Dr. Soltau on Thursday, God willing, and shall tell him of the present you were so kind as to give me. My children were very pleased when I told them. One of the little ones asked me if it was a bright farthing.

We sent them in a little extra treat, now and again, for their breakfast, of a dish of sausages. The poor things were so pleased, and gave three cheers for my mother and me, and a few mornings later, when my father supplied them with the same dainty dish, one poor lonely woman, who had been brought up a Roman Catholic, suggested, by way of variety, that they should "give a thousand welcomes in Irish to his honour." But I could never quite make out how they did it!

It seemed the happies time of the day when the blinds were drawn down and the lamp brought in, and the Bibles and hymn books were laid out on the table, and these poor suffering ones sang their hymn of praise to the Lord for all his love and care, and listened so earnestly while Miss Brown told them of the Lord Jesus, who came to bear our sins and our sorrows, and many a weary conscience and sad heart have found their rest in Him.

The Wisest.

A saying quaint had Grandma D.,
When boys and girls could not agree—
"The wisest holds his peace."

Each angry word will only make
The quarrel worse; then counsel take—
"The wisest holds his peace."

The wise are wanted everywhere;
True wisdom you and I may share—
"The wisest holds his peace."

To make a quarrel it doth take
Two people; one can always make
The strife to quickly cease.

When next a quarrel has begun,
Remember this, and hold your tongue—
"The wisest holds his peace."

Twenty-first Anniversary of the Scripture Union.

THE anniversary meetings will be held (D.V.) in Exeter Hall, Strand (Large Hall), on Tuesday, April 3, at 3 p.m. and 6.30 p.m. The Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., vicar of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, will preside at the afternoon meeting, and F. F. Besley, Esq., J.P., in the evening. Two conferences of local secretaries and assistant secretaries of the Scripture Union will be held in Exeter Lower Hall, Strand, on Monday, April 2, at 3 p.m. and 6.30 p.m. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes will preside at these conferences.

Homeless by Night.

THE loneliness of a stranger amid the turmoil of the streets of London has a pathos that is accentuated by the bustle of the surrounding throngs. When, however, the stranger is a young girl, absolutely homeless and penniless, the position has an element of danger which calls for practical sympathy.

An admirable institution for the reception of such unhappy wanderers is the "Open-all-night" refuge at King's Cross. Cases of rescue, of a most interesting character, are of frequent occurrence, and the good that is wrought proves, in many instances, to be permanent. For instance, there is the case of E.E.S., a young woman of respectable character, and only needing temporary assistance. This being afforded her, she re-entered service soon afterwards, and thus, at a trifling expense, she was started again in life. The matron of the refuge had a visit from her a few months ago. She is now married, and the object of her call was to report the happy event, as well as to express her thanks for the kindness shown during the brief time she was at the refuge. But for timely aid, who can say that this young person would be happily settled in life?

Another case worthy of note is that of E. A., a respectable young country woman of twenty-four years of age. She had an invalid mother who was largely dependent upon her children for support. The girl had been in service near home, but eventually came to London, engaging herself at a place which she felt it necessary to leave suddenly. It was night when she left, and, not knowing where to go, the poor girl wandered about the streets until 3.30 a.m., when she was directed to the refuge, and was promptly received.

It was soon found that in addition to inexperience, which rendered her sojourn in London very undesirable, her health had been gradually growing poorer since her arrival in the metropolis. Accordingly, her mother was communicated with, and as the girl had clothes, and a good character, and there was every prospect of her finding a situation very quickly, she was sent home. A few days afterwards a letter came to hand announcing her safe arrival, and expressing her gratitude. There is little doubt but that she would have become an easy prey to any designing persons had she fallen into their hands; but through the help afforded she was mercifully saved. The refuge is only one of the many and excellent institutions of the well-known society for the aid of those who are "Friendless and Fallen." The secretary is Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston Road, N.W.

The Primate and Prayer for the Dead.

ARCHBISHOP TEMPLE'S remark, that "prayers for the dead are not forbidden by the Church of England," has rightly called for vigorous criticism. An esteemed correspondent (Sir Charles S. King) calls our attention to the words of the "Homily concerning prayer," to which (v. Article xxxv.) his grace assuredly gave his "assent and consent," as follows:—

"Neither let us dream any more that the souls of the dead are anything at all holpen by our prayers; but, as the Scripture teacheth us, let us think that the soul of man, passing out of the body, goeth straightways either to heaven or else to hell, whereof the one needeth no prayer, the other is without redemption."

Work Among Ballet Girls.—Mr. William Forbes celebrated his twenty-second anniversary of work amongst theatrical employees on Thursday last, at Bloomsbury Chapel. Some 130 were present, including a number of children, and all seemed to thoroughly enjoy themselves. After tea a short service was held, and on leaving each one present received a buttonhole of flowers, sent by the Flower Girls' Mission. These tea meetings and mission services are held throughout the country during the year; the sick are visited, cases of distress are relieved, and many a helping hand has been given in this way to those whose temptations are great. Such work as this deserves hearty support. Communications to Mr. Forbes may be addressed 71, Tollington Road, N.

Cambridge Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Church Missionary Union was addressed last week by Dr. Johnson, Assistant Bishop of Western Equatorial Africa, who spoke mainly of the Yoruba country, in which he has laboured for many years. The native congregations of Lagos, the Bishop said, although numbering only a little over 4,000, raise £3,000 annually to support their pastors, all of whom are natives. Alluding to the drink traffic, he said that the Gospel must go before the drink, unless we would have not only "Dark Africa" to evangelize, but "Drunken Africa."

Last Thursday a meeting was held of the Ely Diocesan Branch of the C.E.T.S., Archdeacon Emery in the chair, when Viscount Peel, who was chairman of the Royal Commission of the Licensing Laws, defended the "Minority Report." This was his first address at a public meeting since the closing of the Royal Commission.

The University pulpit was occupied on February 25 by Canon Body, who preached there a sermon on "The Baptism of Fire." He took as his text Matt. iii. 14—"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."

Last week special meetings were held in Cambridge in connection with the Baptist Twentieth Century Fund, when addresses were given by Rev. Dr. Glover, of Bristol, and Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist Union.

Prophetic Conference at West Norwood.

THE sixth annual conference on the Return of the Lord was held in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, on the first four days of last week. The subject was treated from an intensely practical standpoint by the various speakers, the object being to quicken spiritual life rather than to controvert or discuss disputed points. The speakers included Dr. Robert Anderson, C.B., Revs. E. Brewer, M.A., A. G. Brown, Dr. Barnes, J. Douglas, M.A., W. Fuller Gooch, W. Houghton, M.A., W. Darlow Sargeant, R. Middleton, James Outram, M.A., G. Turner, John Wilkinson, together with General Brownlow, Colonels Roberts, Sladen, and Walkley, Dr. W. G. Kemp, Messrs. W. H. Seagram, C. Inglis, and C. Russell Hurditch.

Special emphasis was laid on the importance at the present time of united testimony on the points of agreement, to the exclusion in public conference of points of divergence, so that attention might be called without distraction to the great facts of the personal and premillennial return of our Lord as manifestly near at hand.

The growing interest in the subject considered was abundantly manifested by the large assemblies which gathered each day, from 700-800 being present each afternoon and considerably more than this each evening. Many testimonies were borne to the presence and power of the spirit of God; much prayer and praise mingling with the word of teaching spoken. A full report of the conference will be on supply at the hall (1s. 2d., post free).

The Y.W.C.A.

A "TEN-DAYS' school" has been arranged at the Y.W.C.A., Finsbury Square, E.C., from March 27 to April 4. The school is open to working members of the Y.W.C.A., and any ladies desiring an insight into work among girls. The list of speakers includes Lady Henry Somerset, Lady Hope, Hon. E. Kinnaird, Revs. F. B. Meyer, and W. H. Griffith Thomas, Professor White and Dr. Schofield. The subjects cover a wide range of topics—Bible study, hygiene, legal training, evangelistic and temperance work are amongst the list of subjects. At the final meeting, which is to be held in Exeter Hall on April 4, at 8 p.m., Professor White is to speak. Fuller particulars may be obtained from Miss Morley at the address given above.

The Y.M.C.A.

AT the annual public meeting of the New Cross and Brockley Y.M.C.A., held on 27th ult., Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, M.A., spoke on "The Foundation of Manhood," observing that character makes the man, and that true character is made by Christ. Mr. W. R. Lane took as his subject "Temptation," dealing with the question from various points of view, and showing that there was a threefold assurance of victory in "an interested God, an interceding Saviour, and an indwelling Holy Spirit." The chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Seagram, who was supported by Revs. E. J. Kennedy, J. Storer Clark, John Lewis, &c.

Kettering Y.M.C.A., sustained by the sympathy and co-operation of all the churches in the town, has held a large mass meeting of men in the Victoria Hall, at which addresses were delivered by Rev. W. Hay Aitken on "Intemperance:" by Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., on "Gambling;" and by Colonel Everitt, on "Impurity."

A return is to hand of Y.M.C.A. work in India. Of 131 Associations now on the list, 101 report an aggregate membership of 5,265; whereas three years ago reports were received from only thirty-one, and only seventy-four had been organized. Ten years ago there were eighteen Associations in India, widely scattered, and most of them not aware that the others were in existence.

Fifty years have passed away since the City of Dublin Young Men's Christian Association first asserted its claim to be recognised as a potent factor for the true development and welfare of young men. The report of work during last year is excellent reading. Many departments of work are maintained, and all are in a healthy condition. The evangelistic services, the various devotional gatherings, show a satisfactory record, while at the open-air services large audiences have assembled, and some remarkable results have come under notice. At the annual meeting, held on Tuesday last, enthusiastic testimonies were given as to the value of the work. One hundred pounds is needed to clear the debt. The secretary is Mr. W. A. Boyd, 43, Upper Sackville Street, Dublin.

Limerick Association celebrated its tenth anniversary meeting on the 1st inst. The chief feature of the occasion was the opening of the new hall, which has a seating capacity for 400, and will prove a convenient centre for evangelistic and missionary gatherings, and Christian work generally. The meeting was a thoroughly representative one, ministers of various denominations being present. Mr. Thomas Grubb, president of the Association, gave a concise history of the Y.M.C.A. work in Limerick, and expressed gratitude to God for its record of blessing. Revs. W. T. Cairns, R. H. Semple, and Mr. Robert M'Cann gave appropriate addresses. On the following day an evangelistic meeting was held, at which Mr. McCann and others spoke. These special gatherings are to be followed up by a fortnight's evangelistic mission.

The Liverpool Diocesan Calendar and Churchman's Year Book contains, as usual, a vast amount of ecclesiastical and educational information—local and general. The resignation of the honoured and venerable Bishop, after sixty years' ministry, calls for a chapter on the Church's Progress in the Diocese during his episcopacy. During this period about 555 of the clergy have been ordained deacons, 541 have been admitted to the order of priesthood, and 133,947 young persons have been admitted to the rite of confirmation. No fewer than forty-four churches have been consecrated, and fifty-one churches or rooms licensed for Divine worship, and the number of parochial clergy has been increased from 275 to 431. Noon Prayer Meeting.—At the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. on Monday last, Mr. Wilké, of the Victoria Homes, gave a pathetic account of the origin of the work in connection with the Emigrants' Home at Blackwall, and recalled many incidents and experiences in connection with Gospel and relief work among various nationalities of emigrants. Mr. Wilké went on to portray the sufferings of homeless men in east London at the present time, and concluded with a fervent appeal for a revival of Christian interest in temperance legislation. Subsequently, Mr. Barry Wake gave some description of a visit on Saturday last to a troopship in the Albert Dock, when a large number of booklets were distributed among the men. Mr. Wake's sound and kindly advice was evidently appreciated and understood, for a number signed the temperance pledge, and some expressed their intention of living a godly life. A happy thought was the provision of some hundreds of postcards printed with a farewell message to friends at home and asking for prayer. Mr. Wake was working in connection with the Open Air Mission.

Rifts in the Cloud.—II.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

The Anchor of Hope.

"Hope thou in God." "We are saved by hope." "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that hope in his mercy." "Experience worketh hope, and hope maketh not ashamed." "Be not moved away from the hope of the Gospel." "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul—both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

THE words of the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews remind us of a well-known simile, "Life is like a ship at sea." It is a journey over an unknown and trackless ocean. There are many perils, and some of them hidden like sunken rocks, shoals, and quicksands. There may be sweet zephyrs and favourable breezes to carry the vessel and her precious cargo to the desired haven. There may also be dangerous storms, or still more dangerous calms. Supplies may be exhausted, the vessel may be strained at every point, and the skill and courage of the captain and sailors severely tested, and the anchor and its anchorage may be the only hope of salvation from shipwreck.

Some of the trials of life are like this, when every element of Christian character may be severely tried. Sun, moon, and stars may be darkened, while the tempest beats. Hope alone may remain, and if all hope that we shall be saved be taken away, our case will be dark and painful indeed.

But it is wonderful in the greatest extremities of life what a vitality there is in hope. There may not be the clear vision which the full assurance of faith gives, but hope keeps the soul steady until the clear shining comes when the storm is over. Experience does not falsify this hope, which springs perennial in the human breast. On the contrary, "experience worketh hope," showing it is not a will-o'-the-wisp to deceive and lead us astray. The great framework of things all around us is not a mockery, a delusion, and a snare to raise hope and then land us on the barren rocks of despair. The hope that God has planted so deeply in the human soul is warranted and confirmed by experience. Especially is this true of a believer in Christ. The hope which his blessed Gospel imparts maketh not ashamed by any painful discovery of delusion.

Child of God, let no trial that may befall you move you away from the precious hope of the Gospel. We are saved by hope. If faith be weak, remember that the Lord taketh pleasure in them that hope in his mercy. The sailor's anchorage may be fatal to his hope, for his anchor is cast downward, and may lay hold of an insecure foundation, and the ship be wrecked after all. But yours is cast upward, and enters into that which is within the veil. It lays hold of the unchangeable Lord, and those things which are unseen and eternal. As our forerunner, He has passed before us to give this solid foundation for our hope, that we may be kept sure and steadfast in every storm that may assail the soul.

Amidst temptations sharp and long,
My soul to this sure refuge flies;
Hope is my anchor firm and strong,
While tempests blow and billows rise.

The Power of Sin.

A CHINAMAN, much addicted to gambling, and earnestly desiring to break himself of the habit, visited the temple of his idol, and, after many prostrations, dashed a bowl to pieces, with the words, "Thus may my life be broken if I ever gamble again."

The fear of breaking his oath kept him for a while; but in course of time he drifted into the habit again. Once more visiting the temple, after similar prostrations, he held up a candle, and, blowing out the flame, exclaimed, "Thus may my life be blown out if I ever gamble again," with the same result as before.

Here is an illustration of the futility of human endeavour to conquer sin in our own strength. This Chinaman, being subsequently converted to God, found that only Christianity can supply the necessary power.

Realities!—I.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

"HAVE you heard that Mr. R—— is dead, sir?" asked the waiter.

"No," I replied; and the news forcibly reminded me of the last two occasions on which I saw the man.

"He was here on Monday and Tuesday, as usual, and on his way to business on Wednesday fell down dead."

The scene was a dining-room in the City, where I frequently attend; and a few weeks ago several gentlemen and myself heard this man make use of a most obscene remark. It was suggested that one of us should publicly rebuke him, but this was not done. The proprietor, however, was told of the matter, and two at least of the diners subsequently abstained from visiting the house.

Still more recently, while sitting within three or four seats from the same person, I was obliged to hear him speaking of some grossly indecent pictures, and promising to send them by post to the man seated next to him. And this was he who was described as "dead."

This week, whilst dining at the same house, the proprietor was present, and I said to him:

"They tell me that they've buried the body of Mr. R——. Where is HE?"

"I beg pardon!"

I repeated the words, and added, "He is not buried; 'tis only his body that's in the ground; I'm wondering where he is!"

"Well, he was 'a bit too thick!'"

"Don't think me 'goody-goody,' but I'd rather have my chance of heaven than his."

"Ah, you're right! its awful!"

And again I thought of the destiny of this soul.

DEATH.

Death is a tremendous reality! Men think that they have souls; the fact is, I am a soul, and have a body. What then is death?

Men by nature are dead spiritually; their bodies die, that is physical death; but there is a psychic, or soul death, and, what is worse, there is a "Depart from Me ye cursed!" This is death indeed!

A death to be feared, will you fear it?

Let the sinner realize what death is, and he will appreciate "the gift of God which is eternal life." Let those of us who are evangelists grasp the reality of death, and we shall aim direct at men's consciences, and, knowing the "terrors of the Lord," cry in all the intensity of our being, and warn them to "flee from the wrath to come."

So live that when thy summons comes to die
You go—not like the quarry-slave, scourged to yon dungeon—
But, sustained and soothed with an unfaltering trust
Approach thy grave, like one wraps the drapery of his couch about him
And lies down to pleasant dreams.

But this is only done by those who can say, "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

SIN.

An awful reality! The sins which dishonour God, the sins which destroy man, are realities indeed; but they are but the outcome of the root, SIN! The pride of intellect that refuses to bow before the "many infallible proofs;" the self-righteousness that declines to submit to "the righteousness of God," the aggrandizement of the creature who dares to ask, "Who is the Almighty that I should serve Him?"—are not these evidences of "the heart of unbelief," the source and root of all sins?

Why are men "condemned already"? Why will those who are not saved be lost for ever? Not because they are sinners, not because they have not kept the Ten Commandments, but "because they have not believed;" in other words, because they will not obey God. "Ye will not come unto Me." "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost." "I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people." Whether against Father, Son, or Holy Ghost—the sin of disobedience is the same.

Disobedience to God is, and ever has been, the damning SIN of man. From Adam to Anti-Christ, from Eden to Armageddon, all adown the ages, God has been calling "Come;" and man has replied "I will not;" and all the centuries along it has ever been, the fist of man in the face of the Almighty; whilst the devil has educated the sinner to say, "I never do anybody any harm," and "I do unto my neighbour as I would have my neighbour do unto me;" whilst "guilty before God" is the position of the children of disobedience. "What saith the Scriptures?"

The Holy Ghost is to convince the world of sin, not sins merely! What sin? The sin of sins; as Jesus puts it: "Of sin because they believe not on Me."

That is, men refuse to obey Christ. The sins against our fellow creatures are sometimes awful in their character:

Man's inhumanity to men
Makes countless thousands mourn.

But the carnal mind is in enmity against GOD, and this is a reality that has to be faced and dealt with. The question is not what I have done against my neighbour, but, Have I obeyed the call and command of God?

"John, I want you to stay in to-night with me."

The son—a wild, reckless profligate, who had broken his mother's heart some months previously—was preparing to leave the room, and he answered:

"Not me; I've promised to meet my friends at nine, and it is nearly that now."

"My boy, do as I bid you; get your mother's Bible down, and let us read and pray together."

"I won't stay to pray nor read; let me get out."

The old man locked the door and said:

"No, you shall not go. I'll make one more effort for your good, and you shall go over my body before you leave this house to-night."

With one effort the son flung the old man down, turned the key, and o'er the body of his old father he went forth, to sin, to ruin, and TO HELL.

So man pushes from his path the Lord Jesus, refusing Him who pleads with him to be saved, and wilfully rushes on to destruction.

And there before us stands the Cross,
Two arms outstretched to save;
Like a watchman set to guard the way,
From that eternal grave.

London Tent Campaign.

MR. T. A. DENNY invited about thirty gentlemen to meet him at Exeter Hall on Tuesday morning last. The discussion of breakfast was a small matter in view of the subject awaiting attention. The esteemed chairman said: "We are met to consider the proposal to erect eleven large canvas tents estimated to hold about 1,800 people. They are to be placed in prominent positions in various parts of London, and made great centres for the people, for the four months of the approaching summer. Enthusiasm of the right kind possessed the entire company.

Mr. LEONARD WEAVER showed that for an expenditure of £3,000 these new and substantial tents can be constructed. This includes seating and expense of erection. The three tents which had been in Clapham and the vicinity last year had proved a remarkable success. This was confirmed by the testimony of several of the evangelists who were present.

Mr. DENNY showed that as there was much indisposition on the part of masses of the people to come into the churches and chapels, we must go out to them and get hold of them by such means as was here suggested. The plan was approved and taken up most heartily. As an illustration of the sympathy existing, and of the determination to carry out with zeal and energy the campaign to meet and get at the spiritual needs of tens of thousands in the great city right away, no less a sum than £1,550 was immediately subscribed.

The work is begun in earnest faith and dependence upon God. Success, we believe, will be given by the great Master of assemblies. The treasurer is Mr. A. Garstin, who may be addressed Y.M.C.A., 185, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

The Scriptures for Jews.

ON more than one occasion you have called attention to the Yiddish version of the Scriptures prepared for uneducated Jews. To the Jew, of course, the Bible means the Old Testament. As issued from the Jewish press, the Hebrew text occupies a comparatively small space; while the commentaries, printed in Rabbinical type below and in the broad margins, look like a huge frame surrounding a small picture. These traditional commentaries, which are based on the Talmud, are held to be as infallible as is the Word of God itself. Such annotated editions of the original Scriptures are only of use to those Jews who know at least so much of Hebrew as to understand the contents of the Law of Moses, and certain small portions of the prophets, with the aid of the commentaries.

Every Jewish child is taught to read Hebrew, but only to utter the sound of the words correctly; the sense and meaning are known only to the learned few. The Jewesses are still more ignorant of the Scriptures. A teacher of the Talmud, to whom a portion of the Yiddish translation had been sent in proof-sheets, writes: "Our wives and daughters know absolutely nothing of the Holy Scriptures, pure and simple, but only with the many perplexing Rabbinical explanations. As you have undertaken of translating the whole of the Old Testament into this language, I am sure you will have the blessing of at least 5,000,000 of our people following you."

Since the return from the Babylonish captivity, the Jews, as a nation, have not had the Scriptures in the language all could understand (Neh. viii. 7, 8). It is, therefore, with heartfelt gratitude to God that we record that 10,000 copies of the complete Old Testament in Yiddish have been printed, and are being circulated in all parts of the world. A pamphlet, entitled "A Yiddish Bible for the Jews," which will be sent free to anyone applying to me for it, gives some account of the present effort to supply the need. Friends have come in to pay printing bills as they became due, and through such liberality the entire work has been paid for, and no debt has been incurred.

Of the New Testament, tens of thousands of separate portions have been printed and circulated in all parts of the world by the various Jewish missionary agencies, chiefly by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. This was done while the translation was in progress.

The whole Book was set up in type by an unconverted Jew; the task has done its own work in the heart and life of that Jew, for his attitude towards Christianity is thoroughly changed. The Book was printed about two months ago, and of the first edition of 3,000 copies the Mildmay Mission have taken 2,500. I am anxious to print a larger edition, and I am looking to the Lord to enable me to do so, through the kindness of his people.

It is no small matter of encouragement and thankfulness that, through the good Hand of the Lord upon me, I have been kept from incurring debt, and have never been compelled to desist for any length of time through lack of funds. It is true, had more money come in, a much larger edition might have been printed. What are 10,000 copies of the Old Testament and 3,000 of the New among six or seven millions of Jews, who, it is computed, are able to understand the book as thus translated? I trust that the Lord's stewards will prayerfully bear in mind the great need there is for a larger supply of the Bread of Life for the many hungry ones in Judah. (Amos viii. 11.)

That hunger is everywhere increasing. This may be judged by the letters which constantly reach me from Jews and missionaries working among them. I am now engaged on a second translation of the Bible in another dialect. I am anxious to put it into the printer's hands as funds come in. With these two dialects we shall be able to reach Yiddish-speaking Jews in all parts of the dispersion.

The Indian Famine.

WITH a view to stimulating a wider and deeper interest in the efforts which are being made to relieve the suffering in connection with the famine in India, two meetings were held on Friday in the Mildmay Conference Hall. In the afternoon Colonel MORTON presided over a numerous attendance. Mr. ROBERT SCOTT briefly reviewed the eight famines which have visited India during the Queen's reign, with their disastrous consequences and appalling sacrifice of life. He referred to the beneficent and effective labours of the late Sir Arthur Cotton, whose scientific skill had been the means of preventing the recurrence of famine in the States where his methods of irrigation and fertilization had been adopted.

Rev. ISAAC F. ROW having spoken a few words, a searching and passionate appeal was made by Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE for sympathy with the millions who are on the brink of starvation. He recalled which he witnessed before leaving for England. Many were moved by the thrilling instances of human suffering, of families deprived of parental care and protection, of fathers and mothers disposing of their children rather than witness the languishing sickness and ultimate starvation. No fewer than 50,000,000 were now affected by the famine—thousands of these living on one meal a day. The sufferings of the poor Christians were alarming. With earnest pleadings Mr. Osborne urged their claims upon Christians at home, beseeching his hearers to exert their influence as much as possible in the interests of India in her hour of need.

Mr. B. BROOMHALL added a few words regarding the value of irrigation; and Mr. T. A. DENNY spoke of the abundance of water in India. It was by bringing the water and land together that famine in the future would be rendered impossible.

At the evening gathering, which was equally marked by deep feeling and sympathetic warmth, introductory words were spoken by several supporters of Mr. Dennis Osborne's present mission to this country. Colonel MORTON (who presided) gave some reminiscences of Christian work in India. Mr. ISAAC ROW recalled some pathetic scenes in Hyderabad during the last famine; and Mr. ROBERT SCOTT again put a strong case in favour of irrigation, pointing out that it was practically in the power of the Government to prevent famine by carrying out works of irrigation, which are the crying need of India.

Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE then gave a characteristic address, dwelling on the terrible sufferings which are being undergone by the people in the vast districts affected. The great famine of 1896-7 was scarcely over when the plague broke out. At that time Mr. Osborne's centre of operations was Poona, where for a time, out of a depleted population of 40,000, no less than 400 deaths were recorded daily. Then came the present fearful famine; and, as Mr. Osborne had been transferred by the authorities of his Church (the American Methodist Episcopal) to the superintendence of a large portion of Western India, he again found himself surrounded by sufferers. By this famine, Mr. Osborne pointed out, 60,000,000 of people are affected, and it must be remembered, in considering this fact, that the normal condition of great numbers of the poorer classes is one of semi-starvation.

After cordially recognising the energy of Lord Curzon and the extent of the Government relief works, Mr. Osborne created a deep impression by observing that, in spite of all, judging by previous experience and viewing the position as a whole, of starvation. Moreover, it might well be estimated that as many people will subsequently die as a result of weakness and disease, even if they survive the actual famine. Mrs. Osborne has travelled throughout the affected districts, and is able to testify that many of the sufferers are whole-hearted followers of Christ. Going on to plead for immediate help in feeding the people, and rescuing the orphan children, who were wandering about the country in search of food, from the hands of wicked men, Mr. Osborne said that the remedial measures he should adopt were: first, to establish relief works in connection with missionary operations, and second, to establish grain shops and distributing centres.

The speaker's description of the sorrows of the children, and of the admirable results which had followed the efforts put forth on their behalf during the last famine, moved the audience to tears. A number of the girls so rescued are now Christian workers. Mr. Osborne concluded his address with a fervent appeal for help; and Col. MORTON, in a closing word, while recognizing the Lord Mayor's fund, pointed out the strong desirability of constituting the missionary workers as almoners of the generous aid which would doubtless be forthcoming from Christian people.

Great Missionary Conference.

AT the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in New York, April 24 to May 1, missionaries and societies of every land will unite with the home church to diffuse better knowledge of mission work and arouse greater interest in it.

The scope of the Conference is indicated by its title. Every country will be represented, either in the person of delegates setting forth its share in the aggressive work, or by those who will indicate the work therein being and to be done.

The general plan is that of the organizations to which it owes its origin. It will review the past, gathering encouragement from the wonderful story of a century of missions. There will be a survey of the present, setting forth the as yet unoccupied fields—very few inaccessible, many only just entered upon. There will be an outlook over the future. What of the century to come? Shall it show an advance greater even than that already attained?

Other problems will come up: the relation of the Christian Church to the non-Christian religions, with their strange mingling of the false and true; the relation to be held to governments, whether of the home lands or of those lands where the work is done; problems of Bible translation and the preparation of a Christian literature; problems of philanthropy, the degree to which the work of the physician may be a free gift, and its relation independent of or subordinate to the evangelistic purpose.—New York Independent.

Prayer and Revival.

I HAVE intimated my fear that it is visionary to expect an unusual success in the human administration of religion unless there were unusual omens. Now an emphatical spirit of prayer would be such an omen; and the individual who should solemnly resolve to make proof of its last possible efficacy might probably find himself becoming a much more prevailing agent of good, in his little sphere. And if the whole, or the greater number, of the disciples of Christianity, were, with an earnest, unfailing resolution of each, to combine that Heaven should not withhold one single influence which the very utmost effort of conspiring and persevering supplication would obtain, it would be the sign of a revolution of the world being at hand. JOHN FOSTER.

Crippled Children Festivities. — It is gratifying to learn that, notwithstanding the severe demands made upon the purse of the public at the close of last year, the friends of the crippled children rallied round Alderman Treloar as usual, and their liberality enabled operations to be considerably extended. In connection with the usual banquet at the Guildhall, some 5,252 hampers (a record number) were distributed. The cost of the hampers was £1,050 8s. 9d., and the banquet £95 10s. A small balance is left in hand as a nucleus of a fund which it is hoped to raise for the same object this year.

*Missions in China.

By Mrs. J. F. BISHOP.

THE growing influence of Christianity cannot be measured either by the numbers of communicants or inquirers. For many years past large numbers of Christian men and women have been scattered through nearly all the provinces of China, making their homes among the Chinese, with the avowed object of promulgating what is known as the "Jesus Religion." Their methods of propagandism — preaching, conversation, schools, dispensaries, hospitals, and the circulation of Christian literature—only differ slightly. Their knowledge of Chinese is necessarily imperfect, and they often make grotesque and even serious blunders. As their methods and mistakes in the language are much alike, so too are their lives. . . .

The direct part of missionary work need scarcely be touched upon. It consists in awakening the conscience to a sense of sin by the preaching of "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." It dwells upon the justice and love of God, on the atonement of Christ, on that Divine Fatherhood before whose infinite compassions there is not a stranger, an alien, a foreigner; on the "one sacrifice for sin once offered;" and teaches that the purpose of the sacrifice, and of law and gospel, is that men may live "soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world" in preparation for a stainless and endless life. It teaches that the morality of the Great Teacher is but a "shadow of good things to come"—of the demanded by the Divine law, and that the power outside ourselves, which "makes for righteousness" and "helps our infirmities," is the power of God; that "God is love," and yearns over his wandering children; that He has "showed man what is good," and that "his only begotten Son," who in some mysterious manner "bore our sins in his own body on the tree," is "He who is alive for evermore," and "ever liveth to make intercession," and that He "hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through his gospel."

This, in brief, is the teaching of all Protestant missionaries in China, to whatever church they belong, and, with one or two exceptions, all regard baptism as an obligatory confession of faith, and as the evidence of a complete break with the beliefs and practices of heathenism.

Under such teaching 80,000 Chinese in 1898 were making a public profession of the Christian faith. Many annually lapse—the greater number owing to family influence, and difficulties in the abandonment of the time and custom-honoured social observances connected with idolatry; some because they find the moral restraints of Christianity too hard for them, and others because they hoped for worldly advantages which they failed to obtain. A large number of professing converts are employed by missionaries as servants, gatekeepers, teachers, printers, translators, and writers, of whose sincerity it may not always be possible to judge, as foreign employment is much coveted.

But after putting these and other dubious converts aside, there remains a large body of native Christians, gathered into societies, which, after long and careful inquiry, I believe to be mark of our churches at home in essential knowledge, and above it in practice, specially in propagandist zeal and liberality—societies of men and women, in which the virtues of purity, honesty, self-denial, and charity are apparent. These converts contribute liberally out of their poverty to Christian objects, specially for the advancement of Christianity in their own country, in some regions contributing 6s. per head per annum. These Christian societies are constantly showing an increasing disposition to help themselves by the building of church edifices, as at Paoning Fu and elsewhere, and by contributing the entire support of not a few of their own pastors.

A large number of these converts are earnest and successful propagandists, and the very large increase in the number of Christians during the last five years is mainly owing to the zeal, earnestness, and devotion of Chinese converts, both men and women, who owe their conversion and instruction, as well as guidance and inspiration, to the foreign teachers. In Manchuria a few years ago the senior missionary told me that out of between 3,000 and 4,000 converts, he estimated that not more than twenty had received Christianity directly from the European missionaries, and the same proportion holds good with regard to the 6,000 inquirers at the present date. In Che-kiang the present Bishop of Victoria estimated the number of converts through the work of Chinese as 80 per cent. of the whole.

These societies, in the beginning very small, and numbering from ten up to 400 members, are gradually with a very strong bond of union and definite aims of their own. They show in a marked degree the strong Chinese tendency to combination and association, and may be regarded as guilds. At present among the communicants there is a strong desire to conserve the purity of the churches by a careful exercise of discipline. Members who fall back into evil ways, as many do, are "suspended," and if incorrigible are sloughed off, and it certainly would not be possible for such abuses as disgraced the Church of Corinth to exist in the infant churches of China.

In brief these Christian societies are earnest in propagandism, zealous for purity and discipline, liberal in their contributions, desirous for instruction, docile and teachable, and apparently increasingly anxious to translate Christian doctrine into righteous living. These bodies in very many places are slowly exercising an influence in favour of righteousness, and are thus among the many influences which are tending to undermine the old superstitions.

If China is to be Christianized, or even largely leavened by Christianity, it must inevitably be by native agency under foreign instruction and guidance. The foreigner remains a foreigner in his imperfect and often grotesque use of the language, in his inability to comprehend Chinese modes of thinking and acting, and in a hundred other ways; while a well-instructed Chinese teacher knows his countrymen and what will appeal to them, how to make "points," and how to clinch an argument by a popular quotation from their own classics. He knows their weakness and strength, their devious ways and crooked motives, and their unspeakable darkness and superstition, and is not likely to be either too suspicious or too confiding. He presents Christianity without the Western flavour. It is in the earnest enthusiasm of the Chinese converts for the propagation of the faith that the great hope of China lies.

About Books.

DR. ANDERSON'S LATEST BOOK.

A RIDDLE lies in the title of Dr. Robert Anderson's latest work, The Buddha of Christendom (5s. Hodder & Stoughton). A definite impression is, however, gathered from the title-page, which describes the book as "For the Present Crisis," and the preface makes the object perfectly clear—to set forth Christianity as distinguished from the religion of Christendom, to show the relation of Ritualism and Romanism to Evangelical truth and Protestant principles. Like the author's other works, this is characterized by wide knowledge and keen reasoning; the writer states a strong case in a forcible manner, and it will not be his fault if the reader does not, in the end, declare for his views on the various questions discussed.

Dr. Anderson finds in Buddhism a counterpart of Christian apostasy and declension. "Just as the principles and practices of Buddhism are marked by the most flagrant opposition to the teaching of Gautama, so also the religion of Christendom stands out in open contrast with the teaching of Christ. I would not be understood as bracketing Gautama with the Lord Jesus Christ. I deplore such profanity. But I appeal to the history of Buddhism as a striking instance of the working of that same law of spiritual gravitation which has been so apparent and so disastrous in the history of what—if it be lawful to coin a much-needed word—might be described as Christianism."

In these pages we have not a superficial statement of erroneous teachings, but rather a searching investigation, tracing the things that are seen to motives deep-seated in the human heart, and to their origination in the history of mankind. Romanism and Ritualism are not mere perversions of the Gospel, but adaptations, more or less developed, of Pagan doctrines and practices. To show this Dr. Anderson quotes from ecclesiastical historians and others, and sets in a light which will assuredly astound many a sincere and God-fearing soul, the teaching of Papists and High Anglicans regarding Baptism and the Lord's Supper. In the course of the centuries, it is conclusively shown, the simple ordinances of the Gospel have been completely supplanted by mysterious rites performed by a wonder-working hierarchy.

Whether as a historical study or as a theological criticism, this is a work of great interest and importance. It puts the Sacred Scriptures in the right place; on the one hand, it exposes the folly of intellectual pride, and on the other it shows the corrupt origin of much that passes as respectable in religion. Not all the positions defended are of equal strength or value; but, in general, Dr. Anderson occupies ground that is absolutely safe from assault. Several points are developed in detail in copious appendices, and the work is calculated to open the eyes and stir the hearts of thoughtful readers. It will help the Protestant cause; beyond that, it will stimulate to increased loyalty to Scripture teaching. It is appalling to think of the extent to which Evangelical truth has been leavened with Roman corruption. "How few," says Dr. Anderson, "there are to whom the Lord Jesus Christ is a living and ever-present Divine Person! How entirely the dead Buddha, the historic Jesus of the Rationalist, or the traditional Jesus of the Romanist, has supplanted Him!"

"Accomplished at Jerusalem" is a brief memoir of Rev. Sydney Gibbon, late missionary of the Church Missionary Society in Jerusalem. It has been written by Rev. W. J. L. Sheppard, M.A., assistant secretary C.M.S. There is a portrait, also other illustrations. Though slight, the memoir is touching and stimulating. (1s. C. J. Thynne.)

Three new serials, at 1½d. each part, are:—Business Terms and Phrases (ten parts); Advanced Book-Keeping (twelve parts); and Manual of Business Training (fifteen parts).

Evangelistic.

Mr. C. Inglis at Forest Hill.

MR. CHARLES INGLIS has just concluded a ten-days' mission at Sydenham Chapel, Forest Hill. A special feature in the mission was the afternoon Bible readings, which were well attended and much appreciated. The services for young people were most impressive, and as a result many of the senior scholars in the Sunday school stood up, as expressive of their desire to be Christians. The last Sunday of the mission was a memorable day. Many were broken down, and a large number sought the Saviour. There was a crowded attendance at the concluding lecture. The mission has been of a robust, healthy character throughout, and the breezy utterances of the missioner have been most invigorating. J. C. F.

Mr. Leonard Weaver at Willesden.

Blessing has resulted from a week's mission, conducted by Mr. LEONARD WEAVER, at Willesden Green Baptist Church, N.W. Large congregations were present at all the services, and a wave of revival has passed over the whole church. Special services for children and Bible readings were conducted by Mr. ARTHUR W. PAYNE. The names of upwards of 100 persons have been received as seeking the Saviour during the mission. Several well-known workers assisted in the services, amongst whom may be mentioned Mr. Chas. Cook, Mr. James Gracie, and Mrs. Alexander. The hearts of all the workers are full of praise at the gracious influence of the meetings and the large ingathering of souls.

WILLIAM J. SEARS, Pastor.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Kendal.

A fruitful mission has just been concluded in the above town by this well-known Jewish evangelist.

The mission was held under the auspices of the Free Church Council of Kendal and district. The week before Mrs. Baeyertz arrived was spent in united prayer, the meetings being held each evening in the different Free Churches of the town. These preliminary meetings were made a great blessing in drawing together the members and workers from the various churches.

Mrs. Baeyertz began her mission on Sunday, February 11, with a Bible reading in the Y.M.C.A., and an evangelistic service in the evening in the Friends' Meeting House, which is one of the largest buildings in Kendal.

During the first week the attendance was somewhat interfered with by the very severe winter weather, but we had good companies notwithstanding.

The Bible Readings were a marked feature of the mission, and the attendance at these in the second week was so great that they were transferred from the Y.M.C.A. rooms to the meeting-house itself.

These afternoon meetings were most helpful to the members of the churches, and cannot but have lasting effects on all who were privileged to be present.

Mrs. Baeyertz has a wonderfully living knowledge of God's Word, and she explains its teaching on the many phases of the Christian life with clearness and power, and the influence of these gatherings will abide for many days.

The evening meetings were blessed to the conversion of many—a large proportion of those yielding to Christ being scholars in the Sunday schools and Bible classes of the town. It is always difficult to tabulate results, and the spiritual influence of the meetings can never be expressed by mere figures.

Mrs. Baeyertz' exposition of Jewish customs, Passover, Day of Atonement, &c., were specially interesting. The last service of the mission was a most impressive one. The subject of the address was "Holiness," and it was set forth in clear, forceful language. May the results abide and fruit be seen after many days!

Mr. W. R. Lane at Newport, Mon.

By the invitation of the Newport Free Church Council, Mr. W. R. LANE has conducted a ten-days' mission in that town, beginning on February 17 in Stow Hill Baptist Church, and closing on the 26th in Tredegar Hall. Mr. Lane was not a stranger to Newport. He had conducted a mission here some years ago, and had then made many friends, who were glad to welcome him once again.

We are thankful to God for his visit, and for his work. It has been a time of great blessing. The beginning was quiet; the growth was gradual; the end was glorious. No excitement! No sensation! But power, quiet, irresistible, that swayed preacher and people, and swept many into blessing!

We noted with great joy the expectancy of the people. There was a wistful eagerness writ deep upon their faces. They came in hope. They wanted something. They were not the formal, decorous folk who sit so staidly in our pews of a Sabbath, who can listen without a tear to the great Gospel of God, who can hear without a tremor of the wrath of God. They were eager! They were passionately in earnest! To service after service they came, increasing in numbers, in depth of emotion, in zeal of prayer. If Mr. Lane could have remained another ten days, one knows not to what outbreaks of blessing the work would have opened. The heart of Newport is right. At its heart there is a Gospel earnestness, an evangelic eagerness that bodes well for coming times.

The men's meeting on Sunday afternoon was perhaps the most amazing sight of all. Great efforts had been made to secure a large attendance; but scarcely had the most sanguine anticipated such a gathering. From half-past two to three the men streamed in, till the great hall was filled.

The address was on "Keep thyself pure!" God grant that the tender thunder of this message may do his Holy Will in the manhood of Newport. At the closing meeting on the Monday evening Mr. Lane gave his life-story. J. G. D.

Mr. Henry Varley at Bradford.

Despite the inclement weather and almost incessant rain, the visit of Mr. Varley to this busy northern centre has been full of encouragement in the interest manifested in the Word of God.

The Sunday services were full of power. The afternoon lecture drew together a representative audience of a thousand men; and many, it is believed, have during the mission passed from death into life. To believers the work was helpful in the "building up in their most holy faith" of the people of God.

Miss Shepard from New York joined Mr. and Mrs. Varley in their work, and added much to these effective meetings by the service of praise. Mrs. Varley and Miss Shepard held meetings for the women of Bradford with much acceptance. An interesting feature in this campaign was the association of Mr. Varley with his esteemed son, Henry Varley, B.A., minister of Norton Lane Congregational Church, where a number of the addresses were given.

The Bible readings in the Mechanics' Institute proved seasons of instruction, drawing together many of the ministers and Christians from all the churches. A very gracious spirit of revival now prevails. Mr. Varley invited a large number of the ministers of the city to meet him for breakfast at the Great Northern Hotel. This proved a most interesting gathering. Many who were present expressed deep interest in the mission already held, and regretted that the campaign was so soon to close. The inquiry came: "Could not Mr. Varley stay on and continue the work." One gentleman who had been attending some of the meetings said that he believed such a ministry as Mr. Varley's was exactly what Bradford needed, and proffered £20 toward the expenses if the mission could be continued. More than twenty of the ministers, by unanimous vote, pledged themselves to do all in their power to help forward the work if Mr. Varley could return. Another hour was spent in conference concerning the work of God in Bradford.

A committee representing more than twenty of the ministers and churches of Bradford was formed at once. Mr. Varley has arranged to conduct a second campaign, beginning at 3 p.m. on Tuesday, the 14th inst., in the Mechanics' Institute. Prayer is earnestly asked for this work, in which the hand of the Lord has already been so clearly seen.

At Cox Green, near Bolton, in the large room at Messrs. Garnett's spinning mills which is set apart for religious work, Mr. HENRY COLLINS, of the Evangelization Society, has laboured on various occasions with much acceptance. Many who are now earnest workers have come out on the Lord's side under Mr. Collins's preaching, and during his latest mission spiritual benefit has been received by many. At Mr. HENRY THORNE'S mission at Walsworth Road Chapel, Hitchin (Rev. R. Holme), which concluded on the 26th ult., the Bible readings and Gospel services were of a profitable character. The addresses were marked by restraint and solemnity. The Lord's people were refreshed and sinners yielded to Christ.

At the mission conducted by GIPSY SMITH at Ramsgate a deep impression was made, and the immediate fruits were most encouraging. The influence of the mission upon the Christian life of the churches was marked. Writing from The Manse, Ottery St. Mary, Rev. A. G. Marler describes in earnest words the services recently conducted in the Congregational Church by Mr. ERNEST BAILEY, of the Evangelization Society. Notwithstanding heavy snowfalls and floods, there were increased congregations, and the streets were paraded by willing workers. Much blessing was realized. Rev. THOMAS WAUGH'S visit to Cheltenham was remarkable for a gracious work among the young men and women of Methodist families. Mr. J. H. BRUNTON, jun., has been conducting services for three and a half weeks at Weston-super-Mare. The attendances increased until it was difficult, on Sunday evenings, to accommodate the people. Christians were refreshed, and many professed to believe unto salvation.

A revival is reported from the Methodist Church, Sharpstown, Maryland. A large number of young women converts, employed at a factory, were so affected while singing hymns in the factory that work ceased, and a meeting was held. Many people, hearing of the demonstration, joined in; and ultimately some of these sought the Saviour. Mr. D. V. Mays writes concerning Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND'S mission at Charleston, South Carolina:—"Great interest is manifested. A considerable number have professed conversion. Mr. Morgan knows something of the work in the South, he and his wife, and his friend, Mr. Wintle, having been here last year, when many were brought to Christ. Charleston is a city of about 75,000 people. Mr. Hammond's 'Roger's Travels' was circulated here before the meetings commenced, and, no doubt, did much to prepare the way for this work. That book has led many to Christ."

Obituary.

REV. W. M'ILWRATH.

MUCH regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. William McIlwrath, of Newtownards, one of the most highly esteemed ministers in the Presbyterian Church. Converted during the great revival of 1859, in 1860 he took up his abode in Newtownards as a voluntary, self-supporting, evangelistic worker, and greatly endeared himself, especially to the poor, by his kindness and earnestness. After he had remained in this capacity for some years, and had gathered a congregation, he was accepted by the Presbyterian Church, and became one of its ministers. He was an effective preacher and a faithful pastor, and will long be remembered for his work in Newtownards.

REV. ROGER PRICE.

The death of Rev. Roger Price removes a devoted and veteran worker in the South African Mission field. He had been associated with the London Missionary Society since 1858, in which year he was appointed to the Makololo Mission. In later years his name was familiar in connection with the Moffat Institute at Kuruman, and it will be remembered that he was a brother-in-law of Livingstone, and a son-in-law of Moffat. Mr. Price had a long and useful career, and we hope to give his portrait and sketch of his life in an early issue.

MR. JAMES GORDON GULICK.

Those who are acquainted with the labours in Spain of Rev. W. H. Gulick, the esteemed American missionary at San Sebastian, will hear with regret of the death of his eldest son, Mr. J. Gordon Gulick. Nearly six years ago he bade his father good-bye, as he went to study at Harvard. In November, 1899, he was appointed to a Government post in Puerto Rico. On arriving at the island he fell ill, became insensible, and it was thought well to embark him on a transport for New York, but he never recovered consciousness, and passed away on the voyage. His earnest Christian character, and the bright promise of a useful career, had won wide respect from all with whom he came in contact.

COLONEL TRAVERS.

The death of Colonel Travers removes an earnest and devoted Christian worker who, with characteristic warmth, had made his personality felt for good in many directions. He was especially well known in south-east London, at Woolwich and Plumstead. A member of the Established Church, he regarded with strong sympathy all supporters of evangelical truth. As a guardian of the poor, he was wont to visit all the infirmary patients, affording encouragement to each and giving addresses in the wards as well as in the workhouse. Among other undertakings, Colonel Travers was president of the local branch of the Bible Society, and for thirty-six years superintended the Sunday school which now meets in Bloomfield Road School. He was widely esteemed amid all sections of the community as a true follower of the Master.

Personalia.

Sir ANDREW WINGATE, K.C.I.E., has accepted the invitation of the committee of the British Jews' Society to become their president. Sir Andrew is the distinguished son of the late Rev. W. Wingate, so highly esteemed for his many years' labours as missionary to the Jews in connection with the Free Church of Scotland at Buda-Pesth. From the earliest days of the Society's history the Wingate family have been identified with it.

Mr. F. T. WATT, of Leytonstone, for many years associated with ragged-school work, and for more than eight years past superintendent of the Welcome Mission, Harrow Green, E., is the subject of an interesting sketch, with portrait, in the March issue of the R.S.U. organ, In His Name. At Hornsey, Peckham, and Dartford, Mr. Watt is held in high esteem for his labours in past years, while at Leytonstone he has most devoted helpers and seconders in important and fruitful mission operations.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The Bishopric of Liverpool is now vacant, and the Archbishop of York and his officials will take charge of the diocese till a new bishop is appointed. Bishop Ryle intends to live at Lowestoft.

We regret to learn that Rev. F. J. Horsefield, Vicar of St. Silas's, Bristol, is suffering from overwork. Acting on medical advice, he may shortly leave England for a two-months' cruise in the Mediterranean.

The Bishop of Shrewsbury (Sir L. T. Stamer) has opened a new mission church for the growing parish of Perry Barr, near Birmingham. The total cost has been £1,500, of which no less than £1,400 has been raised since last Easter.

The effort to raise £2,900 for the enlargement of Carnforth Church is now nearly completed. The present small church, holding 293, was built twenty-five years ago, but the rapid strides of the town have demanded that the preaching of the Gospel must keep pace with the growth of five public-houses and other attractions for its 3,300 working people. £900 is still needed. Rev. E. A. S. Scott, the vicar, may be addressed, The Parsonage, Carnforth.

The Bishop of Worcester pleads that Wednesdays and Fridays in Lent may be observed for humiliation, confession of sin, and intercession in connection with the war in South Africa. "I trust we shall unite in earnest intercession with God that He will not only give victory to our troops, and patience and moderation in victory, but that He will also vouchsafe wisdom to our rulers; and I feel that these and other subjects for intercession should be recommended by the clergy to their parishes. . . . Services of intercession having direct reference to the war will excite an interest and give a reality to our observance of these days which, I fear, is too often wanting in our ordinary routine."

Congregational.

A circular sent out to all the Congregational Churches in Scotland, and signed by Revs. David Caird, as chairman, and Alex. Maclennan, as secretary of the Church-Aid Committee, states that in response to the appeal made last November on behalf of the aided churches the whole amount asked for has been subscribed.

At Bishopsgate Chapel, E.C., a successful dinner-hour service is being carried on. Rev. Thomas Grear, who has conducted it for some years, has just issued a programme for March and April, containing the names of Revs. H. Elvet Lewis, J. E. Wakerley, W. B. Selbie, M.A., and W. Pedr Williams. The service is held on Wednesdays from 1.30 to 1.50, and is highly appreciated by the workers in the neighbourhood, many of them young people, who attend most regularly.

Baptist.

The proceeds of Thankoffering Day at the East London Tabernacle reached £800.

Revs. J. G. Raws and Charles Bright, both of Adelaide, are expected shortly in England, and will represent the South Australian churches at the assembly of the Baptist Union.

The annual meeting of West Green Church (Tottenham) took place on the 28th ult. The secretary gave an interesting and cheering account of the year's work, and was able to speak of progress in the many departments of service.

The roof of the Metropolitan Tabernacle is now being slated, and the rebuilding operations are progressing rapidly. The iron columns on which the pulpit of the late Mr. Spurgeon was supported will be employed for a similar purpose for the new pulpit. It is hoped the new building may be opened free from debt.

Miss Ada Ward, the converted actress, gave a history of her conversion, at the P.S.A. meeting at Immanuel Church, Southend. Her subject was, "My Life's Story: from the Stage to the Cross." The pastor (Rev. J. Kemp) presided, and the building was crowded to overflowing half-an-hour previous to the commencement of the service. Miss Ward's discourse, which was of an impressive nature, was listened to with marked attention.

The East London Tabernacle was crowded on Sunday last. Mr. Henry Varley preached both morning and evening. It was a memorable day, and the power of the word of truth was evidently felt by the large congregations that assembled. There were hundreds present at the meeting held at the close of the evening service, when the ordinance of the Lord's Supper was observed.

At the first annual meeting of the Blackpool Baptist Mission, Rev. H. C. Wagnell presided over a large company. Satisfactory accounts of progress were given. The congregations in the Opera House have been remarkably good, and during the year £1,100 has been paid on the site and buildings acquired for the prospective tabernacle. Mr. Wagnell attributed the development of the work to plain Gospel preaching.

The Year Book for the Woodberry Down Church (Rev. G. Hay Morgan) has just been issued. The original debt on the building has been entirely paid off; but the complete renovation of the building and repairs to the underpinning through defective building have necessitated a new debt of £1,800. The Sunday school has a membership of 640 teachers and scholars. The contributions to the Baptist Missionary Society amount to £171 9s. 4d.

The first thank-offering day in connection with the church at Leytonstone Road (Rev. W. Graham Scroggie) was observed on the 22nd ult. The amount received amounted to nearly £90. The sum is to be devoted to the Building Fund, a new chapel being needed, as the present iron building does not afford sufficient accommodation for the congregation which assembles.

Methodist.

Sir Christopher Furness has undertaken to pay off all the debts on the Free Churches in Hartlepool and West Hartlepool. The promise represents a gift of several thousands of pounds.

At Rev. H. Price Hughes' first Sunday evening at St. James Hall, subsequent to his return from the East, there were signs of the presence and power of God. A number of persons were dealt with in the inquiry rooms.

When the Act for the regulation of youthful street traders was passed, Rev. Charles Garrett, of Liverpool, of the Wesleyan Mission, caused alterations to be effected in connection with the Alfred Street Institution in that city in order to provide for the reception of children to which the new regulations applied. Something like £75 was expended in the improvements, and towards this the Corporation has voted the reverend gentleman £50. A number of lads have been received into this mission home, and it is satisfactory to note that in the majority of instances permanent employment has been found for them.

The South-West Branch of the Wesleyan London Mission, whose headquarters are at Lambeth, has just issued its first report. It states that one of the most hopeful features in dealing with the problem of the unchurched is the industrial element that has come to live in its area. The south-west has largely become the workshop of the Metropolis. It further states that conversions are constant; that, besides the regular preaching services and prayer meetings, there are thirty-eight Society classes, a Wesley guild, mission bands, and numerous other auxiliary forces which are all in a flourishing condition. During the severe weather over 3,000 free breakfasts have been provided for destitute children. At the forthcoming anniversary, March 6, it is hoped to raise £1,000.

Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Matthews has had to decline the request of the Council of the Pan-Presbyterian Synod to represent that body at the first meetings of the Federated Presbyterians of Australasia.

Rev. Alex. Connell, of Regent's Square, and Rev. T. Barclay, of Formosa, have been visiting Cambridge as a deputation from the English Presbyterian Missionary Society. At Westminster College they met not only all the theological students but a number of University men, upon whom they urged the claims of foreign missionary service.

Camden Road Church, N.W., has had a good year. There has been an increase in the membership; the church supports two local missions and three Sunday schools; and the "Year Book" gives an account of some fifty-three agencies connected with the church or missions. Including £300 for the Westminster College, the total amount raised during the year was £1,900.

The March Missionary Record of the United Presbyterian Church announces the definite organization of the Presbyterian Church of Central Africa. The North Livingstonia Presbytery has been constituted, and Rev. Dr. Elmslie appointed first Moderator. There is to be a South Livingstonia Presbytery for the Dutch Reformed section of the mission, and the two Presbyteries are to form a Synod, to whose jurisdiction the native Church, is subject.

Society of Friends.

Among the missionaries who are coming home is Joseph Taylor, who for ten years has been engaged in active service in India. He presents a pressing appeal for reinforcements, more especially from the educated young men of the Society of Friends and from those trained in the Friends' public schools.

Charles W. and Annie M. Goddard were present at a meeting of Friends and attenders of meeting, school, and missions at Oldham on the 22nd ult. About seventy were present, and highly appreciated the earnest Gospel address of Charles Goddard on "The Kingdom of Heaven." Since then these two Friends have sailed on their return voyage, on board the Cunard liner Lucania.

A social gathering has been held at the Meeting House, King Street, Hereford, to inaugurate the monthly congregational meetings of members and attenders, in accordance with the recommendations of the yearly meeting. The meeting is by no means a new one. In 1676 Friends were imprisoned in Hereford for their persistence in preaching in the open air in the streets, and meetings have been kept up ever since.

G. A. Wilson recently delivered an anti-opium lecture in the Friends' Institute, Dundee. Bailie Doig presided over a fairly large audience; and, in introducing the lecturer, said they could not but regret the untold misery caused by the use of opium in China. The lecture was illustrated by lime-light views, shown by James Merry. At the close, a resolution was carried protesting against the manufacture and sale of opium by the Indian Government.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. T. G. JONES, Congregationalist, of South Africa, who for nearly twenty years did a splendid work among the Fingoes. He acquired a knowledge of the Kaffir tongue, and for years preached to the natives in their own language.—THOMAS JACKSON, of Auckland, New Zealand, of the Society of Friends. His service was much valued, and had been very helpful to Friends in that distant colony.—Rev. JAMES MUIR, minister-emeritus of Bridge of Allan Church, at the age of seventy-five.—Rev. W. A. GRAY, minister of the South Free Church, Elgin.—Miss ANNICE NAYLOR, of Lee Mount Baptist Church, Halifax; by her death the sick and poor lose a faithful helper.—Mr. J. K. PYLE, a well-known American philanthropist. Born in Nova Scotia in 1823, he emigrated to New York in 1845, was converted in the great revival of 1857, and became a Baptist. He was a most generous contributor to the church and all benevolent causes and personal appeals.—At St. Bees, aged sixty-seven, Captain ANDERSON, for many years connected with Parton Congregational Church, Whitehaven. — Mr. ROBERT BAIN, of Elgin, senior deacon of the Congregational Church in that town.—Aged sixty-one, Rev. W. H. COLLINS, Rector of All Saints, York, formerly a C.M. Missionary in China.

Appeal.

Mr. B. K. MUKHUSI, secretary of the Y.M.C.A. library, Khalifahag, Bhagalpur, India, asks for gifts of newspapers magazines, and old books, for the reading room, which is attended by a large number of non-Christian English-speaking people.

The Late Mr. J. G. McVicker. — Photographs of this departed worthy may be had from Mr. J. S. Dodington, of 62, Upper Street, Islington. There are three positions, all of them good and true. Cabinet, 1s. 1d.; large size platinotype, 1s. 9d.—both post free.

A Christian Workers' Cycling Club would be pleased to assist at temperance or mission services on Saturday evenings during the summer, within a radius of about twelve miles from Oxford Circus. Address, Secretary, Ivy Wheelers, Polytechnic, Regent Street, W.

THE INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY has removed its central offices from 27, Red Lion Square, to No. 8, Red Lion Square, W.C.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE Free Church Federation is holding its fifth National Council this week at Sheffield. Notes of the opening gatherings and of the President's address will be found on p. 22. The report will be continued, with portraits, next week.

We are obliged to defer for a week or two the commencement of Mr. Meyer's series of papers upon "John the Baptist."

Rev. F. B. Meyer has been exposed to some criticism lately regarding his attitude to the war. As he appears to have been to some extent misunderstood, the following extract from a letter he has written to the Westminster Gazette will be of interest to our readers:—

> At the present moment the nation is divided into two great classes, and those who do not belong to the majority are characterized as pro-Boers. But many of us who dissent from the dominant militarism do not wish to pose as sponsors for all the sayings and doings of the Boers, past, present and future. We yield to none in our loyalty or patriotism; indeed, it is our patriotism that forces us to take up the position we occupy. Our sole contention is that our Government should propose an armistice to consider with the Boers the terms of a lasting settlement. Those terms might be as drastic as you will, including the free rights of all, with sufficient guarantees—but let them be formulated and considered. In case of failure, we can but fall to blows again; but we shall have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done a Christian, humane, magnanimous, and politic thing. And it might give us all we want without the loss of our noble soldiers' lives. Surely the casualty lists are plea enough.

Lovers of fair play and of free speech ought to oppose the present attempts to prevent the stop-the-war party from being heard. Freedom has been the very breath of England's life, and it is strangely inconsistent to be fighting for equal rights in South Africa while by mob-law a section of our fellow countrymen should be deprived of an elementary right at home. Whatever view be taken, from a practical standpoint of proposals for peace at the present juncture, roughs must be taught to keep in their places, and not to meddle with peaceable citizens who do not meddle with them.

The nearer comes the evident triumph of British Arms in South Africa, the more careful should our religious teachers be not to allow the bellicose spirit fostered by victory to hide the gravity of the problems before us on that continent when peace has been proclaimed. These are, broadly, the basis of future government, the relations of capital and labour, and the status of the native races. These are questions whose settlement will tax the resources of all our statesmen, and the great thing is that those who will have to attempt their solution shall have no doubt of the existence of a compact and powerful public opinion, determined to see justice done alike to Boer, Briton, and Black. If the Federal States are added to British territory, as seems to be likely, if not inevitable, the Christian public must see to it that neither Force, Fraud, nor Mammon is to have a hand in determining the relations between the races that inhabit the country.

In an article on "Prayers on the Battlefield," in the current Quiver, some interesting facts are given as to the habits of devout soldiers before and during battle. When Lord Clyde asked his officers to pick the bravest men in order to form a forlorn hope in a desperate attack on Delhi, he was answered—"There is a prayer-meeting going on now in camp. If you go there you will find all the bravest men"—a remark which has been echoed recently by Sir George White about his beleaguered soldiers in Ladysmith. Washington, "Stonewall" Jackson, Grant, General Gordon, and many other popular generals were all devout men. The Bishop of Rochester, in his just issued "Lenten Call," quotes the words of a soldier at the front:

> War seems to turn fellows Godward—a great call from selfishness, and luxury, and content—both for those who are here and for every one at home. Near to Him we must judge ourselves. For the Lord is a God of judgment, and by Him actions are weighed.

The debasing and cruel aspects of war are so painfully evident that this testimony to its solemnizing effect is something as a set-off on the other side.

Deep satisfaction will be felt generally at the appointment of Professor Chavasse, of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, to the vacant See of Liverpool. He has all the qualifications essential to make the successor of Bishop Ryle an efficient spiritual force. There will be no retrograde movement toward sacerdotalism. A fervent, liberal Evangelical, scholarly, no partisan, a good preacher, and excellent organizer, the newly appointed bishop will be welcomed to his diocese by a large number of devout Christian men, cleric and lay, cordially prepared to give him every assistance in carrying on the work which the late bishop did so well. Held in much esteem by all parties in the National Church, we may confidently anticipate a long period (D.V.) of great usefulness for the former professor, in the important duties which he has been appointed to undertake. His missionary zeal ought to prove infectious, for he has a true enthusiasm for humanity.

The Church Times has been lamenting the disappearance of set fasting among modern Nonconformists, contrasting them with their Puritan ancestors who, while rejecting the old Lenten fast, substituted a Parliamentary fast-day once a month. The point raised is not without its significance, though not of the kind suggested by our contemporary. The ritual practice of physical fasting is an unimportant matter; but the principle of fasting is perennial. What does it stand for? Self-control, self-denial; the due subjection of the physical appetites and passions to the spiritual affections and activities; an earnest spirit of waiting upon God. Now these exercises are not matters of times and seasons; they belong to every-day life. If any believer thinks he can better attain these ends by abstinence from certain kinds of food for set periods, there is no harm in doing so; but that they can be realized always without outward pomp and show is proved by the experience of thousands of devout and spiritual men and women.

The same paper, in enforcing the idea of the importance of worship, has taken occasion to sneer at "the British Protestant notion of the use of a church, that it is a mere preaching place." The writer overlooks the important part which the sermon has had in building up the religious life in these islands. How different was the view taken by John Ruskin of the essential importance of the preaching of the Gospel and the responsibility of the preacher:

> A man sent with a message to us which it is a matter of life or death whether we hear or refuse . . . a message to convince men of their weakness, to shame them for all their sin, to warn them of all their danger, to stir the hard fastenings of the doors where the Master Himself has stood and knocked, yet none opened . . . let us but once understand and feel this, and we shall look with changed eyes upon the frippery of gay furniture about the place from which the message of judgment must be delivered, which either breathes upon the dry bones that they may live, or, if ineffectual, remains recorded in condemnation perhaps upon the utterer and listener alike, but assuredly against one of them.

A very unhappy picture of the condition of a large proportion of the country and other clergy of the Establishment was presented by Archdeacon Sinclair, a few days ago, in a sermon on behalf of the Clergy Fund. He stated that of the 15,580 incumbencies in England more than half had salaries of less than £180 per annum, and that in some cases the clergyman's house is the poorest and worst in the village. Leaving out of sight altogether the question of the poor curates, these figures are eloquent in favour of an effort in the direction of equalization, such as that which has been tried in Ireland since the Disestablishment.

It is a great pity that certain political associations of London have come to the resolution to fight the forthcoming School Board Elections on political party lines. This is one of the most questionable lines of policy that could be followed. Our educational system has nothing to do with party politics. The only conceivable relation between them is the result of the "rapprochement" of the High Church Party and the Conservatives in their various campaigns, which is in itself a most questionable alliance from the religious point of view. It is to be devoutly hoped that the voters on both the so-called Moderate and Progressive sides will repudiate this disturbing factor in the educational problem, and that the choice of candidates which is now actively proceeding will be determined solely by their views on education, and not by their political complexion. Any other result would be disastrous in its effects on our educational system, and open the way to many abuses.

Prof. Seeley, in his remarkable volume on Napoleon, points out how all his plans and movements were really directed against Britain, whom he always regarded as his arch-enemy. It would appear that the same is true of the Vatican. The arch-enemy of Rome is Britain, and the hierarchy of that Church never loses an opportunity to work against us. The machinations of the Jesuits, and the secret service money so freely spent on the newspapers abroad just now, account more for the present hatred of England on the Continent than all other causes combined. So far there is, however, little to trouble about in this, for the power of Rome is everywhere on the wane. In the end a nation, like a tree, will be judged by its fruits. Our present duty is to stand for righteousness, and to fulfil our place and function in the world under the dominance of the highest principles.

We have heard nothing lately of the "leakage" from the Roman Catholic body to which such prominence was given in their journals before their union for the "Conversion of England" was formed. But apparently, in view of the evident failure of the latter movement, Cardinal Vaughan feels that matters are becoming too serious for silence. In his Lenten Pastoral he therefore says, after intimating that twice during the last seven years he has had a census taken of the Roman Catholic population of his diocese, respecting which he "need not enter into detail:—

Suffice it to say that out of 35,000 young persons who have left school, and ought to be regular attendants at Mass and their duties, it appears that about 27,000 live in the neglect of religious observances. We say nothing as to the number of nominal Catholics unknown to the priests . . . It is not that the sects get hold of our children, the devil gets hold of them in another way . . . Hence our losses are to be counted not by the hundred, but by the thousand.

This noteworthy condition of things suggests the need of vigilance and activity on the part of Protestant workers to find some of these wanderers, not merely to "proselytize" them, but to save them from the wiles of the devil.

The attention of the Christian public should be drawn to the action of the Crystal Palace Company, in view of the refusal by the Penge magistrates of a seven-day licence. The offer of a six-day licence, as heretofore, has been indignantly refused by the company, who are appealing to the Quarter Sessions. It will be remembered that when, last summer, the Palace was opened on Sundays, it was for the purpose of holding sacred concerts "for the benefit of the neighbourhood." The public were later on permitted to use the Palace and grounds on the Lord's Day, for the purpose of attending these concerts or of walking about. Now the directors want to supplement their concerts with the attractions of the drinking bar, and we may be sure that no stone will be left unturned to get permission to transform the Palace into a respectable Sunday drinking saloon, "for the benefit of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood"—and others!

The history of these successive steps, whereby the money-making instinct encroaches on the restrictions laid down by the common-sense of the community, is instructive. The order in all such cases is the same. An appeal is made to liberal sentiments, the Sabbatarian spirit unsparingly denounced, and a request preferred to the authorities to permit a seemingly harmless privilege. A little later this is made a stepping-stone to another concession, and imperceptibly the line is crossed which enables every one to see that all through there is but one object in view—dividends. We hope these insidious attacks on the sanctity of the Lord's Day, in connection with one of the most respectable resorts for amusement in the country, will be sternly repulsed, and that the company will be soundly beaten in their attempt to occupy another strategic position for the Anti-Sabbatarian movement, which has already been far too successful.

In a recent unpleasant case in the courts, it transpired that one of the defendants, an hysterical and ailing woman, had been told certain things by a palmist, and that she had "dwelt upon them night and day until she believed them." There are many such cases evidencing the harm done by these people, and it is difficult to understand why, in the Metropolis and other cities and towns, they are permitted to prey upon the weak-minded and the superstitious with impunity, seeing that in Liverpool and elsewhere prosecutions have been successfully carried out against them.

Such questions as that of the housing of the poor assume a much greater interest if we take the trouble of thinking over some of the details. Speaking at the recent opening of the Boundary Street Estate, Bethnal Green, the Prince of Wales urged the necessity of "vigorous action in cleansing the slums which disgrace our civilization, and the erection of good and wholesome dwellings." That course followed in the Boundary Street district has resulted in the demolition of one of the vilest of the slum districts in London, a place described by a popular author as "a sink of iniquity and a forcing house of crime," where nearly 6,000 people existed in wretchedness and sin almost indescribable, and the erection of blocks of healthy buildings in which about the same number of persons can live in decency and comfort. What these figures represent in the direction of morality and religion it is, however, next to impossible to estimate.

The pressing need for a better provision of cheap and healthy dwellings for the poor was emphasized pitifully enough by some recent eviction scenes in Old Street, St. Luke's Parish, E.C. Some small tenement houses having been condemned, and a closing order by the magistrates being disregarded, an attempt to evict the tenants resulted in two determined efforts to regain possession of these miserable buildings. The poor people, in fact, do not know where to go, and naturally they cling tenaciously to their rookeries. When we see how cheerfully the nation contemplates paying many millions for the cost of the war in South Africa, it seems incredible that it is so hard to find the means whereby the poor at our doors may be adequately sheltered from weather and disease. It is all a matter of rousing public sympathy; when that can be won over, the means for accomplishing this reform would be found easily enough. And the first condition of gaining public sympathy is to spread a knowledge of the facts far and wide.

The Labour Gazette, a Government publication, informs us that during ten months in 1899 no less than 3,426 persons were killed while doing their daily work, and 66,441 were injured. A large proportion of the sufferers are women, young persons and children. And this killing and maiming goes on year by year at our doors, yet how few realize what it means of sorrow and heartbreak and life-long toil to hundreds of thousands? Truly, "one half the world does not know how the other half lives." A more exact knowledge would create a deeper, wider sympathy, which would call forth preventive measures that would save many useful lives.

Is not the imposition of sex disabilities in matters of national education a mistake that should be rectified without delay? It seems that the Duke of Devonshire is prepared to advocate their removal. He stated, in reply to a recent influential deputation of women, that in the forthcoming Bill the Government would provide for the presence of women on the governing bodies of secondary educational organizations. A clause would also be introduced for the appointment of women on the small consultative committee of the Board of Education. In the educational work of the kingdom nothing should prevent a qualified woman from taking her proper share.

We are glad to note that at some of the great meetings called by the Baptists in raising their Twentieth Century Fund there have been manifest results in soul-saving. While such meetings are directed towards eternal purposes, there can be no doubt as to their usefulness. These funds are only dangerous when they lead to denominational pride and over emphasis of the monetary aspect of Christian work. When they are raised in a devout spirit, and lead to the conversion of men, they are of the highest value to all concerned in them. The Wesleyan Methodists put great importance on the spiritual portion of their campaign, and other workers are wise in keeping this steadily in view.

Dr. McLaren has spoken some searching words to the Manchester Sunday School Union on the reasons why so many scholars drift away. He does not hesitate to say that it is because an enormous proportion of teachers are not up to their work.

We have teachers who consider they have done their duty when they have read some goody-goody little story-book to the children, or who are content to have a chapter read round, verse after verse, and who then shut up the book. We want to get rid of all that. We would like all Sunday school teachers to feel that careful preparation is essential to success in their work. "The gods give everything to labour," said an old Latin proverb; and it is true of Sunday school teaching as of other things, that what costs the giver nothing is just worth what it costs.

No doubt these words are based on good foundation, and the venerable speaker knew the fault he was exposing; if so, there is room for contrition and ground for hope that, under improved conditions among teachers, we may once more see our Sunday schools pouring strength into the churches.

It is very evident from many of the reminiscences recorded in the recently published autobiography of Rev. Dr. Whipple, Bishop of Minnesota, that one of the chief stumbling blocks in the way of his efforts to convert the Indians was the "fire-water;" but he had sufficient success with them to make that portion of his book which deals with those tribes singularly interesting and valuable. Part of a letter from one of his Indian missioners certainly shows the power of the Gospel in the mental as well as spiritual elevation of the native races:

All of your red children send you their love, and say, "Tell him that we remember and pray for him, and that our prayers are not lip-prayers, they are from the heart." We do not know the seat of the faculties of men. Some wise men say it is the brain. We do not know. We know that the Lord said that Pharaoh's heart was hardened. He did not say Pharaoh's brain. Jesus said, "My son give Me thy heart. He did not say give Me thy brain. Jesus said, "Let not your heart be troubled," He did not say let not your brain be troubled. . . . Had you told us to pray out of our brains we should have tried to do it, but I think they would have been brainless prayers."

Our tobacco bill for the year is now equal to our bread bill. We hardly imagine the addition by the Chancellor of the Exchequer of an extra tax on tobacco and foreign cigars will much affect smokers. But it is time that parents exercised more authority over their young sons in preventing their indulgence in a taste which all agree is detrimental to their health. Medical men are unanimously of opinion that smoking by boys retards their proper development and is injurious to their well-being. It often leads them into doubtful company, and takes them away from their homes at an age when parental influence is most needed.

An Analysis of Conversion.

PROBABLY never before has Conversion been the subject of such careful examination statistically as in the book by Dr. Starbuck, entitled "The Psychology of Religion," published by Mr. Walter Scott. This volume has been already reviewed in various newspapers, mostly in a spirit of levity ill-suited to the solemnity of its theme. It may seem at first thought a curious idea to analyze conversions and reduce the results of hundreds of inquiries to formal statistics after the manner of Mr. Mulhall. But when the analysis is undertaken in the reverent spirit shown by Dr. Starbuck, and for the purpose of providing data on the most important matter in the world, it may be useful and wise.

We shall not follow Dr. Starbuck through the intricacies of his calculations—a task which would require much space—but the volume has suggested one or two points which may be of interest to those engaged in Christian work. The first of these is the established fact that most conversions take place before the age of twenty-five. This will not be disputed by those who have had any wide experience in preaching the Gospel. Few, indeed, are the cases of conversion which occur in old age; few, also, in middle life; the vast majority of decisions for Christ are made

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS OF YOUTH.

The figures on this point show an overwhelming majority in favour of young converts.

In analyzing the replies as to the circumstances of the conversion which have reached him, he says that in many cases there was a definite stirring of the conscience and heart about the age of twelve, and if this met with no response a second call came about the age of sixteen.

Does not all this emphasize the importance of Christian work among the young? Evangelists are devoting more and more time to the children, and with splendid results. Preachers nowadays are wisely sparing a few minutes for the children in their morning service, and they appeal specially to young people on many Sunday evenings in the year. Sunday school teachers may take heart at these figures of Dr. Starbuck, for many of the conversions of our noblest men and women are owing to the earnest prayers of their teachers in the days of youth. Despite all that some people say as to the impossibility of the conversion of children, the fact remains that several of the biographies of eminent Christians prove that they were led to Christ quite young in years. Isaac Watts was converted at the age of nine, Jonathan Edwards at the age of seven, Robert Hall at twelve, William Penn at nine; and numerous modern examples can be adduced in support of this earliness of conversion.

Without labouring the point, we may say there are many reasons why a youthful mind is more susceptible to Christ's appeal than one in later life. "Heaven lies about us in our infancy" in other senses than Wordsworth meant. When we are young our minds are open to holy influences because they are not already absorbed by the fascinations of this world, or the cares and anxieties of life. We are readier in responding to emotion, we are quicker to be touched to fine issues. Then, also, more spiritual power is brought to bear on the young by parent, preacher, teacher, and friend. Children are moved to solemn thoughts by events which hardly affect the middle-aged. So that on several grounds the preponderating conversion of children is not surprising.

But we would hasten to add that conversion is so essentially the mysterious work of the Holy Spirit that it is impossible to account for the circumstances surrounding it. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." The work of the Holy Spirit cannot be tabulated or analyzed. If we take the examples of conversion, as we should term them in our modern parlance, which occur in God's Word, we are reminded immediately how varied was the work, how different was the environment, how various were the persons called from darkness into light. Saul was arrested on the road, the Ethiopian eunuch was driving, the woman of Samaria was at the well, fishermen were mending their nets, a tax-gatherer was at the receipt of custom, the gaoler at Philippi, Lydia the seller of purple—all these, and many more, were "converted;" yet

IN WHAT DIFFERENT WAYS.

This variety may surely comfort those who are anxious and troubled because salvation has not been accepted by them quite in the most usual manner, or at the customary age. "The Spirit of God lies all about the spirit of man like a mighty sea, ready to rush in at the smallest chink of the walls that shut Him out from his own." Christ says: "Except ye be converted"—not "as little children," but—"and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Conversion in many cases has occurred as unconsciously as when a traveller passes unknowingly over the frontier of a foreign country. Some of our most distinguished Christian leaders cannot name the day when the great change took place; others can look back on the event with a distinctness of memory which adds to their sense of its reality. Whatever be our experience, we may direct our prayers most definitely to God for the conversion of others, realizing that such a change is God's own way of reconciling men to Himself through Jesus Christ.

JOHN I. 12, 13.

How beautiful the life
Of God within the soul!
He blesseth man with second birth,
And maketh new the whole.

New joy, new hope, new aim,
New blessings and new love;
A new relationship and name,
A new "sweet home" above.

Not merely beautiful!
But most essential, too,
This life of God within the soul—
This new life through and through.

"Ye must be born again!"
It is no question thus
Of like, dislike, or unconcern,
That stands confronting us.

"Ye must be born again,"
But not a power on earth,
No will of flesh nor will of man
Can bring to pass this birth!

We must with willing hearts
The Saviour Christ receive;
We must with simple, childlike trust,
On his dear name believe.

Then of God's Spirit born,
We shall have gained the right,
To be his children well-beloved,
His treasure and delight.

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

God Save the Queen!

IT would be impossible to exaggerate the admiration and affection inspired by the Queen by her attitude towards her people during this war. Never during her long reign have her wisdom and tact been so conspicuously manifest. Her kindly sympathy to the relatives of the fallen, her visits to Netley Hospital, her gracious messages to the commanders and regiments who have shown conspicuous gallantry at the front, have united the whole Empire into an unbounded love to the Sovereign Lady who gathers up into the personal love with which she is regarded all that is highest and best in the sentiment of patriotism. Her recently announced intention of spending her spring holiday in Dublin, instead of going to the Sunny South, is one of the wisest acts. It will, we trust, tend to remove the last relics of disaffected feeling in Ireland, whose soldiers have so cheerfully and bravely encountered the sacrifices and privations of the war.

If Her Majesty had any doubt of the survival of the love and reverence which greeted her at the time of the celebration of her two jubilees, it must have been absolutely dispelled when she gazed through her tears of joy at the vast multitudes who awaited her arrival in the metropolis. The oldest court officials testify that they were surprised beyond measure at the of enthusiasm of which she was the recipient wherever she went during her recent visit. She herself, with a lifelong experience of popular enthusiasm, was no less gratified.

It is worth while asking why the Queen has evoked this abnormal interest. Some will answer that it is accounted for by the recent victory achieved by her soldiers; others might argue that it was in response to the Imperial feeling which is gaining ground so speedily: yet others would hold that some of the acclaim of the crowds was due to the intimation that the Queen was about to visit Ireland. While all these factors have doubtless weighed with the public, may not the real reason be one which reflects far more honour on the Sovereign and her subjects? The Queen is GOOD, and millions of her people recognise that in all her acts she has been governed by the humble desire to do God's will in the unparalleled position to which she was called as a young girl. Queen Victoria has allowed herself to be inspired not by the wish to be great, but to be godly; she has striven to fulfil the highest dictates of conscience, and has thus lived in intimate relation to her Maker, earnestly seeking to do his will in every crisis of her life.

Other monarchs have given a formal adhesion—almost a patronage—to Christian worship and work. Not so Queen Victoria; hers has been "the better part" of devotion and ready surrender to the absolute commands of the King of kings. She has not simply been a bulwark of Protestantism: she has been the greatest and most permanent force for goodness and philanthropy that this Empire has ever known. A mere list of the new ideas she has inspired would astonish those who fail to understand how ingeniously she has discovered the best way to accomplish gracious works of kindness. It was our Queen who first set the example of Royal visits to hospitals and homes of suffering; she was the first to think of the Victoria Cross as a decoration for splendid self-sacrifice; no British sovereign published a diary for the perusal of the nation until her "Leaves from the Highlands" appeared. In manifold ways she has shown how to honour the good, and withal she has set her subjects the great example of submission to God's decrees in a manner which has adorned the saddest past of her glorious reign.

The events of last week proved conclusively the extraordinary affection felt for Her Majesty by the people. At no period in her illustrious reign, except on Jubilee Day, have there been such crowds assembling along the line of route where the Queen drove, and massing round the gates of Buckingham Palace till late at night, in order to catch a glimpse of the dear Sovereign.

Reverence and affection for Queen Victoria is not the submissive adulation of a ruler which one sees in other countries: it is the admiration for a noble life as well as for a great ruler. Men and women the world over are ever ready to admire the sincerely righteous in whatever rank they may be found. Would to God it were easier to find them! The Queen has stood the test of the fierce light that beats upon a throne, and because she has shone so brightly in her personal character, her subjects everywhere pray, with a fervour that grows with the swiftly passing years, "God save the Queen!"

Worship and Communion.

RECENT articles in our columns have evoked communications from various correspondents on the essentials of Christian worship. There is a tendency to disparage the more ordinary gatherings in the Name of Christ by applying certain well-known passages of Scripture almost exclusively to meetings at which the Lord's Supper is observed. Against this several correspondents have lately written to us; but all that we can do is to indicate the points of their letters.

Mr. W. Cope Devereux (Ealing) emphasizes the leading thought in the Lord's Supper to be, as embodied in the Prayer Book, "the remembrance of Christ's meritorious Cross and Passion, whereby believers obtain remission of sins, and are made partakers of the Kingdom of Heaven." The writer points out that the words of Christ—"Do this in remembrance of Me"—do not involve the loss of a spiritual presence, but precisely the contrary. It is not likely that the gracious promise of his spiritual presence would be denied to grateful communicants. Mr. Devereux maintains that the sacred feast is infinitely more precious and comforting by the remembrance of Christ's gracious promise to be present where two or three are gathered together in his name. Christ is not in the sacrament, but spiritually present at the Communion.

In a similar communication, Mr. W. Miller (B. Ferry) writes: "It is essentially a commemorative ordinance. It is a love-feast in which we hold sweet communion with brother Christians, and with Christ as the Master and provider of the feast. It is a joyous ceremony: to mourn an absent Lord is not joyous, but grievous. The broken body and shed blood speak only of death, not of absence."

Another correspondent, R. H. M., writes: "While we break the bread and take the cup of Communion in remembrance of Him who died for us and our sins, and who is really absent from earth, as touching his manhood, we do not seek to call Him down from heaven by any mystic ceremonies; but, our life being hid with Him in God, we are represented there, where He is. 'We see Jesus,' and are present with Him, and He is present with us; and so his gracious Word and promise is truly and really fulfilled. 'For where two or three are gathered together unto my Name, there am I in the midst of them.'"

Be of good courage; whatever you lose for God, you will find in God.—Thomas Hardcastle. (1675).

Realities!—II.

By Mr. CHARLES COOK.

Judgment.

"JUDGMENT must begin at the house of God." One of the great realities of the Scriptures is, that God judges his people. The father of John the Baptist was struck dumb because he believed not the words, which God had spoken; the prophet of the Lord, who in one chapter is styled "the man of God" fourteen times, is slain by the lion because of his disobedience.

Paul in writing to the Corinthians says, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged."

These are cases where God's people are judged in this life. But there is a future judgment where, at the "judgment seat of Christ," the works of the believer will pass in review before his Lord, and he will be rewarded in proportion to his faithfulness. This should tell upon our service whilst here. "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with Me to give every man according as his work shall be."

Peter, however, when writing of judgment, asks the question: "What shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?"

Brutus in Rome sentenced his own sons to death when he was satisfied of their guilt. The feelings of the father were lost in the righteousness of the judge; the love he bore them was submerged in the love of the commonweal, and 'tis said of him: "He loved his country better than his children." God will by no means clear the guilty. God will judge the world in righteousness, and who can tell the awful realities of an undone eternity? It was Burke who once said: "What shadows we are and what shadows we pursue!" And Cowper says:

> The rest too giddy and too gay to wait,
> On the sad theme, their everlasting state;
> Sport in a day and perish in the night,
> The foam upon the water not so light.

And yet right fronting man is the Great White Throne where the judgment of God against all who have rejected Christ will be irreparable, irrevocable, and eternal. Not long since, I stood in a prison in a continental city, and before me were 350 convicts in chains, all under life sentences. In that country there is no ticket-of-leave system, and these men have no chance of being released. Homeless, hopeless, helpless, and in many cases in despair are they! To complete the picture, I was hindered from speaking to them the Gospel, and forbidden by the governor to give them the Word of God.

What Dante speaks of as being written on the gates of his "Inferno" might well be written on the walls of that prison-house—

"ABANDON HOPE ALL YE WHO ENTER HERE."

And is it not so when God shall have judged the unsaved?

> There are no pardons in that world,
> And brief is mercy's day.

"We laughed," said an American forger, "at the artlessness of the authorities of the Bank of England in permitting us to abstract their money by tens of thousands of pounds but we never laughed again for twenty years; that dark Old Bailey, that darker prison-cell, that awful judge, and, ah, that life-long sentence, with all its degradation and suffering!"

Oh that men would think of the future! Eternity! Where shall we spend it? Will our exit from this world be a rising to heaven or a sinking to hell?

Who can describe the contrast between "the Throne of the Almighty" and "the bottomless pit"?—"the river of life" and "the lake of fire"?—the city of which it is said, "There shall be no night there," and "the blackness of darkness," where "they shall never see light"?

The Lord is at hand! The verities of the other world are nearing! Jesus is coming; and we who love him cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, quickly," for then shall we "see the King in his beauty." But when He comes in judgment men will cry to the mountains and rocks, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

Rifts in the Cloud.—III.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

The Spirit of Submission.

Submit yourselves therefore to God. The Lord's will be done. Not as I will, but as Thou wilt. Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

IT is easy to submit ourselves to God when all is pleasant and prosperous, but not so when, with Jacob, we are led to say: "All these things are against me." The brother of low degree has no difficulty in rejoicing that he is exalted; but it needs much grace for the rich man to rejoice that he is brought low. It relieves our impatience when we can be active, but it tries the temper and tone of the soul when we can only stand still, and wait for the salvation of God. Yet submission to God is an exalted triumph of the soul. It is the pathway of wisdom as well as piety, and it is the doorway into the arbour of the peace that passeth all understanding.

The root of sin is rebellion against the Divine will. Not thy will, but mine be done, was the language of the wicked one, as in the spirit of self-exaltation he reared the standard of revolt against God. The object and spirit of the Son of God were exactly the reverse of this: "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." "I always do those things that please Him." "Father, thy will, not mine, be done." And He taught us to say, "Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."

In your affliction you have to exercise this spirit of submission in its most difficult form. It is not so much in the form of obedience in active service, but in accepting and bearing his will in the form of trial with a patient and uncomplaining spirit. You have to give up something which is precious to you, and around which the tendrils of the heart are closely entwined. You have, perhaps, to bear weakness or pain in the long hours of the day and the weary hours of the night. You have to drink some bitter cup of woe from which every natural feeling recoils. It is under such trials of faith, patience, and the spirit of obedience as this, you have to submit yourself to God. And the true spirit of submission calls upon us to do this. It is not a sullen acquiescence in what is inevitable; nor is it an indolent quietness which suits a slothful temperament. It is a recognition of a supreme right which belongs to God to dispose of us and all we have as seemeth good to Him. It is faith in a perfect wisdom holding the helm. It is an assurance of a love which is working out the highest good in the best way, and of a faithfulness and power that cannot fail. It is a surrender of self in a spirit of consecration which delights in the will and glory of God. This submission to God is at once our duty, our privilege, and our glory. It is one of the greatest triumphs of grace. It is the gateway into the perfect liberty of the sons of God, and with it there comes the sweetest foretaste and foreshadowing of heaven.

> Still will we trust, though earth seem dark and dreary,
> And the heart faint beneath His chastening rod;
> Though rough and steep our pathway, worn and weary,
> Still will we trust in God.
> Our eyes see dimly till by faith anointed,
> And our blind choosing brings us grief and pain;
> Through Him alone Who hath our way appointed,
> We find our place again.
> Choose for us, Lord! nor let our weak preferring
> Cheat our poor souls of good Thou hast designed;
> Choose for us, Lord! thy wisdom is unerring,
> Our eyes are dim and blind.
> Let us press on in patient self-denial,
> Accept the hardship, shrink not from the loss;
> Our portion lies beyond the hour of trial,
> Our crown beyond the cross.

SUNDAY, March 18. Psa. xxxiii.

HOW seldom, alas! do people give themselves up to joy in the Lord. We pray to God, we commune with God; but we seldom break out into singing. Probably the conditions in which this psalm was composed were more quiet and tranquil than those in which our lives are spent, and so the psalmist's heart was able to yield itself to thoughts on which the fire of holy joy could feed.

Let us rejoice first in the character of God, that He loves righteousness, and that the earth is full of his lovingkindness. Dwell, O Christian soul, on the attributes of God, until the passage of holy meditation breaks into flame, as with those new mantle lights, in which it is only necessary to turn the tap, and the rush of gas causes the ignition by which the lamp is lit.

Next turn to the works of God: the heavens, the seas, the marvels of creation, the moral government of the Most High, the omniscient knowledge which God hath for the children of men. Like as the student breaks out into exclamations of wonder while passing through corridors lined with a master's achievements, so let us break into song as we pass along the lofty passages of the universe, adorned with the works of God.

But oh, what tongue can be dumb as we consider God's personal dealings with us! Let us dwell on the linked mercies of vv. 18-22. That his eye is upon us; that by his death He has delivered our souls from death; that by the gift of Himself He keeps us alive in famine; that He is our help and shield, the source of rejoicing, the ground of hope. Rejoice in the Lord, and give thanks.

The inscription of this psalm makes it the more marvellous. A few days before, David had acted the madman before Abimelech. In the failure of his faith he had adopted a method of disguise that seems to us hardly becoming. For God's anointed to scrabble on doors, seemingly possessed with frenzy, was a sad descent. And now this psalm, one of the most delightful of all his compositions, lifts its clear, sweet voice above the hubbub and mêlée of his life. He was the poor man who had cried, whom the Lord had heard, and whom the Lord had saved.

The man who has experienced God's delivering help, who has been engirdled by the encamping angel, who knows how nigh the Lord is to those who are afflicted, is the one to whom we can listen in good earnest when he says, "O taste and see that the Lord is good." Yes, the Lord is good. Notwithstanding all appearance to the contrary, in spite of the malicious calumnies of men, notwithstanding the misgivings of our own hearts, He is good—good in his gifts and his withholdings, good in his hastenings and delays, good in his forbearance and patience.

> His path, unsullied light.

Would you see that good (v. 12)? There is many a sunrise which opens heaven's choicest hues over your home, which you miss because you lie drowsily in your shuttered chamber. There is no need for you to lack any good thing, but you must fulfil the conditions on which the beatific vision can be imparted to you. Amongst these, be sure to keep your tongue from evil, and your lips from speaking guile; to depart from evil, and seek peace—then the Lord will come nigh to you, and, as in the case of Moses, He will sweep before you through mountain-rent, and make all his goodness pass before you.

TUESDAY, March 20. Psa. xxxv.

The godly soul is here holding the lists against all comers. From every quarter it is assailed. In David's case the foe was probably men of his own race; and often with us, too, our enemies are they who are of our own household. But if there is nothing for you to fear from man, then you have still to meet the principalities and powers in the heavenly places.

It is much to know that God is our Salvation, but when He says it, how much it means! "In the midst of some unequal fight, when heart and flesh fail, when I am on the point of succumbing, when the enemy threatens to give me the last terrible throw, then say to me, I am thy salvation; and my ebbing courage will flow again, and my soul will be strong."

The imprecations of this and other psalms are startling, and have elicited many explanations. But we must remember that David had not heard Christ's new commandment of love; and that he viewed his enemies as plotting against God, whose representative he was. An interesting light is shed upon his dispensation in contrast to ours, by the comparison of 2 Chron. xxiv. 21, 22, and Acts vii. 59.

Let us see to it that we do not return evil for good. Let us go on acting kindly and considerately to those who are opposed to us, keeping their best interests always in view, and heaping coals of love on their obstinate and obdurate heads. There is no need for us to try and avenge ourselves; our cause is safe in the hands of our heavenly Father, who will ultimately avenge it.

The servant of the Lord, as the superscription tells us, is speaking here. His heart is so loyal to his Master that it is thrilled with the bad ways and words of the wicked. "The transgression of the wicked saith within my heart." What a portrait of high-handed wrong he draws! Arrogance, pride, and deceit, like a legion of demons, occupy his heart.

But what a blessed thing it is to turn our eyes from man to God, to see his lovingkindness in the heavens, and his faithfulness in the clouds. All nature speaks of God to the godly man. Everywhere there is the same priceless love. Rivers flow on! Fountains rise up! Light shines forth! Oceans reflect the heaven of God's care! Nature as one great mirror shall reflect the character of God! Be mine the pure and loving heart that can see God everywhere.

Notice the attributes of God, as they are here enumerated. Thy lovingkindness, thy faithfulness, thy righteousness, thy judgments, thy lovingkindness (twice again, 7, 10). It is well when we cease to consider ourselves, our downsittings and our uprisings, and concern ourselves with what God is. Our salvation depends not on what we are to Him, but on what He is, and will be, world without end.

Why should we fret because of evildoers? Their time is short, and they will soon be cut down. Their day will come, when they shall be like the thin column of smoke, which ascends for a moment in the air, and is then dissipated to the four winds; or they shall fall prone on the ground like some forest monarch, whose heart has long been corrupted by the borer-worm, and it falls beneath an autumn gale.

Let us only trust in the Lord, and persevere in our course of righteousness. Be not discouraged that others do wrong and prosper: their short-lived prosperity is not worth the awful sacrifice by which it is purchased. It should not daunt us that, in doing good, we suffer cruel wrong; we must persevere in doing good, because it is right to do it, because God is satisfied, and because, finally, the right must win the day. When once our will and mind are given up to God, so that we are animated by the thoughts and aims which He is pursuing through the ages, we are bound to proceed and to be at rest.

> He always wins who sides with God.

This is the secret of rest. Remark the alternative rendering of the margin: Be silent unto God, or be still before Him (7. R.V.). How wonderful the effect wrought by going into his presence, and compelling ourselves to be still! To refuse to express our grief to man is often the best way of calming and stilling the stricken heart. When all the avenues of the soul-life are closed, save that which opens to God, and when, by a mute appeal, we look up to Him for help, we get calm, and still, and strong. When taunted, persecuted, maligned, driven to desperation, go into a solitary place, and rest in God; be silent before Him, lift up your tear-stained face; He understands the unspoken language of sighs and tears, and his peace will spread through thee like sweet music. Do not hurry Him; He has the ages to work in. Wait patiently, and fret not.

This psalm, says the inscription, was intended to bring to remembrance—Was it God that seemed to have forgotten? The psalmist was evidently in a desperate plight, for this psalm has been described as a long-drawn wail, passionate at first, but gradually calming into submission and trust, though never passing from the minor key. Thrice over David invokes the name of God (vv. 1, 9, 15).

O Lord, rebuke me not. Three ingredients had been pressed into the psalmist's cup of woe. First, God's judgments; second, the heavy consciousness of sin; and, third, his mental and physical sufferings. Let us never lose sight of God in all the afflictions we are called upon to endure. It is only when we recognise Him that we can suffer aright.

Lord, all my desire is before Thee. Now the chief complaint is the desertion by friends and the hostility of foes. But the complaint is not quite so vehement. The storm begins to abate and sighs itself to rest. There is peace, also, to the tortured heart in the memory that God knows all. God knew all before a word was uttered; that, however, did not make prayer needless, but made it pleasant and easy. We do not say, God knows, and therefore we need not speak; but, God knows, and therefore we may tell Him all; and in the telling peace comes.

In Thee, O Lord, do I hope: Thou wilt answer. "Thou wilt answer"! What a word is this! Will my God verily answer for me to my foes, to the accusations of my heart, to the besetments of Satan? Will Jesus answer for me before his Father, and at the Judgment-seat (2 Cor. v.)? Then I may be comforted. Mark the four successive fors, as though the psalmist would pile up the reasons for his confidence.

The wicked are often before us, but it is wise not to speak when they are. We might say something that we should regret; let us take heed. However hot the fire burn, do not allow a volcanic explosion of passionate speech. You will be sorry if you do. Wait till the tempest is passed.

We would all like to know our end; i.e., the issue and purpose which God has in view, and the length of time it will take Him to work it out. How brief man's life is! It is altogether vanity—a breath that curls for a little in the morning air, and is lost. "Surely nothing but a breath is every man, stand he ever so firm." It is a shadow, "a vain show," an unsubstantial apparition, like the will-o'-the-wisp. Ah! how aimless is human life apart from God! "Disquieted in vain." All the treasures which the prosperous man labours to amass must be left to one who may scatter them in prodigal waste within six months of his death.

But why linger over these dark and sad broodings! Let us leave them and cast ourselves on God. In Him we shall be lifted above the brevity and superficiality of existence. "And now what wait I for? My hope—to Thee it turns" (7). Out of this comes a blessed silence. We are dumb; we do not open our mouths; we lie still while He strikes, and we bless the rod.

It is not inconsistent with such a frame of mind, to plead humbly, as the psalmist does, that the cup should be removed. But suppose that God does not remove it? Well, there is comfort still that we are God's guests, that He is responsible for all that concerns us, and that, after all the anguish and effort of this brief life is over, we shall come to the ancestral home of elect souls, where the noblest of all ages are already gathering. "We are strangers with God" (Lev. xxv. 23).

Other Lands.

From America.

We sailed from Liverpool on January 27, one day later than last year. The sea was choppy and uncomfortable, but we seem to have missed heavier weather, which belated many other steamers.

MR. AND MRS. BOOTH TUCKER

were fellow passengers, from whom we learned many interesting facts about Salvation Army work, both at home and abroad, especially in America. The Social Scheme has done a great deal of good in opening the way for the Gospel, in this, following the footsteps of the Master, who healed all manner of sickness and disease among the people.

Our friends gave me a newly-invented fountain pen, the patent for which the Army had purchased for a small sum, but for which they had been offered 30,000 dols., which they declined. It has a syringe inside and does away with the glass-filler. It may be obtained at S.A. Headquarters, Queen Victoria Street, London. It supplies a missing link towards a perfect pen.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY.

Our brother evidently feels very keenly the loss of his friend and fellow-labourer, Mr. Moody. He has been giving accounts of his visit last year to the East, before crowded audiences in various places, under the title of "Singing through Egypt and Palestine." Also an equally appreciated lecture, entitled "Service in Song and Story," which gives a new zest to many of the Songs and Solos because of events connected with their origin or with their history in the years during which they have been sung.

Mr. Sankey proposes to visit England after the Northfield Convention in August, instead of in April or May. I fear this will disappoint many who looked for his presence at the Y.P.S.C.E. Convention in July, but he finds that he will be needed at Northfield this summer more than ever.

THE COUNTESS SCHIMMELMANN

was in New York during our stay there, and we had the pleasure of a couple of hours' interview with her and the eldest of her adopted sons. We had enjoyed two of her meetings on the previous day, in the auditorium of the Y.M.C.A., Fifty-seventh Street. In her address there was no new or strange doctrine, but there was very emphatically the accent of conviction in her burning words, of which the intensest heat was concentrated in "the Blood of Jesus." The phrase is so familiar, but from her lips it went forth like a sword; and while writing I am reminded of the word like a fire shut up in Jeremiah's bones.

I hear the words of love;
I gaze upon the blood;
I see the mighty sacrifice;
And I have peace with God.

While we sat with the countess in her hotel, several callers came to lay their wants before her. One was the enthusiastic chaplain of a Veteran Sailors' Home, accompanied by his equally enthused wife. He was so intent upon his story that he could not sit to tell it, but asked to be allowed to stand. His interested auditor promised to come and speak at the appointed time and place.

Another interviewer was a lady, concerned on behalf of others in a very sad and painful matter, into which the countess entered with all her heart. To her the parties will owe much if it turns out well.

There has been quite a revival in Brooklyn, in which she was taking daily part. There are said to be numbers of ministers of various denominations, pledged to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ in an anti-Higher-Criticism manner; and in Baptist, Presbyterian, and other churches this faithful witness of Christ has given a very certain sound in connection with special services, as well as pleading the cause of the poor and the oppressed. She remembers, with lively gratitude, her English friends; but since the war began their contributions have fallen off.

Pointing to a picture representing her as a lovely young lady of the Court, wearing a valuable necklace, she said: "That was swallowed last winter by my Chicago poor." Her nerves have not yet recovered from her fall into Lake Erie, of which a full account was given in these columns at the time. Showing the extremes of her experiences, the countess spent a recent Christmas Day in one of the poorest of fishermen's huts, and New Year's Day in the palace of the Emperor of Germany.

We are just leaving for Havana, where we expect to spend a week or two seeing something of the condition of Cuba under its new rulers.

Notes from New York.

Dr. CHARLES HERR, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Jersey City created a considerable sensation recently at a funeral service. The deceased had been a charter member of the Jersey City Club, an organization that includes many prominent men in the community. After words of consolation to the relatives, he went on to say that the liquor bar of the Club was, at least, a contributory cause of the death, and that but for that bar, and the habits and associations it had engendered, that service would not be taking place. He appealed to the members of the Club who were present, as to whether they could continue to sustain an institution that helped to do such work as had been done on Mr. McIlroy and the members of his family.

The opponents of Mormonism are by no means resting on their laurels, after their success in excluding Brigham H. Roberts from Congress. The agitation is still being actively prosecuted in committee rooms in Washington. Dr. Josiah Strong, formerly secretary of the American branch of the Evangelical Alliance, and now President of the League of Social Service, said, a few days ago, that nothing short of Federal interference could prevent Mormon influence from becoming supreme in every State west of the Mississippi. They have 13,000 missionaries, in the Southern States alone, busy making proselytes. In this connection, some of the public statements recently made by Dr. Sarah J. Elliott, who has spent several years in Utah, in the practice of medicine, are not without interest as to what up-to-date Mormonism really is. She says that the Bishop of the community where she lived would not allow the Bible to be taught in his Sunday schools, because he considered it too bad a book to be placed in the hands of the young, and that the theology taught the children is that boys will be gods, and the girls will make the boys gods. Polygamous marriages are not recorded, but take place all the same. As Christian people are not neglected here by the Mormon emissaries, it may be well that British communities should be warned of the facts that the leopard has not changed his spots, and that his claws and teeth are as sharp as ever.

The New York Tribune says:—"The First Baptist Church of Columbus, Ohio, is known as the 'Woman's Church,' because the women designed it, and were responsible for its erection. It was for many years a stock complaint, with the men of that parish, that the church seats were uncomfortable, the air was bad, and the space cramped, and for these reasons they did not care to attend Sunday services. But the matter was taken in hand by the women, and a church was soon completed, which is unique in its arrangements for comfort."

Over 600 ministers in New York and its vicinity brought the claims of the coming Ecumenical Congress of Foreign Missions before their congregations on Sunday, Feb. 25.

The decided opposition of the Romish Church to the work amongst the young is an evidence of the latter's value. A ladies' association has been specially directing its efforts of late against our girls' school, and by dint of rewards to them, and gifts to their parents, some of them have left; but our family is a goodly one still, and we rejoice that in the five schools close upon 400 children listen daily to the unadulterated Word of God from the lips of their Christian teacher.

One of these being called away to her dying father, it was my privilege to give the Bible lesson each day for a week, affording me an opportunity for testing the effect of her instruction and general influence over her scholars. It was most gratifying to hear the quick and intelligent answers of several, and to observe the results of Christian training, that would compare favourably with any similar school in our own land. Openings for visiting the parents are abundant, when we urge on their acceptance the truths taught to their children. On looking into a sort of eating-house kept by two who are unconverted, I observed on the wall a large sheet almanack and a beautifully executed text with the familiar words of John iii. 16; thus in a most unlikely place is Christ silently preached to many who come and go.

We had recently the joy of receiving six into church fellowship, who had previously confessed their Lord by baptism; four of them were young men who, we trust, will be

VALIANT FOR THE TRUTH.

An additional interest attaches to one, as he was educated in the schools, where he received his first spiritual impressions; another first heard the Gospel from an earnest worker who labours amongst his countrymen in North Africa. When he made our acquaintance, about two years ago, he was evidently convinced of the truth; but he yet needed to know the deep meaning of the words, "Ye must be born again." Since his conversion, his relatives—who, outwardly at least, are devout Romanists—have bitterly opposed him, but he has remained firm.

After sixteen years' faithful service in the boys' school, Don Mariano Francho has, with my full approval, given himself to evangelistic work. It has long been his desire thus to devote his time and talents to more direct Gospel labours, though whilst acting as schoolmaster he frequently took part in the meetings. He is an acceptable speaker, and his steadfast walk and consistent Christian character encourage the hope that he will be an instrument of much blessing to his own people. I would heartily commend this brother to the practical sympathy of God's people, and shall be glad to pass on to him any gifts entrusted to me for his support, for which I am morally responsible.

With this additional help our great desire is to enter new doors, both in the city or outside, as God may guide. At present our attention is specially directed to a district where we have had a flourishing school for many years, and I hope to secure soon a small local building where public meetings may be held that, we trust, may result in the repetition of our experience in Chamberi, where there is a steady congregation and a goodly company of believers in church fellowship.

For the sixth time it is necessary to reprint the hymn-book that has been a gracious means of blessing both in Spain and America. Sixteen thousand copies have been circulated, and 4,000 more will shortly issue from the press. It contains a large number of our standard English hymns, and also of those so much appreciated in Gospel meetings conducted by the late Mr. Moody, translated into or adapted to the Castilian tongue.

The Will of God is the reason of all his own actings, and the rule of ours; the will of his precept willingly to be performed; the will of his providence cheerfully to be submitted to; and the more severe the will seems to be, the more honourable is obedience and subjection to it.—Thomas Hardcastle (1675).

"No God Here!"

CALLING upon an English pastor in the Riviera, after the interchange of a few friendly greetings, almost his first exclamation was, "Oh, there is no God here!" Even English visitors fall into the prevailing neglect, and pay little, if any, regard to the Sabbath, or indeed to any religious observances. Possibly a few may attend an early morning service (often Ritualistic), but the rest of the day is devoted to pleasure and ordinary secular occupations.

I had only arrived from England a few days, when I experienced painful confirmation of the truth of my friend's exclamation. I had spent two Sundays in neighbouring seaside towns in trying to work for the Lord. The shops are all open, and display their tempting wares to the passer-by. Cafés and restaurants are in full swing, with their nimble garçons flitting about, anxious to supply customers. In some cases I observed groups of men sitting at outside tables playing cards, while others were tossing coppers at the street corner. Railway trains run without intermission as on week days, while vehicles of all sorts are waiting ready for hire. Pleasure craft of various kinds are moored on the beach, tempting to a pleasant sail or row on the lovely blue waters of the Mediterranean.

GOD IS SIMPLY IGNORED.

Utter reckless abandonment of the very thought of God and eternal realities is evident everywhere. Even the workman is busy with his tools in the streets or gardens of the vicinity, and masons and carpenters work all the day. Gambling, pigeon-shooting, horse-racing are the favourite recreations of the wealthy, and altogether one feels sad at the contrast with our quiet English Sunday, notwithstanding the lamentable and, it is to be feared, increasing desecration which exists in many places even in our own land. The bewitching climate and almost incomparable beauties of the southern French coast have often been described; looking at the moral and spiritual condition, the Christian's experience is graphically described in that line of the missionary hymn, "Every prospect pleases, and only man is vile."

It must not, however, be concluded, that effort is wanting, either by Continental or English agencies, to attract attention to the claims of religion and the Gospel of Christ. Many such means are employed, and no doubt good is accomplished. Some Christians make themselves useful by giving away tracts, and in places a colporteur will be found selling the Bible. Protestant friends in England will be glad to know that the Prince of Monaco has recently permitted and authorized Pastor Wettstein to hold evangelical services, with the stipulation that they should be conducted in German, French, and English. Previously to this, no Protestant service was allowed. Last year suitable premises were found in Monaco, and services in German and French were arranged. I have just commenced an English evangelical service at Monaco, in co-operation with Pastor Wettstein, and am hopeful of starting a similar effort at the neighbouring watering-place of Beaulieu-sur-Mer when suitable accommodation can be obtained. Will Christians in England pray for a blessing upon this new effort to extend the Kingdom of Christ? W. Corden Jones (of London).

A Weekly Bible Class has been instituted at the Army and Navy Stores, and gives evidence of a promising future. The staff are regular in their attendance, and the addresses are given week by week by ministers and laymen of various denominations. Mr. William Morgan, No. 1 Department, is the secretary.

The Dukhobortsi.—Nothing but good has come of the emigration to Canada of the Dukhobors. Some 7,000 of these persecuted Christians are now settled in Manitoba and are greatly prospering. Their industry, orderliness, energy, and consistency are winning the confidence of the Canadians. The villages they are building testify to their inherent powers of organization. The Canadian Government advanced money to purchase machinery, and in less than a year they repaid 80 per cent. of it.

Teaching Chinese Children.

THE importance of instructing the children in China is conceded without argument. Accordingly, the Church of England Zenana missionaries have started small boarding-schools in various villages, hoping that friends at home will undertake the support of individual children.

The object of these schools is to prepare a growing generation of "witnesses" to the Gospel in their future spheres—of workers, wives, and mothers; so that in the event of China becoming dismembered, the native homes of these girls may be centres of light amidst the surrounding darkness.

Such a school has been opened at Dang-Seng, a village near Hing-Hwa, in Fuh-Kien province, the scene of the late Miss Lloyd's labours. Miss Tabberer and Miss Reid, after eighteen months, have now twenty girls, daughters of Christians or inquirers. The conditions of admittance are:—(1) Parents are to allow their children to remain for four years. (2) To promise to marry them to Christians, and not to heathen under any circumstances. (3) To be willing to have their feet unbound. (4) To be recommended by the catechist of their village, and one or two of the leading Christians. The instruction given is chiefly Scriptural, as that is, of course, the only object for which they are gathered in this way. This is varied by lessons in singing, writing, classical Chinese, geography, and musical drill. The ages vary from eight to seventeen years, and many have become earnest followers of Christ,

AND WITNESS BRIGHTLY FOR HIM.

Dua-moi is the only surviving child of a family of ten. Her father and mother are Christians, who live on the Sieng-ni mountains. When she first came to the school, eighteen months ago, she had bound feet; and, according to the rules of the school, we unbound them, and now she is able to run about like other children.

Ah-huah has a very sad story. She was bought as a little slave girl, and was most cruelly treated. The woman used to tie her up by her hands to a beam and beat her terribly, sometimes with a hot iron, and leave her in that position all night. She was brought to the hospital in the most dreadful state; her arms were so bad she could not lift them above her head, and she was badly marked by frequent beatings. Under hospital treatment she gradually grew better, but dreaded the idea of going back to her owner. However, this was settled by the Misses Forge (two C.M.S. nurses in the hospital) buying her from the woman, and now she is in the Dang-Seng school.

The cost for supporting each pupil is only £3 3s. a year. Help may be rendered either by adopting one as their "own," or collecting the amount, or taking one as a special object for which to work in class, sower's band, or such like organizations. Further particulars, with the names and stories of the children, will be gladly supplied by Miss Beach, 46, Thomas Street, Limerick, Ireland.

Antwerp Sailors' Rest.—In a recent notice of this Institution, it should have been stated that the "Rest" is conducted by Miss Mary A. Smith, who was connected with the Ratcliff Highway Sailors' Rest for nearly twenty years.

Saved from Rome.

ON the occasion of the opening of St. Paul's Church Hall, Palermo, Buenos Aires, Sen. Matias Fernandez Quinquela, who has now been received into membership, mentioned in his address the resolve he had made of giving up his life entirely to the service of Christ. The story of his personal spiritual experience has been translated by Rev. W. C. Morris, of the South American Missionary Society, the following being an extract:

"At the age of twelve years, I was offered as a

NOVICE TO THE DOMINICAN CONVENT,

and to my disgust I was not accepted, because of insufficient age; but it was arranged with my mother that I should be admitted when I came to be fifteen years old. When that time arrived every tie between the Romish system and myself was broken, and my home was now the constant scene of a terrible struggle between mother and son. Notwithstanding my strong opposition, expressed and maintained with all the energy of a youth exceptionally full of life and vigour, I yielded one day to the desperate entreaties of my mother, and went to the College of San Salvador to confess to a priest. I can never separate from my mind the sickening disgust produced in my spirit by the vile details of that confession; but my object was to make my mother happy, and I compelled myself to submit. But I was unable to continue the farce. All the flooded me, and I became more unhappy than ever. The Bible was snatched from me, and disappeared from our home. This caused me to plunge into all kinds of reading, and placed me on the brink of all scepticisms and negations. Hungering for faith, although I had not dared to hope for spiritual peace, and after having read all that I could obtain on various philosophical systems, I dedicated myself to a comparative study of various religions, seeking among these some fragment of religious truth. In this study it became necessary to consult the Bible, and the Light appeared.

"Great things God has done for me; and after so much suffering for want of faith, I now pray to our Father that the great aspirations of my mother concerning me may be realized in the service of our Saviour and Master, Jesus Christ, for I now know Him to be my only Mediator and Lord."

Among Indian Converts.

SINCE writing about the baptism of Sajan Merji, the headman of the Bheel village of Kantharia, near Broach, our way has been so ordered as to enable us to pass through that district. It was very encouraging to see this man and others about whom we had heard. Some things were cause of great grief, but most of those who had found Christ were standing well as witnesses for Him among their countrymen.

The work of the Indian Christian Realm in that part is mostly among Bheels, who inhabit all one side of the district. Sajan Merji was found most anxiously asking prayers for the conversion of his wife, son, and mother-in-law, who are followers of the Kabir sect.

During our visit we partook of the Lord's Supper with the converts. Nothing more primitive and solemn could well be pictured. Mohammedan neighbours are hostile to the work, and create disturbance, so that it was impossible to have this service in the place where meetings for outsiders are held. We, with the converts, therefore stole away to a quiet spot towards the riverside, where we sat, and the Scriptures were read before partaking of the bread and wine. Nothing of a priestly nature attached to the simple and solemn commemoration by a gathering of Indian brothers in Christ; and Christ Himself was felt to be present. E. Churran.

The Indian Famine.

WHILE the particulars of the terrible famine continue to reach us from missionaries in various parts of the affected districts, it is satisfactory to note that sympathetic interest has been aroused by the brief visit to England of Rev. Dennis Osborne. Rev. Isaac F. Row, who is also conversant with the condition of affairs, is remaining in this country until September next.

Mrs. F. M. Hewlett, writing from Shanti Kothi, Benares, says: "Many starving people come to me almost daily," and expresses the hope that relief may be sent quickly to relieve the hungry people. Mrs. Hewlett works on undenominational lines.

Mrs. Laura Wheeler Moore, of the Basim Mission, Basim, Berar, writes: "In our district alone, over 30,000 are on relief work, besides the large number who receive help in other ways. One sad feature is the large number of nursing children, whose natural food is cut off, because of the mother's starved condition. It is pitiful, indeed, to see the poor little starved skeletons, looking scarcely human in their emaciated condition. One of these, a little girl five months old, was cast upon our charity a few days ago, by her widowed mother. We feel that we cannot turn these little ones away. Those who wish to make merchandise of the persons of these, are wide awake. Shall we be less diligent?"

As we go to press we learn that Rev. Dennis Osborne is to speak on the famine, at a breakfast and meeting to be held at Cannon Street Hotel on Tuesday, March 20, at 9 a.m. Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. Frank Bevan, Rev. Isaac F. Row, and others have arranged to take part. Tickets, price 2s. 6d., may be had from Mr. B. Broomhall, 2, Pyrland Road, London, N. Mr. Osborne leaves for India the same evening.

On the subject of relief, an esteemed correspondent writes:—

With reference to the needs of the starving in India may I call attention to the contrast in Isaiah lviii. 6,7, between the man-imposed or self-inflicted fasts of a religious routine, in which Israel at the time found pleasure, but not God; and that true fast which He could recognise. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen . . . to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house?"

May not the present famine be an especial opportunity for the Lord's people, who have fully recognised the unscriptural character of much in the way of fasting, which is merely imposed and regulated by the commandments of men, to seek to enter into the spirit of the fast which God has chosen? In this we have the great example of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, "though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich." Perhaps the following may also serve as a guide and an encouragement to some.

A Christian, known to the writer, desirous of showing in some little way practical sympathy with the sufferers from the famine, has since the beginning of last December gone without two or three articles of diet not necessary to health, and put the price of the same aside daily for transmission to India, when a sufficient sum should be realized. Some may be led to adopt this plan, and if they do it as unto the Lord they will not only have the extra amount to give, but, as this brother says he has, they will experience his blessing on the little effort "to deal their bread to the hungry."

Sailors at Portsmouth and Gosport.—Established in the year 1853 by the late Henry Cook, the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission has had a career of uninterrupted and steady progress. The annual report details the various agencies and their utility, and calls for much praise and thanksgiving that so worthy an organization should have occupied its wonted position in the numerous and ever-increasing institutions provided for sailors, while at sea or on shore. Copies of the report of the mission will be gladly forwarded by the superintendent, Mrs. Henry Cook, 47 Stoke Road, Gosport, Hants.

The Soldiers' New Testament.

WE recently called attention to a remarkably attractive edition of the New Testament in course of production by the Scripture Gift Mission. In all its distinctive features the work deserves its name—The Soldiers' New Testament. The cover is characteristic, and the preface will carry it anywhere among rank and file of the British Army. The book is within regulation size and weight; and alongside the sacred text, printed in bold and clear type, there are fifty illustrations, which are at once beautiful in themselves and useful as explaining Scripture references to Oriental places and customs.

Desiring fuller details of this enterprise, a representative recently sought an interview with Mr. W. Walters, the founder and secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission. The accompanying portrait indicates the man of experience; a moment's conversation reveals the Christian of single aim and high purpose. As a lad, Mr. Walters found light and peace through a Scripture passage which had secured a lodgment in his mind; and he has for years looked upon endeavours to place the Word of God in the hands of the people as a vocation worthy of his energy and prayers. He has

In course of conversation, Mr. Walters said that an edition of 200,000 New Testaments of this special design was nearly completed, in order that every soldier, sailor, doctor, nurse, and other person officially connected with the Home and Colonial Forces in South Africa, might possess a copy. In order that the distribution might be thoroughly carried out, a special representative, bearing a letter from Lord Wolseley, had been despatched to South Africa to make needful arrangements. Certain it is that such a book, received at such a time, is likely to be regarded with special interest, alike by troops in South Africa and their friends in the homelands—in mother Britain or her daughter Colonies. Having been produced specially for this campaign, it will be kept and treasured as a memento of the war.

We give a reduced fac-simile of the cover of the book, which, with evident propriety, is printed in red, white, and blue. The preface, by Commander-in-Chief Lord Wolseley, reads as follows:—

In my opinion, there could be nothing more suitable for the spiritual comfort of a soldier on active service than this Testament. The size permits him always to carry it in his khaki jacket pocket, and each soldier who possesses a copy will have something of far greater value to him than the proverbial marshal's bâton.

Many clergymen and ministers of various denominations have shown an interest in this undertaking, and collections in aid have been already taken in a number of instances. Accordingly, a fly-leaf will be inserted in the book, describing it as "Presented to ——, belonging to the British Home and Colonial Forces engaged in South Africa, 1900, by the United Home Churches, with their greetings and prayers for personal blessing."

To prepare and despatch this large edition of the New Testament will cost about £4,500. Mr. Walters readily acknowledged the hearty co-operation in this work of many well-known friends of our soldiers and sailors, but he was not able to say that anything like the entire sum required is in hand. In fact, more than half the amount is yet to come.

A remark having been made as to his boldness in going forward with such an enterprise confident of Christian help, Mr. Walters said that, having realized the need and opportunity, he saw no alternative; and now that the book is being put into circulation, he is sure that the money will all be forthcoming.

It was gratifying to hear, that the fact of Her Majesty the Queen and the Princess of Wales having recently expressed their appreciation of the illustrations employed in the books issued by the Mission, had led to the accession of some new friends.

A special committee has been formed to advise and assist in this particular work. The treasurer of the Soldiers' New Testament Fund is Mr. John McCall, who may be addressed at the offices of the Mission, 15, Strand, W.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

A PUBLIC meeting is to be held on March 22 in the Reading Room, Ilford, for the purpose of inaugurating a Y.M.C.A. in that important and increasing suburb. Christian people willing to afford help may communicate with Mr. F. L. Porter, Hamilton House, Bishopsgate Street, E.C.

By the help of the N.E. Metropolitan District Union and of a number of friends, Grays Association has been enabled to erect new premises for its work at a cost of £320. Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton presided at the opening ceremony in the afternoon, supported by the Vicar of Grays, the various Nonconformist ministers, and Messrs. Robert Burn and F. L. Porter. An evening meeting was also held, at which Mr. E. W. Brooks presided.

The Mayor and Mayoress of Cardiff invited leading residents, to the Mansion House there, on the 7th inst. for the purpose of securing co-operation in the furnishing of the new Y.M.C.A. building, which has been erected at a cost of over £15,000, and is nearing its completion. The Bishop of Hereford spoke at the annual public meeting held in the evening, when the president of the Association, Mr. John Cory, occupied the chair. The Bishop laid emphasis upon the value of the institution as a distinctive religious agency, helping to promote the best type of manhood.

Rev. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers.

THE retirement from the pastoral office, though not from the wider ministry of Christian service, of Dr. Guinness Rogers, is a fitting opportunity for us to sketch the career of this well-known preacher. Dr. Rogers retains so much of the vigour associated with the prime of life that one forgets that he has passed his seventy-seventh birthday. He has as keen an interest in public affairs as ever, and it is this faculty that has contributed not only to his own happiness, but also to the effectiveness of his service. He is no pessimist, no praiser of past days at the expense of the present. He has learned the art of keeping young while growing old, by "repose and hope amid eternal things."

Rev. Thomas Rogers, father of Dr. Guinness Rogers, was the son of a Cornish farmer, and had been trained in the principles and practices of the Established Church. Led to God under the impressive influence of Rev. Timothy Wildbore, he decided to enter the Independent dent ministry. Mr. Rogers went to Dublin, and joined the Academy connected with the Irish Evangelical Society. In Ireland he met his wife, and in Enniskillen their son, James Guinness Rogers, was born on December 29, 1822. The family crossed the Irish Channel, and the father became the courageous pastor of a small and struggling Congregational Church in what Dr. Rogers has called "a decaying town of Lancashire."

An earnest, thoughtful man was the father of Dr. Rogers, eager to see removed the grievances under which Noncomformists then suffered; and from his zeal the son derived the inspiration which has made him a champion of freedom. Not long ago, Dr. Rogers re-visited the scene of his father's pastoral labours, and found how truly "the memory of the just is blessed." In his recollections of those early days, the prayer-meetings stand out with peculiar distinctness. The little vestry might only contain a dozen or fifteen people; but Dr. Rogers says, "As to the prayers, I have seldom heard any which could compare with some in which I have joined there."

The only school Dr. Rogers ever attended was Silcoates, which had been founded for the education of sons of Congregational ministers. "The Liverpool and Manchester Railway had just been opened, and by it my father and I travelled to Manchester. On the following morning we had a long ride of nearly seven hours on the outside of the coach. To a mere child (for I was only nine years old) it seemed as though an interminable distance had been placed between me and the home which I had never left before." It was while he was a scholar that, at the age of fourteen, Jas. Guinness Rogers spoke first in public, at a tea-meeting. It was characteristic that this early speech was a defence of a minister who had been slighted.

After leaving Silcoates School, Mr. Rogers enjoyed the advantage of attending a tutor in Trinity College, Dublin, for a portion of the year. He was thus enabled to graduate B.A. in due course, and gained an interest in the 'Varsity life which was of service to him afterwards. It was while he was a student that he heard the great Daniel O'Connell, and he retains a vivid recollection of the Irish orator. From Ireland, as we have mentioned, the family moved to Lancashire, a fact which accounted for young Rogers entering the Lancashire Independent College, on his having decided to become a Congregational minister. As a matter of fact, he was the first student at the College. Among his contemporaries there were Enoch Mellor, Alexander Raleigh, Alfred Vaughan, and others destined to do good work in the ministry.

Mr. Edward Miall was then exercising a great influence in religious circles, and Mr. Rogers was an enthusiastic reader of the Nonconformist, little dreaming that in later years he would edit that paper. When Mr. Rogers was twenty-four, he accepted his first pastorate at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He cherishes to this day a deep affection for the "strong heads and warm hearts" of the men of the North. After five years in Newcastle, the young minister removed to Ashton-under-Lyne, where he laboured for a period of fourteen years. From Ashton Mr. Rogers gained his wife, with whom for fifty years and more he has experienced the blessedness of a home life with ever-widening interests. The celebration of their golden wedding brought many tokens of the widespread love and esteem in which Dr. and Mrs. Rogers are held. In 1865, he was elected Chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union, and his addresses and speeches during his year of office were productive of much stimulus to the life of the churches. It was the last year of his residence in Lancashire; for, in response to an earnest call, he went to Grafton Square Congregational Church, Clapham, in 1865.

REV. J. GUINNESS ROGERS, D.D.
From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W

The Congregational cause at Clapham had a distinguished record. Dr. Arthur had been ejected at Clapham in 1662, and at least two other ministers who suffered hardship as good soldiers of Christ Jesus were ministers in this locality. It was during the pastorate of Rev. James Hill that the present fine church was built. Mr. Hill testified that "a kindlier or more considerate people no pastor ever had," a tribute which was endorsed concerning the congregation's successors by Dr. Rogers recently.

Very soon Mr. Rogers made his influence felt, not only at Clapham, but in the councils of the denomination. His pen and his voice were exercised continuously all over the country in defence of those Protestant principles which he holds so tenaciously. In politics he was an enthusiastic supporter and an intimate friend of Mr. Gladstone. The public became acquainted with Mr. Guinness Rogers as a sturdy fighter, as "one who never turned his back, but marched breast-forward."

In company with Dr. R. W. Dale, he toured through the country in behalf of the views he expounded so energetically. He associated himself with journalism by editing The Congregationalist and its successor, The Congregational Review. Besides this, he was a contributor to some of the leading reviews, and in later years his name has been familiar to readers of the Independent, the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, and other well-known periodicals. About half-a-dozen volumes also testify as to his activity as an author. At Clapham, many young men who have since entered public life were his enthusiastic friends; and on them, as on many hearers throughout Great Britain, Dr. Rogers has exerted much influence.

In the education controversy, the pastor of Grafton Square Church did yeoman's service; and, indeed, when any public question has been raised during the last quarter of a century, Dr. Rogers has striven earnestly and eloquently for what he believed to be the right. Although controversy rarely produces an amiable character, yet it may truly be said that Dr. Rogers has gained the esteem of his opponents quite as sincerely as the love of his friends. He has never forgotten, in the excitement of platform discussions, to be the Christian minister as well as the eager patriot.

It was a letter from Dr. Rogers that led to the inception of the Federation movement among the Free Churches, which is such a hopeful event in their recent history. And it was a letter from Dr. Rogers that commenced and inspired the Twentieth Century Fund which the Congregationalists are now raising. Dr. Rogers's energies are happily so remarkable that we should hesitate to consider these two great ideas as the last which may emanate from the veteran leader.

On completing the thirty-fifth year of his pastorate at Clapham, and fifty-four years in the ministry, Dr. Rogers received handsome testimonials from his congregation and friends last January. He has, since that event, devoted himself to furthering the Twentieth Century Fund, and is also, we are glad to learn, writing the reminiscences of his singularly active and productive career. Twenty-six years have passed since he was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and in that period he has seen the corporate life of the Free Churches stimulated and increased beyond all expectation. The motto of his ministry, chosen fifty-four years ago, was, "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and it remains the sole motive of his life. That Dr. Rogers may still live many years to serve his Master with the same fidelity, is the wish of countless thousands who know and love him.

Divine Discipline.—I have often thought that the best of Christians are found in the worst times; and I have thought again, that one reason why we are not better is, because God purges us no more. Noah and Lot, who so holy as they in the time of their afflictions! and yet, who so idle as they in the time of their prosperity!—Bunyan.

The Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign.

NINETEENTH WEEK OF MEETINGS.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE attendance at the third of the Saturday afternoon prayer meetings (held on March 3) indicated a deep yearning on the part of God's people for a larger measure of blessing; and, instead of fixing one meeting at a time, it was agreed by a large number of those present to meet weekly for special prayer on behalf of the Campaign until the close of the work.

The intercession on behalf of future services gathered mainly round two points: (1) For the multitude of victims of intemperance, a topic to which we referred last week; with (2) a special cry that there might be an outpouring of the Spirit in the West-end, where as yet the work has taken comparatively little hold.

On leaving an evening meeting not long ago, we heard some of the workers making arrangements for a "half-night of prayer" on behalf of the Campaign, and special gatherings for this purpose have come under our notice in different localities.

THE BROTHERS WEAVER IN CALTON.

The Brothers Weaver have experienced the goodness of the Lord in their various missions during the Campaign. On Sabbath evening of last week, an excellent and promising beginning was made at Young Street Free Church (Rev. John McCracken, minister). The church is well situated for aggressive work, in a most densely populated part of the East-end, and the spirit of the workers promised that nothing would be lacking on their part to make good use of the opportunity. At the corner of the Gallowgate we found Mr. McCracken vigorously leading an open-air gathering, and himself singing a solo. The indoor gathering was warm and bright. Among the intimations was an urgent call that none should wait for spare evenings on which to join hands in the work: "You have no spare evenings; NOW is the time to work." Visitors from other congregations and from the neighbourhood were assured that everything possible would be done to secure the personal comfort of any whom they could induce to attend.

The address—subject, "No Room for Jesus," based on Luke ii. 7 (last clause)—was largely a clearing of the ground, to show that under ordinary conditions the same state of affairs continues to-day, in (1) national life, (2) municipal life, (3) business life, (4) society life, and (5) family life. A special appeal was made to Christian parents to give their children a fair chance in this respect. The majority of the congregation remained to the after-meeting, and Mr. Bewley Weaver sought to lead the Christians present upward by three steps to an appreciation of the Witness of the Spirit—(1) Belief in a fact accomplished, reading Isaiah liii. 5; (2) reception of a living, present, precious Jesus (John i. 12); (3) confession (Romans x. 10). "When we have reached that point God, will vindicate his character."

Mr. Frank Weaver's singing of the Gospel proved itself anew to be a powerful means for the presentation of the truth. Before we left, the pastor's heart was made glad by a profession of conversion by a member of his Bible class, and another young woman also gave evidence of coming out clearly on the Lord's side.

IN THE SUBURBS.

On visiting the outlying district of Anniesland we found Mr. JOHN CLIMIE at work in the local hall—where the missionary in charge is Mr. Malcolm Ferguson, formerly of the Lanarkshire Christian Union. Three neighbouring congregations—belonging to the Established, Free, and United Presbyterian Churches—are co-operating; and on Tuesday evening the Gospel Brass Band from Lambhill came to help in bearing testimony in the open-air. Mr. R. F. Beveridge attracted many of the careless by his singing of the Gospel. The neighbourhood is almost rural, but the meetings were well attended, and were pervaded by much enthusiasm. A noticeable feature was the large number of young men and women present. Among the Christians there was evidence of a thoroughly prayerful spirit; and the evangelist testified to a vivid consciousness born in his own heart that the Lord had prepared for them a season of blessing.

We saw the first-fruits of the mission. A young woman, who sat in the front bench, could not go away with the others. When Mr. Climie went over to her, her cry was, "Oh, I do wish I had this matter of salvation settled." After a little conversation, the light seemed to come into her soul in great fulness, and she left with the evidence of a change written on her very face. Several young lads, who had quite evidently come in a very frivolous spirit, were entirely subdued, and left with faces that told, at least, of deep pondering on the Word that had been spoken.

LANTERN WORK AMONG ADULTS.

After a preliminary walk round the neighbourhood, we were prepared to learn that the workers at Lyon Street Free Church (minister, Rev. J. W. Jackson) were finding the Campaign mission very uphill work indeed. Four neighbouring congregations and missions were co-operating, and we found excellent work being done at the corner of Garscube Road by a large band of workers. This was no mere intimation of the service. Ample time had been allowed, and several exhortations to seek the Saviour were driven home by the personal testimony of the speakers.

After one week of addresses to adults, the missioner—Rev. GEORGE ORR, Langholm—arranged to add an additional service each evening at six o'clock for children. As had been anticipated, the result was an increase in the adult service, in addition to being the beginning of a good work among the children themselves. The lantern being introduced for the earlier meeting was used in that for the adults as well (the first time we have found this in the Campaign), and with equally good effect in both cases. Many men and women who had listened in the open air went their way when eight o'clock arrived, but a number came within doors, and the audience was highly satisfactory in the circumstances of the case.

A short series of coloured pictures, illustrative of scenes in the life of Christ, formed the groundwork for a forcible presentation of the Gospel message. Throughout the mission there were continuous signs of the working of the Spirit in the hearts of the people, and we noticed that several young men and women sought the inquiry-room without having been spoken to in any way. Besides the pastor, Mr. Baird (of Cedar Street Mission), took part in the service, and among other well-known Christian workers we noted the presence of Mr. Baird (of the Christian Endeavour Union) and Mr. William S. Connel. Several soloists—including Mr. James Gillespie and Mr. Stenhouse—rendered help in the ministry of song.

The mission was brought to a close on Friday evening by the holding of a praise and testimony meeting. Lyon Street itself is a field of the very "stoniest" character, but trophies of grace are being won there through the efforts of the congregation, and a band of zealous visitors from St. George's Cross Tabernacle.

OTHER MISSIONS.

A special effort is being put forth in Pollokshields during the current fortnight. Mr. McNeill began, on March 5, a series of afternoon meetings, the attendance at which has gladdened the hearts of workers of long experience; and, in the evenings, addresses were given by Professor Simpson (Edinburgh) and Rev. J. S. Stewart (Aberdeen).

The other preachers last week were Mr. Rowland D. Edwards, Woodlands Church; Mr. James Marshall, Whitevale Free Church; Mr. Hugh Paton, Renwick Free Church; and Mr. James Shields, Tent Hall.

WEST-END BOYS AND GIRLS.

Bath Street is remarkable for the number of its churches within a very short distance, and six of these united in a Children's Mission held in Renfield Free Church. In addition to inviting the children in attendance at the Sabbath schools, the immediate neighbourhood and the district of Garnett Hill were canvassed with cards. We found the whole of the arrangements in the charge of Mr. R. W. Henry (Elgin Place Church), with the able assistance of Mr. McCracken, Mr. D. R. Somerville, and other friends.

It was natural that in this quiet west-end street the audience should show a marked difference from some of those we have visited elsewhere, and we were deeply gratified by the excellent spirit manifest through the whole gathering. On the second evening, Mr. John Stewart (the evangelist of the mission) made a most encouraging start with a meeting for young Christians an hour before the public service, there being twelve present. Night after night the boys and girls showed their desire for instruction in spiritual things, as well as their liking for Christian fellowship—Mr. Stewart describing their own prayers as "short, simple, Scriptural, and sincere."

The after-meetings were also satisfactory, about three hundred names and addresses having been taken down of boys and girls dealt with personally. While in some cases it is believed that the children did not fully comprehend all that was meant by the remaining behind, in many others deep and permanent spiritual impressions have been made. Importance was put on each worker speaking more than once with the same children, and thus carrying the work on as far as possible; the leaders having recognised that even under the most favourable conditions it would be difficult for the Sabbath school teachers to take it up just at the point where they left off. Above all, the aim being kept in view was that the special effort should be "begun, continued, and ended" in prayer.

A lack of workers obliged those in charge, evening after evening, to send home all under eleven years of age, there being still a large "class" for every helper available. We spoke to a group of twenty-one boys over twelve, who were evidently deeply interested, and many of whom expressed their intention to write out their testimony and send it in to Mr. Stewart. One girl of fifteen, who seemed to realize clearly the way of salvation, returned next evening with her younger sister, anxious that she, too, should share the blessing. Two brothers of twelve and fourteen specially attracted the attention of one worker by the decided stand they were enabled to make.

The following evangelists were also speaking to young people:—Rev. William Baird, Mr. T. M. Pratt, and Mr. J. W. Van de Venter. Mr. William Thomson, jun., had two meetings each evening in Martyrs' Free Church—at 5.30 for school children, and for older lads and girls at eight o'clock.

Spreading the Word.

SCOTLAND AND BIBLE CIRCULATION.

FROM the annual report of the National Bible Society of Scotland we learn with regret that, while openings for expansion are presenting themselves in many directions, and the circulation of the Scriptures in Roman Catholic and heathen lands is advancing by leaps and bounds, the directors find themselves crippled, through a shortcoming in income. For six years the Society has been using up a reserve of legacies and exceptional donations, but is now obliged to draw the attention of the Christian public to the actual position of its affairs. The circulation during 1899 amounted to 955,392 Bibles, Testaments, and portions—the largest in the history of the Society. Of this year's circulation 551,669 copies went to the great nations of the East—China, Japan, Korea, and India—among whom no fewer than 298 colporteurs were employed.

From the chair of the annual meeting, held a few days ago in Glasgow, Lord Overtoun called special attention to the danger of such a cause being allowed to suffer through giving to such objects as the war funds. There was no liberality in simply altering the destination of money which they were in the habit of giving; and he did not think it was Christianity, or patriotism either, to take money away from the cause of Christ, the Great King, to give it to the cause of Queen Victoria. In these days of sending out munitions of war, he earnestly trusted that, whatever other countries might do, Scotland would not be backward in sending the munitions by which the Gospel of Jesus Christ is CARRIED INTO DARK LANDS.

The secretary—Mr. William J. Slowan—in presenting the report, read extracts from letters from China, announcing large demands for copies of a new edition of the Four Gospels and Acts (printed in both styles of the language, Wenli and Mandarin), each volume being provided with a short introduction, brief explanatory annotations on all technical terms, and words likely to present difficulty to an ignorant heathen reader, a map of Palestine, and a coloured illustration. Mr. Archibald (of Hankow) reported that these books were found to be so attractive that he was afraid to make them more widely known, lest the increased orders should be more than the Society's funds could provide!

Rev. Thomas Barclay (Formosa) gave an interesting address, in which he quoted examples to show how much the value of the Scriptures—when placed in the hands of untaught heathen readers—was enhanced by the forward step taken by the National Bible Society of Scotland in providing such notes, and declared his belief that no more urgent appeal could be made for the support of the Christian public. He also pointed out the importance of the work in upbuilding and strengthening

THE NATIVE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Chairman of the Board of Directors, Rev. Professor Nicol, D.D. (Aberdeen), speaking from intimate knowledge, told how the directors had been obliged to intimate to correspondents abroad that serious curtailments of the work might be necessary in the near future; and moved "That this meeting, humbly rendering thanks to Almighty God for the Society's unprecedented issues during the past year, and for the ever wider doors set before it, especially among the vast heathen populations of the world, expresses the earnest hope that funds will be provided to relieve the present strain on its resources, and to enable it to go boldly forward with the Word, and in the work of the Lord to which it has been called."

Another interesting view of the Society's work was given by Rev. Dr. Laws (Livingstonia), who tendered warm thanks for versions published for the use of different tribes in Central Africa; and, as the result of twenty-five years experience there, expressed his conviction that the truest test of the progress of civilization in any part of the world is the amount of work the Bible Society is able to do there.

A collection was taken, and other sums were announced, exceeding £220, while the Chairman promised a contribution of £1,000. Another friend has since sent a cheque for £400—all in order that advantage may be taken of opportunities presenting themselves for an increased circulation of the Word of God.

The address of the Glasgow office is 224, West George Street (Mr. William J. Slowan, Secretary).

Scottish Notes.

A WELL-ATTENDED mission of a fortnight's duration was brought to a close last Friday evening in Mount Park Free Church, Greenock, when the address was given by the minister—Rev. Andrew D. Grant.

In his latest statement of the work at the Orphan Homes of Scotland, Mr. William Quarrier says:—"We had another call yesterday, asking, from one of the Reservists called to the front, whether we could take charge of his two little ones (only two and four years of age). The mother is ill-doing, and quite unable to look after them. By receiving these, and others such as them, we are doing our best to lessen the great suffering that this terrible war is bringing."

Mr. Quarrier also announces that, as the outcome of experience gained in the Consumptive Homes, Glasgow friends are moving in the direction of establishing paying sanatoria. A suitable estate—possessing the requirements for the proper conduct of such an institution—has been secured, and building will be proceeded with almost immediately.

The report of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society shows that there are now seventy-nine branch meetings in operation, with 1,932 workers on the staff, and 16,974 lads and girls in attendance.

The Dundee Female Rescue Home began last year with thirty-nine inmates; during the twelve months thirty-seven were admitted, and thirty-one left—seven going to service, six to other work, two sent abroad, nine taken by friends, five leaving on account of restlessness, and two being sent to hospital. The year was one of quiet, steady, prayerful, earnest work, which, it is believed, has already borne good fruit, and from which it is still hoped to gather more—even though it may be after many days.

The Lochee Tract Society reports an annual income of £12 11s. 11d., and a total distribution of 25,600 publications.

The Boys' and Girls' Religious Society of Dumbarton reports two meetings in operation—one at the Town Mission and the other at the Y.M.C.A.—with an attendance of 319.

The Successful Minister.

THE longer I live the more I find that the successful Christian minister—in the highest meaning of the word—is not the eloquent preacher, the fussy worker, nor the great scholar—not the sensational sharp business man—but the man whose character is manifestly based upon constant personal communion with Christ. Christian character is the mightiest force in regard to ministers. Be, then do, then speak. Be first, and you will do more by being than by anything else.—Dr. Maclaren.

The People's Mission, Cockington, Torquay, is a centre of undenominational, evangelical activity. Mr. Levi Powell has laboured in the locality for twelve years, and has gathered around him a band of earnest workers, who, in addition to Sunday and week-day Gospel services, conduct a large Sunday school, adult Bible Class, clothing club, savings bank, &c., and the visitation of the sick and aged. The increasing needs of the mission have led to the building of the capacious hall in Innerbrook Road, where the work is at present being carried on with growing enthusiasm. The secretary of the mission is Mr. V. Coleridge, The Hurst, Cockington, Torquay.

Christian Endeavour.

John iii. 7.

NICODEMUS was one of the three wealthy men in Jerusalem, and at the same time a leading teacher of the Jews. Our Lord speaks of him in the tenth verse, as being the teacher of Israel (R.V.) He supposed that Christ's main work in the world was to teach, and came to Him as one of the same profession. It was as though he said, Thou art a teacher, I, too, am a teacher, let us confer together about our common work. Instantly our Lord met him with the reply, It is not teaching that men want, but life; it is needful for thee, instructed as thou art in all law, to pass through the same process, with the humblest, and simplest, and least instructed. For you and for all, there is but one gate into the kingdom, "Ye must be born from above."

It is clear that by nature men have not the life of God; they no more possess it than a stone the life of the plant, or the plant the life of the animal. If they are to have God's life, they must be born into it; it must be born into them. The living God must give his life to the soul, which otherwise is dead in trespasses and sins. We may go to church, enter upon Christian work, and be outwardly decorous, and yet may lack the one essential element of Divine life, without which we are dead to God, and to eternity, and to true goodness. The possession of life is indicated by four distinct acts:

Firstly: By assimilation.—The living body is able to partake of nourishing food, and change it into its own likeness; so, if you enjoy the life of God, you will be able to feed on the Bible, which is the bread of the living soul.

Secondly: There must be separation.—The living organism casts out all that has served its purpose, or is inconsistent with its nature. If we have God's life we shall put away from us everything that is vain, and worthless and harmful.

Thirdly: There must be reproductions.—Life passes on. The soul which is alive unto God is perpetually yearning after others, desiring that they, too, shall share its life.

Fourthly: Whilst there is life there will be constant change of particles.—The increasing stature of the little child, the development of the human frame, the soul which is alive unto God must grow; when it ceases to grow, death and corruption are at work.

This Divine life is in Jesus Christ, "He that hath the Son hath life." Just as soon as we open our hearts and let Jesus enter, we receive the incorruptible seed, and are born again, "not of the will of the flesh, but of God" (John i. 13). The Apostle Peter also refers to this when he says that "We are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible."

We must also be willing to give outward evidence of repentance and faith, and at the same time open his heart to the Holy Spirit, for just as the wind brings on its breath the seeds of life to tropical islands—which, being sown on the fertile soil, take root and become plants and trees—so does the Holy Spirit, entering the heart of man, bring the germs of the Divine life which are in Jesus Christ, and which become the seeds of that life which is eternal and full of glory.

C.E. NOTES.

Seven C.E. Societies have been organized in Beirut, and this in answer to a spontaneous demand from the young men of the churches. It is only fifty years ago that the first Christian Church was organized in Syria with only eighteen members.

The members of a South London society undertook to raise £100 to build a women's hospital on one of their Chinese mission stations. They gave themselves three years in which to complete the task. The money is now all in the hands of the secretary, eight months before the specified time.

Christian Endeavour work in American prisons is making rapid strides. Many prisoners have been converted through its agency, and have gone out to live useful lives.

On the British prison ship Manilla, in Simons Bay, a society has been organized among the Boer prisoners by one of their number, formerly a student at Stellenbosch.

The Baptist Society at East London (South Africa) holds open-air meetings among the Kaffirs, and distributes tracts in their language from hut to hut. It is also most active in the work of its own church.

The Soldier and the Drummer Boy.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

JAMES was a soldier of the Queen, and a soldier of the King too. Feeling he could serve his Master more in healing than in killing, he asked to be transferred to the medical staff. This was done, and soon he was on active service in the Matabele war. Before leaving, a lady at the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, gave him a copy of Miss Havergal's "Loyal Responses."

The book went with him, and on his return he presented it to Miss Perks, at this Home. On looking through it, she traced a bullet track to the ninth day, and there it stopped. I looked at the arresting words.

> Precious, precious blood of Jesus! shed on Calvary—
> Shed for rebels, shed for sinners, shed for me.

There was a small dent on the next page, and I read:—

"My Lord, dost Thou indeed remember me?"

A slighter dent upon the following page marked the answer.

"My child, I do remember thee."

Thus saved from death, this Christian soldier devoted himself still more to the Lord. One day he had a drummer boy brought into hospital whose thigh had been broken on a route march. The next morning he called James to him, as soon as he entered the ward, and whispered; "Orderly, will these men hurt me if I kneel down to say my morning prayers?"

"My boy," was the reply, "never be afraid of what men may say. I will see that they don't hurt you; but Jesus will hear your little prayer where you are. He knows you cannot get out of your bed."

Then he gave the little chap, who was only fourteen years old, some books about Jesus, sent him by Miss Perks.

Now I must tell you the rest in the orderly's own words, copied from a letter I saw at the Soldiers' Home.

"The poor lad the doctor attended to late Saturday night, by another accident in the ward in my absence, Monday 9.45 a.m., making an attempt to rise from his bed, by some means not yet found out, he was struck by a private, and at 8.25 this morning he passed away to be with Jesus. The doctor asked a first-class orderly to set the night duties for the twenty-four hours, and I asked that I might be one, as I felt for the poor boy, and, having permission, I took the first relief from 10 to 12 p.m. I passed the two hours with the lad; and it was a sad and yet the most blessed time I have ever spent. It seemed as if the Lord Jesus was there with us Himself. The laddie said to me with a sigh, 'James, does you think that Jesus wants me home in the beautiful skies with Him? But if I die, what about poor mother and father in Scotland? If they could only see me here they would cry bitterly; but never mind, I shall be better there. Shall I wear a crown?'

"I could not answer at that moment, in the ward at 11 o'clock. I burst into tears; for I felt it too much after attending to such a good-hearted lad—I could not do bear it. As I knelt there beside the bed, I asked God if it was his will to spare the lad. Then a word came from his lips:

"'Father, do look to poor father and mother, and poor sister Bessie.'

"I arose, and as the time came to be relieved, I took a look at the lad's face and said: 'Good-night, Berty.' He answered: 'Don't cry, it will be all right if Jesus takes me. I know He is coming to-night for me.'

"I went away with eyes full of tears: and at eight o'clock this morning the orderly came and called me out of my room from my breakfast, saying:

"'The lad wishes you to stay with him the next hour.'

"As I entered the ward, he looked at me, and I said:

"'Well, Berty, what is it you want, my boy?'

"He said, 'Do stay with me.' So I sat down, and he went into a deep stupor. After a quarter of an hour we heard him say:

"'Jesus, I'm coming now.'

"I took his hand, but before I could speak again he had gone to be with Jesus."

After reading about Berty, who died, shall we not say with James, who lives, and is working among the soldiers to-day:

"I promised the Lord Jesus at that bedside that, come what may, I would serve Him?"

Nothing is Lost.

Nothing is lost—the tiniest seed
By wild birds borne or breezes blown
Finds something suited to its need,
Wherein 'tis sown and grown.

So with our words; or harsh or kind,
Uttered, they are not all forgot;
They have their influence on the mind,
Pass on—but perish not.

So with our deeds; for good or ill
They have their power, scarce understood;
Then let us use our better will
To make them rife with good!

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

On Tuesday last week meetings were held in token of the twenty-second anniversary of the Strangers' Rest for Sailors, Ratcliff Highway. There were goodly musters, both in the afternoon and evening. Friends and supporters were interested, and the workers were assuredly encouraged by the very hearty proceedings. At the former meeting, presided over by Mr. John McCall, an instructive address on the inspiration of the Scriptures was delivered by Mr. Henry Varley; at the latter, report was rendered of continued progress in several important directions.

The Rest is one of those hives of industry of whose doings it becomes more difficult, year by year, to give anything like an adequate account. At length, Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, the devoted secretary, has given up the attempt. He still stands by the work; but he no longer tries to tell its story in ten minutes. Having prepared the report beforehand, he last week distributed it in pamphlet form at the meetings, so we were able to "take and read," and forthwith digest the striking story.

In a word, the report is a record of continued effort, leaning, as for years past, in the direction of steady expansion. If in some degree the sailors are leaving the Highway, there are still needy men ever moving to and fro, and there are also hosts of women and children spending their lives in the neighbourhood—from a physical point of view, in conditions of squalor; from a moral and spiritual point of view, in conditions of sin and degradation. Hence to efforts, indoors and out, engaged in every day in the week all through the year, to reach the many sailors and their comrades, are now added special endeavours to benefit the women and children. The need has long been a "crying" one; and all who hear of these lines of work, combining mercy and truth, kind deeds and evangelistic meetings, will invoke the blessing of God upon the Rest and its band of self-denying labourers.

At the evening meeting on Tuesday, presided over by Mr. T. B. Miller, farewell was said to Mr. and Mrs. George Knapman, who are shortly returning to their work at the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest. Their past service has been very fruitful. Rev. J. R. Wood, of Upper Holloway, spoke words of kindly leave-taking and timely counsel. In the course of the evening, reference was made to Mr. and Mrs. Waugh, medical missionaries, at present carrying on the work, which is in the interest of the Swahili-speaking population as well as the great sailor community of Zanzibar. A brief address was delivered by Mr. W. H. Seagram, and Gospel melodies were rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers from Philadelphia.

The report of the Zanzibar Rest has also been issued in booklet form. The works are financially distinct. Copies of either report may be had from Mr. Isaac, at the Rest, 163, St. George's Street, Ratcliff Highway, E.

The Welcome Home, Canning Town.—Friends and members from various ports and parts assembled in good numbers on the occasion of the March muster of the "Christian Life Boat Crew." Miss Child conducted the meeting. Mr. Blaauw gave a brief account of the work during the past month, and Mr. Blanchard, from the London City Mission, testified to the satisfactory condition of the work.

The Dublin Visiting Mission, during the past winter, has had before it an appalling task. The poor have experienced a season of ususual distress and misery; a widespread epidemic, followed by a prolonged spell of damp, foggy weather, rendered the slums almost unbearable. The sixteen visitors of the Mission have, with untiring energy, gone in and out among the poor, endeavouring to relieve their distress, and influence them for good. Many thus visited and helped are led to attend the mothers' meetings, Bible classes, and other agencies of the Mission, and Divine grace has proved the regenerating power of hearts and homes. Much effective itinerating work is also conducted, and for this purpose the portable wooden hall of the Irish Church Mission has been used. Copies of the annual report and other particulars will be forwarded on application to Mrs. Ellen Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin.

Lay Mission Bands.

In reference to a remark in a recent issue of The Christian, to the effect that "There are thousands of earnest and competent laymen in the Anglican Church whose talents are lying idle for lack of encouragement and use," it may interest many to learn that a movement is being made to bring about that "bright day" when "the embargo of silence will be lifted, and their gift allowed its opportunity."

A Mission Band has lately been launched here, and is known as "The Church of Ireland Lay Mission Band." Already members have been enrolled from quite a number of churches who are agreed upon the importance of such a combination of lay mission workers. "They have resolved, as led by the Spirit of God (after much prayer for direction), to endeavour by prayer and effort—

1. To unite all who are engaged in mission work in each parish.

2. To unite mission workers of all parishes for united, believing, prevailing prayer; for encouragement, fellowship, and mutual help; for inter-parochial lay missions.

For example, let A, B, C, represent three parishes; A+B+C, mission workers, to hold a mission at A, B, or C (that would be a "combined mission"). Our first mission of this kind has just been held, and has been much owned of God. During the six nights we had eight different parishes represented—twelve speakers in all, and a number of singers. Then another plan is for A mission band to go to B parish, and B mission band to hold forth at A parish, &c. Were such a movement as this taken up in the name of God everywhere, it would do much to bring about John xvii. 20-23.

Cardiff Sailors' Rest.

A visit to the Cardiff Sailors' Rest must, of necessity, prove a matter of interest and inspiration to all who are acquainted with seafarers' lives and experiences. One of the most appreciated features of the work is the reading-room. Here every effort is made to make the men feel at home. At twelve o'clock the doors are opened, and then commences a steady stream of men coming and going the whole afternoon and evening. After a while the men are scattered about the room, reading, playing, or writing their letters home. At half-past four one of the lady workers arrives to hold a short meeting.

After this the sailors withdraw for tea, and reassemble for the service, which is held in the evening. These meetings vary in character, and include Gospel addresses, lantern lectures, social gatherings, entertainments, and temperance meetings. But while the services vary in character, the aim is to produce a class of God-fearing, sober sailors; and many bright, active Christian workers have cause to praise God for the ministry of the Sailors' Rest.

The present premises are inadequate to meet the demands of the floating population of Cardiff, which now numbers

TWELVE THOUSAND SEAMEN.

A building fund has been opened, and the list of subscribers bears the name of the King of Greece, who has contributed £50.

One of the converts writes: "Our steward died at Maranham. About two weeks before I was talking to him, and he said, 'You are having but you are holding out good. I am sorry for having placed obstacles in your path, for I want to be a Christian myself, but something keeps me back.' I used to read my Bible and 'Grace and Truth' to him, translating it into Norwegian as I went on. I soon saw a great change in him, and when he was taken ill there was no fear of death, but rather a longing to go to his eternal home."

Review of Quarter's Lessons.

Golden Text.—"The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."—Mark. x. 45.

Introduction.

In going through the review for the quarter, it will be best to carry out the golden text, and we shall find what Christ did for man, and how we are to follow in his steps.

Plan for Blackboard.—The key to this is carried out in the lesson,

1. Jesus Christ is born at Bethlehem (Luke ii. 1-16). He began at the beginning of human life, and passed through it all to death. He understands us at any age from quite a small child, and He wants us to live as He lived. Lesson.—To live the Christ-life we must be born again (John iii. 3). Loving Jesus because He first loved us.

2. Jesus grew (Luke ii. 41-52), just as other children grow, in body, in mind, in character (see Luke ii. 16—a babe; Luke ii. 40—a child; Luke ii. 43 (R.V.)—a boy. Lesson.—We must grow in character and knowledge of Christ (2 Peter iii. 18; Gal. v. 22, 23).

3. John the Baptist prepares the way for the coming Messiah by telling the people to repent of their sins and to lead a new life. Lesson.—We must let Jesus have complete control of our hearts, turning out all sin (John xv. 4).

4. Here we see Jesus beginning his life-work by receiving his Father's blessing, and going through the testing time (Matt. iii. 13 to iv. 11). Lesson.—We must be willing to work for God; He will give us a blessing, and we shall be tested (1 Peter i. 7).

5. Jesus calls to Himself the first five helpers (John i. 35-46). This is the beginning of the Christian Church, now numbering millions, all on the one foundation, Christ Himself. Lesson.—Let us call others to come and follow the same Master (John i. 41).

6. Jesus Christ guiding a soul into the way of life (John iii. 1-18), speaking wonderful words, and telling of wonderful love. Lesson.—Hold out a helping hand, and guide someone into the way of life (Acts xvi. 30-34).

7. The weary Saviour giving living water to a sinful woman (John iv. 5-26), and to all who thirst after righteousness. Lesson.—As Christ gave the living water, as He gave Himself, let us give all we can that others may hear of Him (Matt. xxviii. 19).

8. Jesus teaching the people to understand his mission to the world (Luke iv. 16-30); but they would not be taught, they rejected Him. Lesson.—Tell all around you that Jesus saves. Do not be ashamed to own Him (Eph. vi. 10).

9. The Great Physician HEALING all sorts of people of all sorts of diseases in all sorts of places; none too bad to be cured by Him (Mark i. 21-34). Lesson.—We cannot heal, but we can bring people by prayer to be healed (James v. 16).

10. Souls need healing as well as bodies; all are sick with sin, and Jesus heals by forgiving and breaking the chains of sin (Mark ii. 1-12). Lesson.—Neither can any human being forgive sins, but we may learn to forgive wrongs done us (Matt. xviii. 21, 22).

11. What great love the Saviour shows! It includes even publicans (tax-gatherers) and sinners (Mark ii. 13-22). Lesson.—Let us learn to love as Christ loved—the bad as well as the good (1 John iv. 8, 11).

National Council of the Free Churches.

THE sessions of the fifth annual National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches have been held during this week in Sheffield. The cutlery city is a stronghold of Nonconformity. But since a hundred more delegates are attending the meetings of the Council in Sheffield than at any previous gathering, it is not to be wondered at that the hospitality of members of the Established Church as well as of the Free Churches has been offered to the guests.

On Monday evening a reception of delegates and their hosts and hostesses was given by the Lord Mayor of Sheffield, Mr. Samuel Roberts, J.P., in the new Town Hall. The reception rooms and council chamber were thronged with guests. The Lord Mayor is a member of the Established Church. His words of hearty greeting and broad catholicity were therefore all the more welcome. Equally hearty were the responses from the representatives of the Council, including Dr. Mackennal, the retiring president; Rev. C. H. Kelly, the president elect; and Messrs. R. W. Perks, M.P., and Batty Langley, M.P. Most of the leaders of the Free Church Federation movement seemed to be present, including, in addition to those already named, Dr. Clifford, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Dr. Monro Gibson, Dr. Randles, Rev. Silas K. Hocking, and Messrs. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., Moses Atkinson (of Leeds), Bamford Slack (of London), and many others.

When the session opened on Tuesday morning at 9.0 o'clock in the Carver Street Chapel, a large audience heard on "God's Discipline of the Nations." The text was Luke xxi. 24. The preacher emphasized the sacredness of the national life. God's demands upon a chosen people were more exacting than upon those who had not received the gospel; and his ethical demand became, as time went on, more exacting still. As a nation we shared Israel's probation and its more exacting ethical demands. The true seat of a nation's life was the national conscience, which ought to be Christian. It might be that England would not fulfil her noblest destiny except she suffered martyrdom, which would quicken the conscience of the world.

When Dr. Mackennal introduced the president-elect, every part of the chapel was filled; and the great audience responded heartily to the powerful address which Rev. C. H. Kelly then delivered.

The address, which was in vigorous English, took its note from the year which stands between the centuries. The retrospect was instructive, the prospect hopeful. Reviewing the past, Mr. Kelly referred to political and other movements. We give a typical paragraph: The last has been the great century of the Methodist movement:

THE REVIVAL OF EVANGELICAL RELIGION;

the development of the Free Churches. It has been the Bible Societies' century, the Sunday school century, the missionary century, the Young Men's and the Young Women's Christian Association century, the great Temperance century, the Ragged School century, the Salvation Army century, the Moody and Sankey century, the Young People's century of Christian Endeavour, the Epworth League, and the Wesley Guild, the century of the International Sunday School Lesson system, the century that has seen the removal of many—not all—ancient disabilities of an irritating, disgraceful, and insulting description under which the Christian Dissenters of this kingdom writhed and were persecuted for ages.

On "the Breaking of the Dawn," Mr. Kelly remarked:—We are in for a keen and long campaign, a campaign of many battles. There will be contests of thought, of ideas. The fight, as of old, will be as to morals, purity, sin, and holiness; but it will be also more and more intellectual, mental. Already the deadly yoke of priestly authority is broken, and can never again be put on the necks of Britons, especially if we Free Churchmen are true to our responsibilities and to our convictions, and do our duty. But will the Church be able to bear the strain? Will the Free Churches? Are we strong enough for the fight? Are we sufficiently armed? What of our generalship, is it to be relied upon? Have we a captain—a Divine leader—whose leadership means victory? The despondent say "No!" The enemy says "No!" The valiant, the true, the men and women in whose veins blood flows like that in the veins of Milton, Bunyan, Knox, Wesley, and Cromwell, say

"YES!" A TREMENDOUS "YES!"

Having outlined the doctrinal foundations of the Evangelical Free Churches, the President said: We still regard doctrinal truths as essential. We will sacrifice none of our principles to mere temporary expedients. Next to having sound doctrine taught, the new century will demand right teachers to teach it. There will be a distinct demand for a proper supply of preachers for its pulpits. The Christian ministry must not be a mere profession by which men get a living. If Christianity is to exert the power it should exert, its exponents must be fully abreast of their fellow citizens. The leaders of the people must not be behind the people. Ministerial position will become less and less a matter of vestments, attire, office, or order; and more and more one of character, intellectual vigour, and of highest thought. Straight, earnest, sincere preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ will as surely produce the most blessed spiritual results in the future as ever it did in the past. No church will command the coming century that has to rely mainly on

ATTITUDE, LATITUDE, AND PLATITUDE.

Proceeding to state some fundamentals of the Free Churches, Mr. Kelly said:—We stand together upon certain definite, fundamental principles—for Jesus Christ, God's only Son, and man's only Salvation; for all He has taught us respecting God the Father, and God the Holy Spirit; for the supremacy of the Scriptures; for the communion of saints; for the principles of civil and religious liberty: we are determined to enjoy them and to transmit them. We want these principles to live; and we know nothing helps life like life. So we will live them, and keep them alive. We stand as lovers of liberty; as determined defenders of personal rights. We stand for that proper individualism that is in accord with the healthful democratic spirit, the tendency of which is to widen the scope of both personal and associated activity in Church and State.

We mean all that when we say we have so much in common. But we do not mean that we have no distinctiveness. We do not mean that this great Federation is the burial-place of Denominationalism, that we aim at any organic union. We shall not ask each other to give up highly cherished beliefs; to change Church polity; to aim at a mere professed uniformity; to submit to us for legislation the internal management of the various churches. If we did, we should cease to be Free Churchmen. No; our unity does not consist in a hard-and-fast, a cast-iron conformity of external organization or government; nor in of belief in all particulars; nor in a monotonous sameness of outward type and form of liturgy and discipline. But in oneness of life in Christ; in the identity of one indwelling Spirit; in one faith, one hope, one love.

In further passages of an address altogether worthy the occasion, the president adverted to Romanism, which he described as a "dangerous foe to the religious liberty of the Empire and the spiritual interests of men." The aim of Popery, and the encouragement given to it, call upon all Free Churchmen to be true to their Protestantism. All the old reasons for the maintenance of the staunch Protestantism of our fathers continue and are intensified. With all the experience of long ages Popery has not improved; with all the religious and civil liberty granted to its Church in this Empire, it is still the foe of true liberty, of free speech, of private judgment. In the lands where it has been dominant, ignorance, superstition, and moral evils prevail.

Then, again, with warm personal approval the President observed that during the next year the Federation will hold simultaneous missions. He said: Tens of thousands will attend the services. The aim is definite—to carry the tidings of salvation so as to secure the conversion of sinners. It is hoped that crowds of people will attend the services who have given their souls no chance for years—they have been non-worshippers, indifferent. We hope they will be attracted, that God will speak to them, and that they will start the new century with a new life. The movement is of vast importance. England needs it. There must be no retreat of the Churches from the masses.

After the presidential address, the Council turned its attention to public affairs. Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., moved the first resolution on education, protesting against the injustice by which, in 8,000 parishes of England, the only public schools were those worked in the exclusive interest of the Church of England. Dr. Bruce seconded, and in the discussion which followed Revs. T. Gascoyne and W. Cuff spoke. The latter decried the statement that it was hopeless at present to expect much from legislation; they must fight with the spirit of their fathers.

Resolutions on temperance followed. Sunday closing was dealt with by Rev. Silas K. Hocking and Rev. T. Eynon Davies, who made vigorous speeches. Mr. T. Snape moved a resolution in favour of Mr. Spicer's Bill protecting children of tender years from some of the evils of the drink traffic. Rev. F. W. Bourne also moved a resolution of protest against the granting of a seven-days' licence to the Crystal Palace. The Council was unanimous in all its resolutions on temperance.

Will the Work Go on?

When my hands shall cease to toil,
When my heart shall cease to beat,
When I bring no more the spoil
To my loving Master's feet,
Will the work go on?

Will fresh toilers take my place?
Fill the post I occupy?
Carry on the work of grace?
Meet earth's need with heaven's supply?
Will the work go on?

That which I had hoped to do,
But, alas! is left undone,
Will another carry through
Ere the setting of the sun?
Will the work go on?

Hush, my foolish heart, be still!
Can the Lord Himself deny?
He must work his perfect will,
Thou shalt see, beyond the sky,
His great work go on.

God has workmen coming on,
Each, in turn, to do his share;
When this generation's gone,
Others shall his burdens bear,
And his yoke take on.

Toil thy best in this thy day,
Scatter seeds for after years,
On thy gracious Master stay,
Grant no audience to fears;
Love's work must go on.

George A. Suttle.

Littlestone-on-Sea Convalescent Home. —The benefits invariably conferred upon patients by a visit to this seaside home, with its pure, invigorating air, genial surroundings, and provision of wholesome food, are beyond doubt of the utmost value. To many, also, with delicate health, wearied with the burden and strain of continuous work, such a visit, combined with Christian sympathy and advice, is remembered with gratitude. There are thirty-one beds in the home, maintained for the benefit of women and girls between the ages of ten and sixty-five, without, of course, distinction of creed. Copies of the annual report, setting forth the progress and utility of the institution, and other information, may be obtained from the hon. director, Mr. E. H. Tubbs, 9, Farringdon Avenue, E.C.

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD men of all schools of thought will, we believe, welcome the appointment of Rev. F. J. Chavasse to succeed Dr. Ryle as Bishop of Liverpool. As a preacher of great power, for eleven years Mr. Chavasse drew immense congregations to the church of St. Peter-le-Bailey; but he was much more than a preacher—he was a devoted worker in his parish. Another eleven years have passed away since Mr. Chavasse accepted the responsible position of Principal of Wycliffe Hall. If high spirituality of character and singleness of aim can satisfy churchmen in Liverpool, they will certainly find these in their new Bishop.

The pulpit at the Wesley Memorial Church on Sunday was occupied both morning and evening by Rev. W. H. Bradfield, the occasion being the annual sermons on behalf of the Wesleyan Home Missions. Mr. Bradfield is quietly making his work tell in Oxford. He has just instituted a monthly service for workers, which he always takes himself, and which is proving most helpful.

The Christian Social Union is doing good work by drawing attention to grievances which ought to be remedied. On Thursday evening Rev. H. J. Carlyle, Rector of St. Martin's and All Saints', presided over a meeting of the Society, at which the administration of poor relief was criticized. There is no doubt that the relief in many cases is quite inadequate, and it is right that the attention of the community should be drawn to those questions which lie so near the hearts and consciences of those workers who know most about the poor. It is hard sometimes to justify God's ways to these sufferers, and this is sometimes made more difficult by the existence of remediable evils.

The Oxford and District Sunday School Union held their annual winter gathering on Tuesday, in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. Rev. B. Eason presided. After the reading of the report, which revealed the fact that the Union had been visiting the village schools during the year, and thus helping to foster the spiritual life of the outlying districts, a presentation was made to their treasurer, Mr. Clifford, honoured in the district for his devoted work. As was aptly said by one of the speakers, the Union is doing much the same for the churches as the Agricultural Association is doing for the farmers—it is improving the cultivation of the Church's acres, introducing better machinery, and teaching how to deal with waste products and waste places.

"Charity, False and True," and "The Mediatorial Work of Christ" were the subjects of two sermons preached in St. Aldate's Church on Sunday week by Dr. Wright, of the Protestant Reformation Society. He urged that faithfulness to God was true charity to man, and that the truest charity to those who were in error was to do all they could to make known to them "the unsearchable riches" of grace in Christ. Dr. Wright also lectured in the Town Hall on Monday, choosing as his subject, "Prayers for the dead." At the close of a learned address, he pointed out the consolations of the Gospel, and the certainty of salvation to everyone who simply believed in Jesus. He denied the gross misrepresentations which sought to make the loving Father an inexorable torturer of "the heirs apparent of the Kingdom of Heaven," and implored English Protestants to do all they could to rescue out of darkness those who were entanged therein.

St. Luke's Gospel Medical Mission.—This beneficent agency has again proved a boon in the neighbourhood of Bunhill Row. The weak and suffering poor have, through the means of the dispensary, been relieved and succoured; and, through the timely aid thus rendered, patients have been enabled to enjoy the benefits of a surgeon's skill and advice. The Friends of the Bunhill Mission provide accommodation on their premises where, three days of each week the people flock in, several ladies being in attendance to speak and sing with them while waiting to see the doctor. The secretary, Miss Gertrude Beck, 3, Glebe Place, Stoke Newington, N., will forward copies of the annual report to friends in sympathy with the Mission.

The New Bishop of Liverpool.

THE announcement of the appointment of Principal Chavasse, of Wycliffe Hall, to the Bishopric of Liverpool is one that will afford lively satisfaction to all supporters of the cause of evangelical truth.

The new bishop is the son of Dr. Chavasse, a Birmingham physician. He has filled, with conspicuous ability, a number of important positions in the Church. Ordained in 1870, he spent three years as curate of St. Paul's, Preston, and was then appointed vicar of St. Paul's, Upper Holloway, where, in a crowded district, his ministry was blessed to many. His next scene of labour was Oxford, where, as rector of St. Peter-le-Bailey, he came to exercise a powerful influence, especially upon the undergraduate life of the University, as an enthusiastic and attractive teacher. In 1889 he succeeded Canon Girdlestone as Principal of Wycliffe Hall. In the words of Professor Moule, "he brought to his task a distinguished University record, thorough parochial experience, great gifts as a preacher, high capacity as a teacher, and the priceless gift of a strong influence already established." The remarkable development of Wycliffe Hall under the administration of Mr. Chavasse has been a potent factor in the maintenance and propagation of evangelical principles, and promises well for the future of the diocese of Liverpool, while the fact that he has not been prominent in controversy will serve to conciliate those who had hoped for the appointment of a sacerdotalist.

Mr. Chavasse has always evinced deep interest in the work of the Church Missionary Society, and, at the same time, in the grave social problems which affect the welfare of the people. It is a matter for congratulation, that choice has fallen upon one whose record is of so sound and true a character.

Personalia.

During a recent visit to Venice, the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird gave an interesting address, at the Scottish Church, on Zenana work in India. The pastor, Dr. Alex. Robertson, presided.

We regret to hear that Mr. George Holland, of the George Yard Mission, continues in a very low condition. The prayers of our readers are asked for this venerable and esteemed worker.

Many of our readers who have expressed a desire, from time to time, to communicate with Mr. Henry Varley, will be glad to hear that he may be addressed at the office of this paper, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

Pastor Frank White was, we are glad to say, able to resume his ministry at Talbot Tabernacle on Sunday morning last. This will gratify many friends who have been anxious as to his state of health of late.

We regret to learn that Rev. H. B. Macartney, of the Bible Society, has received official intelligence to the effect that his son, Lieut. H. G. B. Macartney, of the Royal Fusiliers, who received a gunshot wound at Pieters Hill, is in a critical condition.

The late Rev. W. S. Lewis.

AFTER six months' retirement, following on a long life spent in the Master's service, Rev. W. Sunderland Lewis passed away on the 5th inst. He was vicar of Holy Trinity, Ripon, from 1848 to 1868; of St. George's, Worthing, from 1868 to 1881; and of St. Mary's, Hornsey Rise, from 1881 until the middle of last year, when advancing years led him to resign the cares of this onerous parish into younger hands. All who had the privilege of knowing him, testify to his ripe scholarship and his consistent, godly life.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged seventy-nine, Rev. D. Richards, who had been minister of Bethel Welsh Church, Caerphilly, for thirty-nine years. He was the compiler of the "Congregational Tune Book."—Aged seventy-nine, Mr. J. W. Petty, whose name has been associated with Leeds Methodism for over fifty years.—Mr. John Munro, J.P., a prominent Presbyterian at Stanley.—Rev. Samuel J. Banks, Baptist minister, of Banbridge, Ireland.—At Aberystwyth, Rev. R. Morris, formerly Baptist pastor at Hawkesbury, near Coventry.—Workington Wesleyan Circuit has lost a valuable worker and a highly-respected member in the death of Mr. Josiah Raine.—A mainstay in the Woking and Leatherhead Wesleyan Circuit has been removed by the death of Mr. J. West, of Effingham.—Rev. J. J. Beck for the past six years congregational minister at Little Waltham, Essex, where under his care the cause prospered.

Palestine in London.

AT length Mr. James Neil, M.A., is within sight of performing his promise, to display in a central position in London his beautiful pictures of the life of the Holy Land, which he is never weary of reminding us is still, in its main features, the unchanged life of Bible Lands for the past 4,000 years, and, therefore, the life alluded to in all parts of Holy Scripture. After the thronged "At home" at Lady Augusta Mostyn's and Lady Isabel Bligh's at 6, Portman Square, last July, a small committee was formed, with the help of an influential council of reference, to carry out the work. Lord Radstock has most kindly lent the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W., and the demonstrations commence on Tuesday, March 27, when the two first displays will be made (3.30 and 8 p.m.).

Mr. Neil's pictures, most of them specially prepared to explain great Bible difficulties, and all of them designed to make the Word of God a living reality, are of three kinds: First, there is a collection of sixty-four magnificent oil paintings of Holy Land life and scenery, the work of that well-known portrait and figure painter, Mr. James Clark, assisted as to the scenery and flowers, by Mr. J. Macpherson-Haye, and, as to the animal subjects, by Mr. S. B. Carlill.

In the next place, Mr. Neil has a painting, by J. Macpherson-Haye, of some 150 species of the identified trees and plants of the Bible. These are all shown in full bloom, and in their respective habitats—mountain, desert, river, rock, and meadow. This picture has been greatly admired by artists, for the wonderful way in which so much detail has been given without degenerating to the form of a diagram. Where competent Scriptural botanists differ, the various suggested identifications are given, and Mr. Neil candidly discusses their claims with his audience. This picture alone is worth a dozen visits, and Mr. Neil proposes to deal with some two different plants each day.

In the third place, Mr. Neil displays a copy of Mr. George Armstrong's raised map of Palestine, painted specially for him—a most laborious and beautiful piece of scientific work, showing every natural feature of the country in its exact position. It is truly "a sign of the times" that Palestine is the only country on earth (England itself being no exception) that has been modelled throughout, with expert accuracy from its Ordnance Survey!

There is nothing "ordinary" in the exhibition; no representations of Christ or the Apostles, or Old Testament characters. Every detail in these scenes is unconventional and true. Hundreds of Bible allusions start into light—many of them into new light—on these canvases. There is no greater living authority than Mr. W. Holman Hunt on Bible pictures, and this eminent artist after requesting Mr. Neil to give him a private view of a few of these paintings, wrote:—

"These (James Clark's pictures) commend themselves to my mind as remarkably true to Syrian life and character, as seen by an observant student in the land at the present day, and as well calculated to illustrate, as they do, the unchanging facts and habits of the people—to point out the living meaning existing throughout the Old and New Testaments in unnoticed words and phrases. The full collection will be most interesting to the visitors to your exhibition, not only to those who have not seen the country itself, but those also who have passed through it without the guidance of a master like yourself who can draw attention to the instructive points of each scene."

The City of London Total Abstainers' Union continues its efforts in the cause of temperance with gratifying success. During the year special meetings have been held at business houses with a view to helping assistants and others to withstand temptations by which they are surrounded. Many have thus been led to take the pledge. The secretary, Mr. F. G. Toller, will gladly give any advice as to the arranging of similar meetings. He may be addressed 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

About Books.

SCRIPTURE FIGURES OF SPEECH.

BY his latest book on Scripture interpretation,* Rev. Dr. Bullinger takes us back to studies that were more highly esteemed by great expositors in the seventeenth century than is the case to-day. Somehow or other, types and parables, designed to give concrete and picturesque form to abstract ideas, have come to be styled "figures of speech," to the practical obscuration and disregard of those literary forms or figures which were identified and classified by grammarians and rhetoricians as far back as the days of old Greece and Rome. The volume before us, extending to 1,150 large pages, places at the service of the English Bible student the labours of Glassius and Bengel, Macbeth, Hervey, and Boys. It does more: with the fruit of wide research, Dr. Bullinger gives us the rich results of long and independent labour in the field of Scripture exegesis.

This work not only renews our acquaintance with deeply interesting studies of years gone by—studies that have ever yielded light and leading in thought upon God's Word—but it illustrates in a forcible manner the uncertainty of critical fashion and expository style. The more modern the comment, the less disposition does there seem to be to recognise figures of speech in the true sense of the term. Hence poverty and weakness, often imputed to the Scriptures, and more often inherent in annotations thereon. "Applied to words (writes our author), a figure denotes some form which a word or sentence takes, different from its ordinary and natural form. This is always for the purpose of giving additional force, more life, intensified feeling, and greater emphasis."

Dr. Bullinger undertook a large work when, many years ago, he laid this volume on the stocks. There was, first, a difficulty arising from the terminology of rhetoric; so he gives us the English equivalent to the various Greek and Latin names. Then, the large number and complexity of the figures compelled great discrimination, also care in applying the needful tests; he has here catalogued over two hundred figures, several of them with many varieties. Again, he had to decide upon some mode of classification at once simple and rational; and we question if it is possible to improve upon the plan he has followed. He has grouped in the first class figures depending on omission—Elliptical; in the second, those depending on addition or repetition—Pleonastic; and in the third those depending on change or alteration in usage, order, or application of words. There are several appendices on subjects of great importance in Scripture exposition, including (a) the use of different types in the English Versions; (b) the distinctive senses in which the genitive case is employed in the Old and New Testaments; (c) on homœoteleuta in the MSS. and printed editions of the Hebrew Bible; (d) on Hebrew homonyms; and (e) on the Eighteen Emendations of the Sopherim. At the end are well-nigh a hundred pages of indexes—for the most part devoted to passages of Scripture explained and illustrated in the volume, also lists of Hebrew and Greek words similarly treated.

Matt. xxi. 22.: "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive;" i.e., add "if it be His will." Compare Matt. xxvi. 39-44; Jas. v. 14, 15; 1 John v. 14, 15. This is the one abiding condition of all real prayer, and the Ellipsis must be thus supplied wherever it is found.

In Mark v. we have, by way of illustration, three prayers—(1) In verses 12, 13, "The devils besought Him," and "Jesus gave them leave." (2) In verse 17, The Gadarenes "began to pray Him to depart out of their coasts." And Jesus left them. (3) In verses 18, 19, "He that had been possessed with the devil prayed Him that he might be with Him. Howbeit Jesus suffered him not."

"No!" is an answer to prayer! and often, very often, a most gracious and loving answer too. No greater calamity could come upon us than for God to answer "Yes" to all our ignorant requests. Better to have our prayers refused with this man who had been the subject of his grace and love and power, than to have them answered with devils and Gadarenes.

This Ellipsis is none the less real because necessitated by sound doctrine rather than suggested by grammatical structure. Some passages of Scripture are considered under a variety of heads. What preachers would regard as "great texts" are again and again under consideration. The third division of the book, including figures that involve change in the meaning, arrangement, and application of words and phrases, is specially instructive. Here we meet with Heterosis, Metonymy, Synecdoche, Simile, Metaphor, &c. In the last-named category, we have a very useful discussion of Matt. xxvi. 26, "This is my body." Having explained the use of the substantive verb in the sense of "signify" or "represent"—a usage which abounds in literature at large—Dr. Bullinger writes:

In the very words that follow, "this IS (i.e., represents or signifies) my body," we have an undoubted metaphor. "He took the cup . . . saying . . . this IS my blood." Here, thus, we have a pair of metaphors. In the former one, "this" refers to "bread," and it is claimed [by Romanists] that IS means changed into the "body" of Christ. In the latter, "this" refers to "the cup," but it is not claimed that the cup is changed into "blood." At least, we have never heard that such a claim has been put forward. The difference of treatment which the same figure meets with in these two verses is the proof that the former is wrong. In 1 Cor. xi. 25 we read "this cup IS the new covenant." Will Romanists, in and out of the Church of England, tell us how this "cup" becomes transubstantiated into a "covenant?" Is it not clear that the figure in the words, "This IS my body," is forced into a literal statement with the set purpose and design of making it teach and support erroneous doctrine?

On the general neglect to distinguish literary figures, and the mischievous consequences of such indifference, Dr. Bullinger speaks with no uncertain sound:—

Commentators and interpreters, from inattention to the figures, have been led astray from the real meaning of many important passages of God's Word; while ignorance of them has been the fruitful parent of error and false doctrine. It may be truly said that most of the gigantic errors of Rome, as well as the erroneous and conflicting views of the Lord's people, have their root and source, either in figuratively explaining away passages which should be taken literally, or in taking literally what has been thrown into a peculiar form or figure of language: thus, not only falling into error, but losing the express teaching and missing the special emphasis which the particular figure was designed to impart to them.

This book is a valuable work of reference—not less valuable because some sections are of less importance than others, and occasionally the positions taken up may be open to question. It will promote careful study of the Bible; and equip, for independent effort in that direction, those who have entered upon the task with limited resources. It were time more attention was given to those forms of utterance that lie on the very surface of Scripture language; and what has been long awaited has here been produced by one who combines fulness of scholarship with unwearying application to exegetical work. To be complete, the book had to be large, and that may possibly hinder it from getting into the hands of some who would value it. Those who would show kindness to a studious clergyman or minister may be put in mind of this as a presentation volume that is sure to prove welcome and useful.

A very readable biographical sketch of Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, by Horace G. Groser, has been issued by Andrew Melrose. (1s. nett.)

Yet another book of outlines—Tools for the Master's Work, collected by J. Ellis. The present budget comprises over 250 sermon outlines, Bible studies, Gospel addresses and themes. (1s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.)

The March issue of The Bookman is a Ruskin Memorial number of "The Bookman," and contains a unique collection of Ruskin pictures. The pages are of great interest and permanent value. There is a handsome separate plate. (6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Points, Parables, and Pictures is described on the title-page as a volume of "new illustrations for preachers, teachers, and platform speakers." It has been compiled by Rev. H. O. Mackey, and is intended as a companion to his "One Thousand New Illustrations." The selections are generally very brief, and there are subject and textual indexes. Many terse sayings by great men are given a place with the more substantial items. (3s. 6d. James Bowden.)

The Story of Peter, from Bethsaida to Babylon, is a volume of Sunday afternoon addresses to young men, delivered at the Polytechnic Institute, Regent Street, London, by Mr. Quintin Hogg (5s. Horace Marshall & Son). The subject is familiar, and it would not be difficult to recall many scholarly studies; but this volume, which is as thoughtful as it is characteristically modest, is worth a library of the more critical sort. The work is in two parts; nineteen chapters are devoted to the Fisherman's training, and seventeen to his teaching. The pages are earnest and practical, designed to give an extended usefulness to words that were helpful when originally uttered. We commend the book to teachers, and in particular to friends of the author, who dedicates his book to "the dear Wife whose Love and Companionship have been the chief blessing of my life."

Band of Hope workers will find helpful material in BAND OF HOPE OUTLINE ADDRESSES, by J. Johnson Baker. (Church of England Temperance Society. 4d.)

LIGHT AND LOVE (1d. Woodford, Fawcett & Co.) is an illustrated interdenominational magazine. Its contents are varied in character, and contain some bright and instructive reading.

A pamphlet, entitled THE COST OF A SEALSKIN CLOAK, by Joseph Collinson, depicts the fearful cruelties involved by fur-sealing. The publication is issued free by The Humanitarian League, 53, Chancery Lane, W.C.

The "Have You?" series of booklets is designed for purposes similar to those which for many years have been issued by the Monthly Tract Society. (Embossed covers; six in packet, 6d. Drummond's Tract Depot.)

Notes & Comments

THE rapid development of events in the Orange Free State kindles the hope that the end of the war is nearer than we ventured to anticipate a month back. Lord Roberts believes that it is by the help of God, and the bravery of the British troops, that so much progress has been made. The surrender of Bloemfontein, and the flight of the "late" President, Mr. Steyn, will undoubtedly have considerable influence in both Republics. The reception of the troops in the Free State capital, and the loyalty to her Majesty, expressed in the singing of the National Anthem, are most significant. Divided counsels had prevailed in the city for some time. Now affairs generally are almost in a normal condition, save for the presence of the soldiery. This is a time for redoubled supplication to God that He may speedily end the bitter conflict, and that in the rifts and chasms of loss and suffering caused by it, there may speedily grow the flower of reconciliation and mutual brotherhood.

Is it not time that the churches recognised the need of "entering into God's courts with praise," of "being thankful unto Him"? Calls for national humiliation and prayer have been made, and the people have "come boldly to the throne of grace, and found grace to help in time of need." That recent united prayer has not been a vain thing there is no shadow of doubt. Now that God has, in his great goodness, remembered our country in a time of great national peril and anxiety, should we not let our praise be heard? Individual Christians will have presented their thanksgivings in private and in their families. Throughout the land praise should be equally as widespread and as fervent as prayer. "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

Following Mr. Souttar's victory in the House of Commons in obtaining the second reading of a Bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicants to children, comes another in the second reading of that for including Monmouthshire under the Welsh Sunday Closing Act—a welcome sign of some life on moral questions. We have always believed that the temperance reformation, whenever consummated, would come about by gradual steps, rather than by one great stroke. Now that Scotland, Wales, and Ireland are practically favoured with Sunday closing, it will, perhaps, in time become possible to add some English counties and towns that wish for the same boon.

We have sometimes felt that one reason for the slow progress of the temperance cause in this country is the jocular treatment of the subject by its advocates. Very often a temperance meeting has only been a synonym for a light entertainment, with a humorous speech interpolated between the items on the programme. If advocates of temperance do not take themselves seriously, there is little probability that their hearers will. "Gay wisdom" is all very well; but if the temperance movement is to advance, there must be more force and less folly.

Mr. James Neil's "Palestine in London" Exhibition opens on Tuesday next in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, Belgravia. We gave some particulars of the artistic appointments in our last issue. It is a pleasure now to be able to assure intending visitors that the lectures will deal, in popular and instructive fashion, with Eastern life and scenery, as they elucidate and confirm Holy Scripture. The demonstrations will be given three days each week—Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays—afternoon and evening, excepting on Wednesday, when there will be no evening lecture. Full prospectuses may be had from the hon. secs., Holy Land Lectures, Newcourt, Acton, W.

London workers will learn with interest that Mr. Charles Cook is about to complete his twenty-fifth year of service in the Metropolitan Theatre. His labours in Hyde Park have attained a certain celebrity, and all who have witnessed them have admired the devotion of the singers and other helpers who for twenty-nine years have assisted him in the outdoor gatherings. We hope next week to give some particulars of Mr. Cook's life and labours. Meantime, he is desirous of completing the quarter of a century with the work free of debt. At present the account shows a deficit of £70. Mr. Cook's address is 6, Frithville Gardens, Shepherd's Bush, W.

Mrs. Luke, whose children's hymn, "I think when I read that sweet story of old," has a world-wide fame, has just issued a little volume of autobiography. She wrote the hymn, which has been sung by millions of children, when she was about twenty-six years old. Little thought she that the simple lines, penned for the use of a Sunday-school, were destined to live in many a memory, and make the Saviour known in a very real sense to tens of thousands of little ones. It is one more case of God using the consecrated soul to bless a numberless host of fellow beings.

We are grieved to learn of the serious turn which the illness of Dr. Ryle, ex-Bishop of Liverpool, has taken. It must be an alleviation of his natural sorrow at quitting the See over which he has presided so long for Dr. Ryle to know that his successor is an earnest Evangelical divine, fired with a special zeal for missionary work. We hope Dr. Ryle may be spared to enjoy the well-earned leisure of retirement after his exceptionally busy life. He is upheld by the earnest prayers of thousands who have good reason to regard him with true affection.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has been called upon in the House of Lords to justify his action in issuing a prayer for the dead in connection with the special service in memory of those fallen in the war. This, according to Captain Cobham, of the Church Association, was tantamount to an unconstitutional change in the doctrinal standards of the English Church. The Archbishop's reply to Lord Kinnaird was far from satisfactory. He acknowledged that under ordinary circumstances the clergy were forbidden to offer prayers for the dead, because they had bound themselves to use the prayers in the Prayer Book, and they were not allowed to go outside it without lawful authority, which he contended had in this instance been given, i.e., by the two archbishops.

Signs are not wanting which go to prove the baneful consequences of this position. If it is, as stated, that the question of restoring to the liturgy one or two of the prayers for the dead found in the first Prayer-Book of Edward VI. is shortly to be brought before Convocation, we sincerely hope that the Evangelical section of the clergy will let their voices be heard in deliberate, forceful protest. A most dangerous claim lies hidden in the terms of the Archbishop's plausible reply. The power of the bishops has recently been increasing by leaps and bounds, and this apparently harmless exercise of it, not only trenches on the prerogatives of Parliament, but if allowed to pass unchallenged, forms a precedent which might lead to endless innovations in the formularies of the Established Church.

"Clocks converted to chiming"—such were the words that caught the writer's eye in an advertisement of a watchmaker's wares. "Conversion to chiming" is precisely what many need nowadays. In the midst of gloom and sorrow, what a call there is for bright Christians who can advertise the grace of God, which is able to dispel all sorrow and care. Many are converted who yet are far from chiming, and they require the change which can fill their lives with a music never dying, ever singing. Then there is a thought in the chime which may stimulate us. Chimes are striking constantly, often every quarter of an hour, always every hour. How about our testimony for Christ? Is that as frequent as it ought to be? Are we not often silent instead of chiming Christians?

"An unconditional surrender" is a phrase made familiar to readers of the war news lately. The words may serve to remind Christians of what is demanded of them in the warfare of the soul. Surrender to their Lord and Master which is partial and reserved cannot enable them to render Him effective service. Only in proportion as we yield spirit and soul and body, "in full and glad surrender," can He commit to us his work, and entrust us to carry it out.

On page 27 we give a letter from Dr. Gritton on the Paris Exhibition, in special reference to the threatened outrage upon the Sabbath rest. We have also received a letter from Dr. Peake, secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, in which an earnest hope is expressed that British exhibitors will maintain the national reputation for a reverent regard for the sanctity and rest of the Lord's Day. We make a brief extract:—

> At the various exhibitions which have taken place during the last forty years, the representatives of British commerce and industry have almost unanimously covered their exhibits, and declined to transact business on Sunday. Yet the world has not found British manufacturers and British merchants less keen or less successful because they have reverently and thankfully adopted, for themselves and for their servants, the Divine institution which God's love and God's wisdom appointed for man's advantage.

The assumption of authority by the clerical over the lay mind could not have been better exemplified than in the following extract from a letter by an Oxford M.A., who is in Holy Orders, to a correspondent who had challenged his accuracy in quoting a certain verse of Scripture :—

I wish to treat him with the utmost courtesy ; but I believe he is not in Holy Orders, and I make it an invariable rule never to engage in religious controversy with a mere layman. It is for me to teach, for him to learn.

It is this spirit of intolerant contempt for the "mere layman" which has ended in the final breach between the manhood of many a Continental country and the priesthood ; and if we in this country are happily not in that mood, it is because the sacerdotal spirit has been kept in due check by the widespread and deep-rooted principles of Protestantism which have gone to the making of the English character. The man who wrote the above words has need to learn the fundamental virtue of humility before he can be a follower of Him who said He was "meek and lowly."

It is pleasing to record the success of a movement started about a year ago at two of our City churches. It provides a bright service every morning for the crowds of girls employed in those localities who have to travel to the City by the workmen's trains between 6.30 and 7 a.m., and who cannot go to their places of business until 8.30 or 9 o'clock. At each of these churches there is now an average daily attendance of about 150 young women, who, after the service and an organ recital, fill up the time by knitting and sewing until the hour comes when they can enter the warehouses. It is testified that the excellent behaviour of these humble work-girls, who are thus kept out of the streets during the interval, would make a special object lesson in reverence.

It is a pitiable condition of things which prevents Presbyterian and Wesleyan chaplains in the army from using consecrated chapels in India for the conduct of public worship. The Government of India has taken legal opinion in the matter, and now announces that such chapels can be used by "other religious bodies" only with the consent of the diocesan. We sincerely deplore such a decision. In the mission field, at least, no restrictions should be allowed to interfere with the cordial co-operation of the great Evangelical societies in the extension of the Kingdom of Christ.

The house-to-house visitation recently undertaken in South Manchester by the Free Church Council of the district showed some significant results. The visitors only met three cases of avowed atheism ; 4,500 families returned themselves as belonging to one or other of the Free Churches ; 3,800 to the Established Church ; nearly 1,100 to the Roman Catholic, or other bodies ; while 2,000 confessed that they attended no place of worship. On the face of it, this looks very encouraging ; but in spite of these figures the workers were deeply impressed with the manifest indifference shown to religion. Even in the case of those professedly identified with a particular church, there were a large proportion who seemed totally devoid of any real depth of religious principle.

We fear that this only too accurately represents the general state of our large towns and cities. The chief enemy of religion at present is not militant unbelief or open aggressive hostility, but rather that mood of entire carelessness which is so difficult to deal with. Large numbers of our fellow-beings live in utter oblivion of spiritual realities, and are completely impervious to the appeal of all the ordinary religious agencies. The example of this and other Free Church Councils, which are striking out a new line of approach to these people, deserves to be followed more widely. A friendly visit of clergyman, minister, or layman, with a frankly religious purpose, is seldom resented if managed with tact and heartiness ; and this, properly followed up, often leads to a new attitude towards the church and the ministries of public worship, which is one step towards a true religious awakening.

The system of visitation adopted, too, in a certain part of Birmingham by the ladies of Carr's Lane Chapel is worthy of a wider experiment on the same lines. Every month these Christian women visit 3,000 homes, the work being carried out with the utmost fervour and enthusiasm. The result is an extraordinary influence for good in the neighbourhood, where the visits are heartily welcomed and their spiritual influence cheeringly responded to. The visitors have found that the people have three great needs. The first of these is the Gospel ; the second, cleaner homes ; and the third, better cooked food. The first they have sought to convey by their regular visits, pointing with kindly words to the source of salvation. Means are being organized for better provision for the second and third, as well as other physical and social wants, such as better doctoring, and the usual thrift agencies. The success of these experiments shows what may be done by taking the Gospel to the people's homes instead of waiting for them to come to church.

In the interests of commercial morality we are glad that the names of the contractors who served the Government with inferior goods have been published. This is another proof, and a very welcome one, that the efforts of the Lord Chief Justice and the Right Hon. Sir Edward Fry, on behalf of purifying trade transactions, are bearing fruit. Nothing probably is more injurious to young Christian men than a sense of despair in making trade honourable and righteous. Yet we have had in this century many a noble instance of the possibility of a merchant prince attaining success by strictly honest methods, and keeping himself "unspotted from the world."

Rev. S. Baring Gould, in a reference to the convict prison at Dartmoor, has pointed out that the average cost of the prison maintenance of each convict is about £20 per annum, the total amount for the year 1898 being £604,696, and that the preliminary outlay in law and upon police amounted to £8,759,900. Naturally the question arises whether we are not "penny wise and pound foolish" in spending so comparatively little upon prevention and so much upon punishment ; or, as Mr. Baring Gould puts it, "so much to get men into prison and keep them there," rather than in devising means to keep them out.

If it be true of men that they reap what they sow, it is also true of churches. The Protestant churches of France, which were suddenly called upon to do an extra amount of missionary work in Madagascar, are finding this out to their joy and profit. One of their pastors said recently that he desired to thank the missionary society, because it had asked him and his friends for money. Thus the farmer who knew only how to hoard had learned how to give. He said a kind of social revolution had been made. He further testified that the home ministers and Christians were debtors to missionary work, for showing them the possibility and necessity of conversion. The record of work done abroad was, he said, strengthening and comforting, and was the most cherished reading next to the Bible. We heard of a minister the other day who greatly doubted the reality of conversion ; but he surely cannot be a reader of missionary news, either home or foreign. Anyhow, it is refreshing to find that France is receiving quickening grace through the labours of her missionaries to the heathen.

A beautiful manifestation of Christian unity amongst Protestants of all denominations is being witnessed during the Sundays in this month in Beverly, Mass., U.S.A. The same Biblical subjects are to be taken by the various ministers in the town on successive Sundays. The selected topics are :—"The Living God," "The Almighty and Consuming Fire," "The Fear of the Lord," and "The God of Love." This speaks eloquently for the brotherliness amongst the ministers as leaders of Christian thought and life, and should have a great deal to do with commending pure and undefiled religion to those not yet in real fellowship with God in Christ. When pastors can "agree to differ" on minor points of church organization, and unite on the great, living evangelical truths of the Gospel, the influence is sure to spread amongst their congregations. Might not uniform sermon topics be adopted with distinct advantage now and again in our own pulpits?

It is painful to compare the clear declarations of the Gospel—"The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7), and that Jesus, "his own self, bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness"—with the utterances of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Liverpool in his recent Lenten Pastoral :

Continual penance is required in order to satisfy fully for past sins. When conscious of grievous sins, man seeks forgiveness in the Sacrament of Penance . . . even though the sinner's guilt is washed away by the Sacrament generally, there will remain a debt of satisfaction still to be paid to the justice of an offended God. . . . For ourselves, therefore, we should never be without fear for forgiven sins, even though we have every hope that they have been washed away in the Sacrament of Penance. For unless we have offered adequate satisfaction for them, we store up for ourselves punishment in those fires from which there is no escape.

Of the making of religions there is no end, as an American book on "Some Latter-day Religions" shows. The writer, himself a thoroughly evangelical thinker, details the recent substitutes for Christianity under the following heads : "Æstheticism, Theosophy, Otherism, Faith Cure, Pessimism, Agnosticism, Materialism, Liberalism, Spiritualism, Mormonism, Christian Science, and Socialism." Some of these are distinctly moribund creeds ; others have just appeared above the horizon. There is one significant omission from the above list, which would not have been possible fifteen years ago—"Secularism," which, since the death of Mr. Bradlaugh and the defection of Mrs. Besant into the ranks of Spiritualism, has altogether lost its hold as a public movement. The above creeds are doomed to the same fate, for they have no real gospel for the soul of man. One by one they will be consigned to the lumber-room of exploded heresies, while the "faith once delivered to the saints" will steadily march to final conquest. But these deadly errors must be fought in order to be killed ; and the best weapon is a living faith.

The Folly of Intolerance.

TOLERATION of the views of others in things political and religious has been a virtue of slow growth, and is not over robust even yet. One of the surest signs of a true toleration is giving freedom of speech to those who differ from us, and visiting them with no pains or penalties which we may have it in our power to inflict. The right of free speech is one of the strongest safeguards of national progress and greatness. No clamour of patriotism, or even of religion, mistakenly so called, should be allowed to imperil it. Better suffer some abuse of it than allow it to be infringed or abolished. The men who outrage it should remember that they, in turn, may some day badly stand in need of it. No one is obliged to believe what another says; he can refrain from hearing what he disapproves. If liberty of speech is interfered with for one reason, it may be for another. England's greatness is vitally connected with her freedom: robbed of that, her days will soon be numbered.

It is very regrettable that a spirit of intolerance has manifested itself lately in the dangerous form of riot and disorder at public meetings held by men who are at any rate honest and sincere in the views for which they desire a courteous hearing. The debate in the House of Commons on Thursday last served to emphasize the feeling which all thoughtful men hold as to the unfairness and illegality of such uproar as has characterized recent gatherings in the cause of peace.

We are sorry there was a disposition on the part of one or two Cabinet Ministers to minimize the seriousness of the disgraceful riots which have taken place. It is a scandal that a family so respected for good works as are the Rowntrees, of Scarborough, should be subjected personally to the attacks of an unruly mob, which also damaged various establishments belonging to them to the extent of about £2,000. Not long previously a peace meeting at Exeter Hall was the scene of tremendous uproar, and only the belated arrival of a posse of policemen prevented actual bloodshed. A few minutes of further delay, and many lives might have been sacrificed. A long list of similar disturbances has been published, and it represents a symptom in our national life which demands serious attention.

Dr. Phillips Brooks, the eloquent Bishop of Massachusetts, wrote some years ago a fine essay on "Tolerance," pleading in a masterly way for courteous toleration by Christians of the divergent opinions which are held by other Christians. Such a crisis as the present war proves a severe test of charity and Christian temper. We may be sure of the strength of our own views, and yet patient and just to those of others. No convert was ever won by a discourteous insistence on the incontrovertible wisdom and knowledge of his opponent. "Truth is quiet," we need to remember, and truth will ultimately prevail.

The manifestation by mobs of their dislike of other opinions than their own is not so very surprising. It dates back to the days of Christ, and long before He came to earth. Intolerance is often only a longer word for ignorance. The truly wise man is not so eager for the victory of his own opinions as that he may know the truth.

We say nothing here as to the merits or demerits of the opinions held by the Peace Party in this country. But, reading the names of distinguished ministers of religion and self-sacrificing workers for the common weal in the list of its supporters, we say it is shameful that such men should be subjected to insult and personal danger. The venerable Dr. Maclaren, delivering a most useful Sunday school address, was interrupted by the sudden incursion of uproarious students, and had to bring his remarks to an untimely conclusion. The Mayor of Cambridge has had to be protected by the police since a sentence was passed on undergraduates for destroying shop-fronts in the University city, after news of a victory had filled them with enthusiasm.

We hope this unpleasant epidemic of intolerant disorder will soon pass away. Meantime, in private as well as in public affairs, we need to cultivate a gracious regard for the feelings of others, and a humility as to the expression of our own opinions.

Rifts in the Cloud.—IV.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

THE GATEWAY OF HEAVEN.

"He that believeth in Me shall never die." "I have a desire to depart—to be with Christ, which is far better." "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

DEATH is often called the King of Terrors, and even in the Word of God he is called "the last enemy." Death is the fruit of sin, and "the sting of death is sin." We instinctively shrink from death and all its natural associations, but within the veil there are other associations which awaken apprehension and dread. Bishop Heber well describes this feeling and its cause:

To dream through life a gaudy dream
Of pride, and pomp, and luxury,
Till wakened by the nearer gleam
Of burning, boundless agony;
To meet o'er soon our angry King,
Whose love we passed unheeded by,
O Death, this is thy deadly sting!
And this, O grave, thy victory!

Peter Damian also gives this powerful description of the same thing:

Fleshly lusts of fancied sweetness
Are converted into gall,
When on brief and empty pleasure
Everlasting dolours fall;
Then what late appeared so mighty,
Oh, how infinitely small!

How wondrous, then, must be the grace that can change the whole aspect of things, and by a spiritual transfiguration turn the gloom to glory. Yet this is the triumphant note of the Gospel. "We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Dr. E. R. Conder has well expressed this thought thus:—

We know! We know!
We follow One who passed the gate, and then,
Reclad in flesh, came back and talk'd with men.
Through the once silent darkness voices clear
Ring out—"The Lord is risen; He is not here!"
But where He passed the heavens are still aglow.
Therefore we know! We know!

How many are the songs of triumph which that one victory has called to life! How sweet the light which streams across the grave through the opened heavens, through which the risen Lord ascended to glory! Bishop Heber, after describing the rising and setting sun, thus applies it:—

Just such is the Christian, his course he begins,
Like the sun in a mist, while he mourns for his sins,
And melts into tears; then he breaks out and shines,
And travels his heavenly way.
But when he comes nearer to finish his race,
Like a fine setting sun, he looks richer in grace;
And gives a sure hope at the end of his days,
Of rising in brighter array.

Rev. J. Conder also speaks thus of the believer's entrance into rest:

Angels, let the ransomed stranger
In your tender care be blest,
Hoping, trusting, free from danger,
Till the trumpet end her rest.
Blessed fold, no foe can enter,
And no friend departeth thence.
Jesus is their sun, their centre,
And their shield, Omnipotence.

How many souls have also rejoiced in the lines of Dr. Watts:

There is a land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign;
Infinite day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain.

Yearning souls have often breathed forth their longings in the words of Dickson's sweet hymn:

Jerusalem, my happy home;
Name ever dear to me.
When shall my labours have an end
In joy and peace and thee?

Why should I shrink from pain and woe,
Or feel at death dismay?
I've Canaan's goodly land in view,
And realms of endless day.

Or else, with Montgomery, they have sung:

For ever with the Lord!
Amen, so let it be:
Life from the dead is in that word—
'Tis immortality.
My thirsty spirit faints
To reach the land I love,
The bright inheritance of saints—
Jerusalem above.

What a glowing description Bunyan gives of the gateway of heaven, which Dr. Arnold said he could never venture to read aloud. I give a slightly condensed quotation.

After crossing the river, "the shining ones met them and said, 'We are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation.' The talk they had with them was about the glory of the place, who told them that the beauty and glory of it was inexpressible. 'There,' said they, 'is Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, the innumerable company of angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. You are going to the Paradise of God, wherein you shall see the tree of life, and eat the fruits thereof; you shall have white robes given you, and your walk and talk shall be with the King all the days of Eternity.'

"Now, as they drew near the gate, a company of the heavenly host came out to meet them, to whom it was said by the shining ones, 'These are the men who have loved our Lord, and forsaken all for his holy name.' Then the heavenly host gave a great shout, saying, 'Blessed are they that are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb.' There came out also some of the King's trumpeters to meet them, who with melodious voices made even the heavens to echo with their sound. This done, they compassed them round on every side, so that the very sight was to them as if heaven itself was come down to meet them. And now were these two men, as it were, in heaven before they came at it, being swallowed up with the sight of angels, and with hearing their melodious notes. Here also they had the City itself in view, and thought they heard all the bells ring to welcome them. Oh! by what tongue or pen can their glorious joy be expressed!

"Now I saw in my dream that these two men went in at the gate; and lo! as they entered, they were transfigured, and they had raiment put on that shone like gold. There were those also that met them with harps and crowns, and gave them to them. Then all the bells in the City rang again for joy, and it was said to them, 'Enter ye into the joy of our Lord.'

"Now just as the gates were opened to let in the men, I looked in after them, and behold the City shone like the sun; the streets also were paved with gold; and the men had crowns on their heads, palms in their hands, and golden harps to sing praises withal. After that, they shut up the gates; which, when I had seen, I wished myself among them."

True and precious are the words of Jesus: "He that believeth in Me shall never die." Death is the gateway of heaven.

Passing out of the shadow
Into a purer light;
Stepping behind the curtain,
Getting a clearer sight.

Passing out of the shadow
Into eternal day;
Why do we call it dying,
This sweet going away?

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, March 25. Psa. xl.

IT is impossible to tell what the "pit of noise" to which the Psalmist refers in v. 2, stands for. Evidently he had been passing through a time in which the hatred and antagonism of his enemies had reached a climax. They had sought to destroy his soul. In the midst of all this, he had waited patiently for the Lord, believing that He would make no tarrying, but that in the fourth watch of the night He would appear. This is the true attitude for us all; however poor and needy, the Lord thinks upon us, and brings us up from the horrible pit, to set our feet upon a rock.

In the meanwhile, let us be sure to follow that line of conduct which is suggested in the sixth and following verses. Originally they were spoken of the Psalmist, but evidently there was a meaning in them which could not be exhausted by his experiences. In their true intention they refer to Christ, as we learn from Heb. x. We cannot thank God enough for having rescued us, and filled our mouth with songs. But the best expression of our thanks will be yielded, not in sacrifice and offering, not in penance and charity, but in a consecration of our life to do his will.

Happy the soul that can say with the Psalmist, "Mine ears hast Thou opened." Whether that expression refers to the putting back the long hair which covered the ear, that the least whisper might be caught, or to the boring the ear to the doorpost, as in the old Hebrew ceremony (Ex. xxi.), it describes the attitude of a reverent and obedient spirit. If we choose God's will, we shall presently delight in it.

It was a season of bodily suffering. The psalmist was prone on a couch of languishing; his discomfort was increased by the consciousness of guilt, and aggravated by the ingratitude of friends, and the calumny of foes. His enemies spoke evil against him, wondering when he would die and his name perish. They gloated over his misfortunes. Under such conditions he began to ask with new desire for healing: "Heal my soul, for I have sinned against Thee." "Have mercy upon me, and raise me up."

How suitable is this prayer for us all, "Heal my soul, for it is stricken with many diseases." John describes our Lord's miracles as signs, because each one sets forth an ailment of the inner life, and the Divine method of treatment. Some blind, some paralysed, some on the verge of death—the Great Physician is bending over us. By faith let us derive healing virtue as we touch the hem of his garment.

The Lord Jesus referred v. 9 to Judas, except the clause about trusting; for from the first He had been aware of the untrustworthiness of the traitor. But what comfort there is in turning from faithless friends and persistent foes to the Divine vindication! He who vindicated Abel, whilst his blood was yet warm, has done as much for all his murdered and misunderstood saints; and He will set them before his face for ever in that world where they see eye to eye, and are face to face with faithfulness that cannot forget, a truth that cannot deceive, a love which cannot misunderstand.

We all get to "the land of Jordan" sometimes, with its distance from the scenes of happy fellowship with God's believing people. It may be the sick chamber, or the long and distant journey, or the call to dwell among the heathen for his missionary work. At these times, what a halo of interest circles around the blessed past. The throng of reverent worshippers, the holy days, the burst of joy and praise from thousands of voices—ah, with what new interest do these appeal to us!

In addition to isolation from the blessed convocations of God's saints, we may have to experience the taunts and hatred of his foes. They are like a sword in our bones. They say continually, "Where is thy God?" Then it is that deep calls unto deep, and that the soul resembles a tempest-driven ship, her sails torn to ribbons, her masts snapped, the water pouring over her decks, her timbers creaking and letting water, whilst above is a dark and stormy sky, and the wind blows a hurricane. We are in woful case when the deep without calls to the deep within, and, joining hands, they threaten to overwhelm.

Then we turn to the living God, who is also the God of our life (vv. 2 and 8). We pant for the revelation of his face. We thirst for the sensible enjoyment of his presence. What is this that steals in upon my heart, soothing it amid the drenching tears, the rush of the storm? It is the sweet minstrelsy of Hope. Let us listen to her song: Yet the Lord shall command his lovingkindness in the day-time, and in the night his song. God hath commanded her to sing his song. O my soul, I bid thee hope, not in a turn of the tide, not in the necessary advent of dawn, but in God, my God.

We must distinguish between our standing and our experience, between our position and our condition. It is impossible to think that God can ever cast us off. We are bound up in his love and life, for are we not joined to Him in the indissoluble bonds of his covenant? But we may lose the sensible enjoyment of his presence, and our circumstances may appear to be drifting us whither they will, apart from his guidance or control. Yet God is, all the while, waiting to be gracious. He is holding Himself ready to intervene at the precise hour when his help will aid us most—then his light and truth will be seen proceeding forth from his presence, like twin angels to bring us to his holy hill.

Count God your exceeding joy. Even in moments of darkness and depression, dare to say of Him, "God, my exceeding joy." Even in the darkest hour, dare to touch the strings of your harp, and say, "God, my God." Sometimes the voice of praise and hope will kindle our heart again to hope and song. Joy is much more the result of our choice and will than we are sometimes disposed to think. There is always something to praise God for. He always leaves more than He takes. He always contrives alleviations for the darkest, saddest lot. He is always there Himself, with all the fulness of his strength and salvation. Look to Him, for He is the health of thy countenance. Just as the body, when it rests and eats and exercises rightfully, becomes healthy, the bloom and hue of health is seen on the cheek, so when the soul finds its all in God, it becomes healthy—there is a flush, a glow, a hue of health, which reveals the health within. Hope then in God!

In darkest shades, if He appear,
My dawning is begun;
He is my soul's bright morning star,
And He my rising sun.

THURSDAY, March 29. Psa. xliv.

In the first paragraph of this Psalm (vv. 1-8) we have an exact delineation of the method of the best kind of life. We do not get the land in possession by our own sword. Fighting will not help us, nor wrestling, nor anxiety. There is a sense in which praying will not bring us thither. Nothing but simple faith in the living Saviour—in his right hand, his arm, and the light of his countenance. Through Him we push down our adversaries; through his Name we tread under the serried ranks of our foes. Again and again I am asked for the secret of victory. Why do you fail? Surely you have not yet come to an end of yourself, you have not sunk down at the feet of the Son of God in absolute helplessness and dependence, you have not died to your own righteousness that you might receive God's. This will cause failure, until, like Job, you are stripped of all creature help, and hand over the entire responsibility of making you a victor, and a saint, to Him who loves you.

But what a contrast in the closing paragraph (9-26). Disaster and defeat had followed on each other's heels, and all the outlook and prospect of the land had become overcast. How true this is in the history of the soul! Times of failure and sin befal us, to our unutterable anguish. We may suppose that the cause is traceable to some apathy on God's side. But it is not so. He has not forgotten or forsaken. His eye has not slumbered, nor his strong hand become paralysed. The failure is due to some lapse in our faith and earnestness. Our steps, unlike the psalmist's, have declined from his way, and we have spread out our hands to strange and foreign help. Would that our conscience were as clear on such matters as the psalmist's was. But if the water is low in the lake, there has been some silting up in the channel, so that the gracious help of God is shut off.

The margin of v. 1 tells us that the psalmist's work was "for a king." This ode was probably composed for the marriage-day of Solomon, but it has a far wider import. There is only one that can be described as fairer than the children of men, whose lips drop with grace, and who rides in majesty. The quotation of vv. 6, 7 in Heb. i. proves beyond controversy the Messianic reference. It is the Son of God who is the centre picture in this tableau. His garments smell of sweet spices; his arrows are sharp in the heart of his foes. Oh that He would ascend his triumphal car, and ride forth in truth, meekness, and righteousness.

Christ's bridal is with his Church. She stands at his right hand, having forgotten her people and left her father's house. If thy soul is included in the limits of the Church, as it may be by a living faith in Christ, you must be all-glorious within; your clothing must be inwrought with the gold of a Divine Saviour; you must know something of the joy and gladness with which the nuptials are celebrated, you must enter into the presence of the great Bridegroom of loyal hearts, for thy Maker is thy husband, the Lord of Hosts is his Name.

What a blessing it is for a family when children succeed to fathers, and they become princes. One great end of the family life is the creation of a godly seed. The Church on earth is constantly being replenished by the children of pious homes, and the pulpits filled with sons of the manse. So, shall the name of Jesus be borne forward to coming generations. The torch of testimony shall pass from hand to hand. One generation shall declare to another his righteous acts, that to the utmost bounds of of time his name should be continued, as the one means by which salvation is brought to those that believe.

SATURDAY, March 31. Psa. xlvi.

THE STORM (1-3); the mountains that root themselves below the ocean surface tremble. Is it that volcanic fires are burning in their heart? In any case the waters break with fury, they roar, and seethe, returning on the mountains with terrible reverberation. Such storms visit our world when the most stable things are affected, when it seems as though God is saying, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn." All that is capable of oscillation shall feel the tremors. At such an hour, when men's hearts misgive them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth, God is a sure harbour. Put Him between thyself and everything, let thy life be hidden with Christ in God.

THE RIVER (4-7). If the first verses describe the onslaught of Sennacherib, these dwell on the glorious Lord, as a place of broad rivers and streams (Isa. xxxiii., 21). During that invasion, the great want of Jerusalem was a river to intercept the foe, and supply the citizens with water. But amid the great cities of the world, Jerusalem was singularly destitute of a river. Thebes and Nineveh were founded on rivers; for Jerusalem there was none; and the poet-prophet suggests that God Himself would be everything a river provided. God always completes our need.

THE CALM (8-11). The storm has spent itself. God has helped as the morning broke (5, marg.). Sennacherib's army strews the ground like withered leaves. Be still then, and know that the Lord is God. It is only when the heart is still from alarm, in God's secret place, that it can know all that He is prepared to do and be.

The Glasgow Campaign.

A TIME OF REAPING.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Prayer Meeting on Saturday, March 10, was almost entirely a time of thanksgiving. From the East End especially this was marked. Three friends poured out their praises for what the Lord had wrought in the Gallowgate district. From Kelvinside there came tidings of large gatherings, in which the Spirit of God was manifestly working, and from Pollokshields the same story was told.

There was a lack of any statement of plans for the coming days which would have led to greater definiteness of intercession, but it was evident that such a meeting was highly valued by the workers. The great mass of the helpers are unable to avail themselves of the daily gathering at noon, and no central meeting out of business hours was held during the early months of the Campaign. The attendances on these four Saturdays should lead to the continuance of the privilege so long as the Campaign and any extensions of it may be continued.

THE CENTRAL DISTRICT.

The special effort is being vigorously prosecuted at the Tent Hall, where Mr. J. W. GALLETLY (in room of Mr. James Shields laid, aside by illness) took up work among adults during the last two weeks. After a good beginning on the Sabbath evening, the meetings continued satisfactory throughout. Careless and thoughtless people were found coming, who certainly could not themselves have explained why; and every evening some remained to be spoken with. There was no effort to force matters to an issue; yet bright cases of conversion gladdened the hearts of God's people. On the second Sabbath we heard Mr. Galletly preach on "The Reasonableness of the New Birth" (John iii. 7); and close attention was given while it was being conclusively shown, from different points of view, that unregenerate human nature could not, under any circumstances, enter the kingdom of heaven.

REV. W. R. MOWLL (BRIXTON).

In the Western Division, the centre of work was St. Silas' Episcopal Church (Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas, incumbent), the missioner being Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton, London. In addition to the evening service a Bible-reading was given every afternoon, an opportunity much enjoyed by those unable to attend evening services.

From the outset the missioner gave a systematic course of instruction on the place of the sinner before God—"condemned already." Making the third chapter of Romans—"the great levelling chapter"—the basis of his earlier discourses, he examined, on Sabbath evening, two charges by which the guilt is proved—(1) godlessness, (2) the love of money. Then, on later evenings, he passed on to (3) unprofitableness, which he applied specially to the neglect by Christians of the opportunity of serving God through the special services of the Campaign; and (4) unbelief, which is calling God a liar—"the sin which is extolled as a virtue to-day."

There was felt to be great power in the gatherings, and many Christians were praying and watching for the working of God's Spirit.

MR. ROWLAND D. EDWARDS.

The work in the North-Western District is now going on at North Woodside Free Church (Rev. Mr. Weatherhead). There is an enormous population in the district, and the mission began in such hearty fashion that the evangelist (Mr. ROWLAND D. EDWARDS) felt there was promise of much blessing. "Droppings" have been granted, and as we go to press God's people are crying out for "showers." Here, as in several other districts, there is a decided feeling that as the Campaign draws to a close a time of greater reaping is beginning. The district is well provided with faithful open-air workers, and by song and testimony the Gospel is reaching a very large number of the inhabitants. The expectancy in the hearts of Christians was touchingly manifested by the way in which mothers brought requests for prayer on behalf of their children, and others for their dear ones.

It was among the respectable and correct that the work here had to be done, and Mr. Edwards set himself to unmask the condition of those who believed they "had never done anybody any harm," but were still unsaved. He insisted on the point that "not only have all sinned, but all sin is against God." The Word has been blessed, and heart-searching foundation work is being done, which, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, will bear fruit for many days to come.

MR. M'NEILL AT KELVINSIDE.

General satisfaction is felt at the outcome of Mr. McNeill's evening services at Kelvinside Free Church, where a deep impression has been created among many who seldom come under the influence of evangelistic work. During the opening week the evangelist appeared to be doubtful as to the message reaching the hearts of his hearers, but a note of triumph appeared in his preaching as the days passed. An invitation to any who wished further light on their spiritual difficulties was always accepted. Some of the cases were of a most interesting character—clear and decided, coming out on the Lord's side. During the second week a short series of addresses on "The Passover" was made the occasion of much simple and plain teaching on the place of sacrifice in the plan of salvation.

IN THE EAST-END.

The work in the East-end has been very gratifying. The Brothers Weaver have brought to a close a fruitful mission at Young Street Free Church. The force of the work grew as it went along. On Monday of the second week fifteen persons voluntarily remained to inquire more about salvation, and on the following evenings such numbers as thirteen, eight, and fourteen fell to be dealt with. Every kind of ecclesiastical connection was represented, while a good proportion could lay claim to none at all. Every grade of society was there, and every period of life from childhood to age. On one evening the men were specially touched; on the next, women only were in the room.

Towards the close, a special address was given to those who had been burdened and struggling during the mission. During the fortnight, interesting dinner-hour meetings were held in connection with one of the great factories. The open-air meetings are known to have attracted several casual passers-by, who professed to trust the Lord before they left.

Mr. Hugh Paton has been making a special effort to reach the workers at the Dead Meat Market.

SOUTH OF THE RIVER CLYDE.

The fortnight has been marked by a special effort in Pollokshields, where the mission assumed the appearance of a Convention. Every afternoon an address was given in the Free Church by Rev. JOHN MCNEILL; while in the evenings the speakers were Professor Simpson, Rev. J. S. Stewart, Rev. Dr. Hood Wilson, Rev. W. M. Clow, and Rev. Robert Campbell.

On the closing Friday evening, Mr. Clow's subject was John v. 40, from which he showed that the deepest longing of every man is for "life that will never weary," and pointed to Jesus as the only source of it. "Coming to Jesus" was defined as accepting (1) his message, (2) his mercy, and (3) his mastership. "Great as are the others, for delight, power, and felicity there is none to touch the third." This closing address was mainly an appeal to those who had accepted the first two, "to complete the process of coming."

Bibles Wanted.—In connection with the Working Men's Mission, Collingwood Street, New Cut, London, S.E., the Brothers Young ask for gifts of Bibles for the use of their large school, which numbers over 500 children. The school funds are exhausted. Communications may be addressed: Messrs. T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson Square, Blackfriars Road, London, S.E.

Scottish Notes.

THE Glasgow City Mission has now a staff numbering thirty, who, in addition to house-to-house district work, give special attention to patients in fever and small-pox hospitals, to cab-drivers and stable men, to policemen on night duty (with meetings at suitable hours), to prisoners in police-cells, to invalids at convalescent homes, and to showmen.

A report has been received of a mission now in progress at Chryston Free Church (Rev. Andrew Shepherd), in the course of which much blessing was received, especially among young men and women. The evangelist was Mr. Samuel Mackenzie.

Speaking last week at a meeting of the Edinburgh Working Men and Women's Christian Sabbath Society—subject, "The Defence of the Sabbath"—Rev. John Kelman, jun. (Free North Church), said he believed the public sentiment of the country to be in favour of the preservation of the Sabbath free from labour. Those who were endeavouring to introduce labour on that day were seeking to create a demand, and not to supply one.

The committee of the Scottish Labour Colony—which is doing excellent service in the reclamation of men from the slums of Glasgow—reports that 1899 opened with sixteen men at the farm of Mid-locharwoods (Dumfriesshire), forty-five were admitted during the year, and thirty-nine left. Twenty-one were placed in situations, four were restored to friends, and two joined the army in South Africa.

At the Craigie House of Refuge for girls, Perth, the number of inmates is now kept up to the limit allowed by Government rules, namely, sixty, and if accommodation were available could be largely increased. Of all the girls who have left recently, good reports have been received. At the annual meeting the other day the secretary declared it to be no figure of speech to say that the object for which the institution existed had been attained so far as lay within their power; and many young girls, who would otherwise have been the victims of destitution, and surroundings physically and morally unwholesome, had been rescued to become useful members of society.

At Perth Free Presbytery last week the gratifying fact was noted that the young people in attendance at senior classes numbered half as many as those in ordinary Sabbath schools. Strong emphasis was laid on the difficulty experienced in obtaining male teachers.

Three Hundred Fatherless Girls.

SINCE the formation of the Brixton Orphanage, nearly 300 girls have been admitted to the benefits of the Home. Children between the ages of seven and twelve years are eligible for admission, without any payment whatever, priority, of course, being always given to the most necessitous.

The general management and administration of the affairs of the Home are under the direction of Mrs. Montague. The utmost economy that is consistent with the health and happiness of the children is practised. Every officer is honorary; the staff only receiving salaries. No servants are kept, the entire housework being done by the elder girls, who are instructed in all household duties, and trained as domestic servants. Situations are obtained for the girls over fourteen years of age, and each provided with a suitable outfit.

In the event of the girls being out of situations they are received into the Homes temporarily, providing their conduct while in service has been good. During the year fifty children have entered the Home. Of these twenty have been placed in situations, and thirty-eight have returned to friends. There are at present 291 girls resident in the Home.

The secretary, Mrs. Greenwood, will forward copies of the annual report and other information. She may be addressed at the Orphanage, Barrington Road, Brixton.

National Free Church Council.

THE annual meetings of the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches closed on Thursday evening in Sheffield. The sessions of the Council itself, as well as the public meetings in connection therewith, were very largely attended, and a high level of interest was maintained to the end. A high spiritual tone marked many of the gatherings, and the proceedings were harmonious throughout. At one point the introduction of the engrossing subject of the War in South Africa threatened to disturb the equanimity of the delegates; but owing to the wise guidance of the President, and the self-suppression of many brethren who refrained from expressing the strong opinions they held on one side or the other, the danger was averted. The committee had advised that no discussion on the subject should take place in the Council, and the Council itself readily approved of this decision. The conversation which took place at the opening of the session on Wednesday afternoon arose in regard to a memorial which had been circulated among the delegates. Eventually the phraseology of the memorial was so altered that it made no allusion to the Free Church Council, and thus the document became the expression of opinion on the part of private individuals.

The session in which the spiritual tone rose to the highest point, and which will have, in all probability, the most far-reaching consequences, was that in which the Council considered the proposal to hold throughout England in 1901. A suggestive paper on the subject was read by Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, of London. He pointed out that as the century drew to a close, thoughtful Christian men were oppressed by the magnitude of the social and religious problems that confront them. The extraordinary expansion of the great towns had far outstripped the enterprise of the Christian Church, and the vast majority of their populations had ceased to worship. The two outstanding features of the proposed mission were its magnitude and simultaneity. Nothing had hitherto been attempted on such a scale. The mission would be held in London from January 27 to February 3, and in the provinces from February 17 to February 24. Mr. Parr gave many valuable suggestions as to the organization and preparations necessary for success. As Free Churches, he declared they were nearer to the conditions of Pentecostal blessing than they had been for 300 years.

The resolution, committing the Council to this great enterprise for Christ and human souls, was moved by Rev. H. Price Hughes, and seconded by Professor Rendel Harris. The former, with eloquence and fervour, expounded and justified the proposal, and the latter with solemn earnestness dwelt upon the spiritual aspects of the movement. Rev. F. W. Bourne, the famous author of "Billy Bray," with tremulous voice, pleaded that the personal preparation might begin there and then in the soul of every delegate; and Gipsy Smith, one of the evangelists employed by the Council, followed up this appeal with great effect. He closed his address by requesting the great audience to join him in prayer. A very gracious influence pervaded the Council. Dr. Mackennal, indeed, on the following day, said he had never attended a more solemn and moving meeting at any assembly. After prayer, at the call of the president, the members of the Council sang fittingly enough the old hymn—

Oh for a thousand tongues to sing
My great Redeemer's praise!

Rev. S. B. Lane afterwards read a paper on "What the Councils can Do for the Villages." Mr. Lane described the village churches as the backbone of Nonconformity and the outposts of Protestantism. The strength of many of the town churches was due to the accessions they received from small and out-of-the-way congregations. The difficulties of village work were multiplying, amongst them being an aggressive sacerdotalism, and the constant migrations to the towns. A notable suggestion was made by Mr. Lane—to the effect that Home Missionary families were needed, to settle in the villages, and become in them the rallying point of Christian work. Men who retired from business, instead of settling down in a suburban retreat, might, with advantage, establish themselves in some village, on account of the unique sphere of usefulness it presented. Would that a thousand families might have a vision of needy rural England, and readily respond to the Divine call. Mr. Lane also suggested that the wealthier churches should be responsible for the work in one or more villages.

The Sabbath Rest for the People of God.

In the absence of Rev. W. F. Macdonald, the President of the Wesleyan Conference, through illness, the official sermon was preached on Tuesday evening in the Carver Street Chapel by Rev. H. Price Hughes. There was a crowded congregation, which listened with deep interest to a powerful discourse. The text was Heb. iv. 9. Mr. Hughes referred to his recent visit to the "Morning lands of history." The ruins of the cities of the dead, the ancient homes of wealth, commerce and empire—all cried out to him: "Your rest is in none of these things. Your home is not here." There was an other-worldliness, born of selfishness and cowardice and ignorance, that needed to be denounced; but there was a true other-worldliness they ought to preach, which was the only remedy for some of the greatest evils of their time. How could they destroy mammonism? They could not wean a man from the love of money by denouncing it. They needed what Dr. Chalmers termed "the expulsive power of a new affection."

The increase of pessimism and suicide in Europe coincided with the increase of materialism, and the loss of a deep conviction of the future life. One check upon materialism was to remind their people everywhere that the world, "this unsubstantial pageant," was destined to decay; but there remained a Sabbath rest for the people of God. For pessimism they needed a tonic of sunshine and hope. Things were not as they seemed. Their present experiences would not last for ever. The promise of the text was

NOT PERFECTLY REALIZED HERE.

For the Sabbath rest included rest for the body. That meant an end of pain, and there was really no solution in time for the mystery of pain. It included also rest for the mind, and that meant an end of doubt. In the eternal life there was no darkness at all. It included rest for the spirit, and that meant an end of temptation. They would never more be harassed by the world, the flesh, and the devil.

This rest was the goal and the destiny of the believer. In part it might be theirs now, for, as Bunyan said, the land of Beulah was much like heaven, and it was on this side of the grave. But the complete and final deliverance from sin and misery came at death. Mr. Hughes then severely condemned the doctrine of purgatory, which was really borrowed from paganism, and of prayers for the dead. The fundamental need of man was forgiveness of sins. Mr. Hughes effectively from his recent travels. He had sat in the gallery of the Mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople at a special service during the Mohammedan Lent. When the officiating priest in the course of the service uttered the word "Sin," all the worshippers fell on their knees, and bowing their heads to the ground, wailed out together, "Forgiveness." The heart of man, Mohammedan as well as Christian, cried for "Forgiveness." Another illustration enforced the same point. A dying man, hungry, neglected, friendless, was visited by a minister who said, "I will get you food, a doctor," and so forth. But the poor man broke in with "O sir, what I want is to know that my sins are forgiven." No improvement of circumstances could suffice. And there was only one religion that offered complete deliverance from sin.

John, in Patmos, wrote the most sanguine and inspiring message to Christians. The Apocalypse was a bugle call to victory, and yet it was the voice of a prisoner. "He was in the Spirit on the Lord's day," and was able to say "I saw a door opened in heaven." They, too, needed a similar experience. When they had fathomed the Divine truth of the text they would never despair; they would never grow weary in well-doing. It was a prophecy of everlasting joy.

A CHURCH PRAYER-MEETING.

The morning session on Wednesday opened with a sermon by Rev. W. Cuff, the Vice-President of the Baptist Union. The preacher, in racy and earnest fashion, carried his hearers back to some of the conditions of success in Church work in the early days. His text was Acts iv. 31. The early Christians profoundly believed in the power of prayer. If one member of the Church was sick unto death, they prayed him back to life. If one was put in prison—and they were quite respectable enough in those days to go to gaol—they prayed him out. The very life of that early Church overflowed in her prayer-meetings. There was not much said about church music in those days. It was when the Church was weak in preaching and praying that they fled to music. When these early Christians had prayed, they moved God, and God moved them, and then they moved the people. Apostolic faith and prayer would bring back the Apostolic days. With great power Mr. Cuff described the passionate longing for a great revival which filled many of their hearts.

Temperance Questions.—Lord Peel's Report.

Rev. C. F. Aked (of Liverpool) read a forceful paper on "The Free Churches and Temperance Legislation." The immediate outlook, he thought, was not very favourable to Temperance Legislation. But a recognition of facts did not spell "Pessimism" but "Persistence." Mr. Aked brought out the point, amid cheers, that what was called the Minority Report was at any rate signed by a clear majority of all the disinterested members of the Commission. The Peel Report suggested a vast and sweeping reduction in the number of public-houses. If its proposals were carried into law, in Liverpool the on-licences would be reduced from 2,109 to 839, in Manchester from 2,361 to 720, in Sheffield from 1,187 to 475. In the whole country public-houses would be reduced by one-half. The compensation proposed was only an act of grace and expediency, and he contended that the publicans themselves who stayed in the trade should compensate those who went out. He earnestly urged to welcome legislation on these lines as an instalment of a long-delayed reform. Let them cease bickering, and get to business.

Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., moved a comprehensive resolution approving of Lord Peel's report, and urging immediate action in support thereof on the local councils throughout the country. In quiet tones, but with effective arguments, he urged that a point had been reached when there might be a general consent among temperance workers to demand these reforms. He explained the advantages of many of the provisions of Lord Peel's report. It was a compromise with the possibility of extension. Rev. Charles Joseph, in seconding, paid a warm tribute to the dogged perseverance and persistent faith of their veteran leader, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, who had done so much to keep the temperance movement to the front. The resolution was unanimously adopted, and the adhesion of the National Council was thus given to the movement for securing the enactment of the provisions of Lord Peel's report.

The Protestant Movement

was then introduced in a thoughtful and suggestive paper by Dr. Barrett, of Norwich. So far as Romanism, as such, was concerned, he did not think they need be greatly alarmed. It was making no progress in the land. It was the Romanism which did not call itself such, that was revolutionising the Church of England. They were compelled to utter their solemn conviction that sacerdotalism was utterly hostile to the truth as it is Jesus. How was the Romanizing movement to be met? The attitude of the bishops was unsatisfactory. They seemed to have more sympathy with the sacerdotal party than antagonism to it. He thought they were mistaken who urged that the remedy for Romanism was to be found in Disestablishment. All that Disestablishment could do would be to purge the people from any kind of implicit complicity in the Romanizing movement, to deprive that movement of the sanction and prestige of the State, and to give the laity a larger and more influential place in the Church.

He thought the future of Protestantism in England lay with the Free Churches, and the future of the Free Churches depended upon their fidelity to the Gospel of Christ. He had also long held the opinion that unless they set themselves to discover what were those elements in the worship of the Church which most deeply moved those who joined in it, they would never successfully combat the Romanizing movement. He closed with a plea for dignity, and reverence, and beauty to be recognized in the worship of God.

MR. WALTER WALSH,

the author of the "Secret History of the Oxford Movement," spoke on the same subject. As a member of the Established Church, he received a welcome of great heartiness, the Council rising to greet him. He gave figures to show the formidable extent of the Romanizing conspiracy. There were 4,400 clergy, and thirty-two bishops, who were members of the English Church Union—the Romanizing confederacy. About 1,800 of the Church of England clergy were members of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, which was established for the purpose of bringing back the self-same sacrifice of the Mass which the Protestant martyrs in Queen Mary's reign died to put down. The sacrifice of the Mass was offered in thousands of parish churches every week, and auricular confession was marching through the land like a spiritual plague. Great religious movements always led to civil commotions, and he feared they might expect, in the near future, fiercer conflicts than England had ever seen since the time of Bishop Laud.

Rev. J. Stephens, of Wellingborough, moved a resolution of protest against the sacerdotal teaching and practices prevailing in the Church of England.

Rev. W. B. Lark, of Bradford, roused the enthusiasm of the Council in an eloquent speech, in which he set forth the shortcomings of the Established Church as a bulwark of Protestantism. There were loud calls for Dr. Clifford and Dr. Horton, who each added brief remarks, after which the resolution was carried unanimously.

Report of a Year's Work.

The report by Rev. T. Law, organizing secretary, was then presented, and an earnest conversation took place thereon. Being a volume of eighty pages, the document naturally presented many topics for discussion. Dr. Mackennal, who moved its adoption, thought the most important matter contained in the report was the reference to the arrangements for the great

EVANGELIZING MOVEMENT OF 1901.

The Federation movement had spread to other lands, and was making considerable progress in America. Emphasizing the importance of work in the villages. Dr. Mackennal illustrated how much might be accomplished in a village by a resident man of God. No family in all the land should be allowed to live outside the reach of some definitely appointed man of God. The wonderful growth of the Federation movement was shown by the variety of enterprises undertaken in all parts of the country.

Dr. Townsend, in seconding the adoption of the report, pointed out that the number of associated councils continued to increase, 644 having now been formed in England and Wales. He emphasized the fact that the greatest part of the work of the Councils was done on spiritual lines. He rejoiced that the attempt during the year to establish seven-days newspapers had been frustrated.

Dr. Monro Gibson and Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell also spoke, the latter dealing with educational matters. He gave a painful example of village intolerance in Nottinghamshire, where the daughter of Baptist parents was not allowed to become a pupil teacher because she would not turn her back upon the Nonconformist chapel. In that same village the children were taught that they had no right to pray "Our Father, which art in heaven" unless they had been baptized at church.

SPECIAL MISSIONS.

Gipsy Smith gave the most effective address of the afternoon. With mingled wit and wisdom he told of the mission work he had been doing as one of the evangelists sent forth by the Council, and emphasized some of the conditions of success. The pastor should take his stand by the missioner. The Gipsy told how Dr. Clifford had loyally stood by him during the services he had conducted in his church, and added: "It would do all these leaders good to pass through a mission." He declared it was an exploded idea that people could not be got to come to a church or chapel. They must earnestly seek the outsiders to win them. "When you laymen are candidates for civic honours," said the evangelist, "you send a carriage for the man you want; but when you want him to come to church, you ring a bell."

The morning session on Thursday opened with a practical and powerful sermon by Rev. George Jackson, B.A., of Edinburgh. Of this we hope to give notes in a future number.

Some Interdenominational Possibilities

was the general subject then discussed. Professor A. S. Peake, of the Primitive Methodist College, Manchester, introduced the subject of "Theological Education." He urged that, by a scheme of federation among the colleges training young men of the Free Churches for the ministry, considerable advantages might be secured for the students and for the professors.

as a region of interdenominational possibilities, was dealt with in a paper full of practical and useful suggestions by Mr. J. Rutherford, who has had considerable experience in organization in the Midland district. He pointed out that town evangelization was the problem the twentieth century would have to solve. The nineteenth century had been conspicuous for the growth of large towns. In 1801, three were only eighteen towns having a population of 20,000 and upwards. In 1891, there were 183. Mr. Rutherford thought that though town evangelization would be best carried on permanently on denominational lines, so that the sense of responsibility should not be weakened, there were interdenominational possibilities in co-operative, consultative, and united work on the part of the churches. He gave numerous examples of fields of combined effort.

Mr. T. Worthington, J.P., of Wigan, opened an animated discussion on this subject. In sturdy fashion, and with rousing earnestness, he described with the men they sought to save. "We," said he, "not merely somebody we send, but our own dear selves, must go down to these people if they are to be reached and saved. We have not discharged our obligations when we have given something to some fund to send some man to do some work." "I come," said he, "from an old town. And all old towns have heart disease. They are bad in the middle." People talked about keeping down the rates; but there was one rate they sometimes forgot—the death-rate. He urged that as Christians it was their duty to seek to destroy those agencies that brought about death.

Rev. H. Price Hughes took exception to a sentiment in the paper read that for open-air services testimony bearers, not preachers, were needed. He declared that had fallen into disrepute because the ablest preachers had often neglected it. The Socialists put up their best speakers in the open air. The great victories of the Evangelical Revival were won by Whitefield and Wesley in field preaching. He urged his brethren to preach in the open air. Rev. John Wilson, B.D., of Sunderland, followed with a fervent appeal to the laymen to follow their ministers into the open air.

SECONDARY EDUCATION.

Professor Massie, of Oxford, introduced this subject, and dealt with it with all the skill of an expert. He urged that it was their duty to secure freedom for the conscientious son or daughter of conscientious parents, to follow up education from step to step without any obstacle in the way of religious honesty, and freedom for the conscientious man or woman to hold educational office. On the motion of Mr. Percy W. Bunting, a series of resolutions were agreed to, of which the first was to the effect that in any future organization of secondary schools, the local authority should be a public representative body. Where public money was granted, it was contended that a conscience clause should be enforced.

THE INDIAN FAMINE.

Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., moved a resolution deploring the recurrence of famine in India, inviting the prayers and sympathies of the Free Churches, and suggesting that practical evidence of sympathy should be given by aiding the Famine Relief Funds. This resolution was carried unanimously.

THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

Rev. C. H. Kelly nominated as his successor in the chair of the Council Rev. J. G. Greenhough, of Leicester, an ex-chairman of the Baptist Union, describing him as one who has rendered signal service to the Free Church Council movement. It was a source of regret that Mr. Greenhough was unable to attend the meetings in Sheffield because of sickness. His nomination was adopted by a rising vote. The officers were re-elected: Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson as hon. secretary, and Messrs. R. W. Perks, M.P., George Cadbury, and Evans Spicer, as treasurers. The national committee was constituted by fifteen ministers and fifteen laymen.

THE CARE OF YOUNG WOMEN.

In the afternoon "The Free Churches and the Care of Girls" was the subject discussed. Thoughtful papers were read by Mrs. Cadbury and Mrs. Percy Bunting, and a larger proportion of ladies were present at this session than on any previous occasion. Many suggestions were made, which, if carried out, would be to the great advantage of girls in domestic service and in other employments. It was decided to form a "National Free Church Girls' Guild," by means of which many of the suggestions made can be put into practice. It was felt that it was necessary to counteract the sacerdotal influence of the Girls' Friendly Society. Miss "Marianne Farningham," of literary renown, was listened to with great interest on this subject.

CLOSING MEETINGS.

The sessions of the Council closed with the Communion Service, conducted by the president. A deeply spiritual address was given by Dr. Horton, in which he brought home to the members of the Council very beautifully the sense of the Master's presence. A gracious influence pervaded the service, and the deliberations and activities of these busy days were fittingly closed by Dr. Horton's devout meditation upon the crucified yet ever-living Christ.

Rev. Charles H. Kelly.

REV. CHARLES H. KELLY, who was last week inducted into the chair of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches, held in the Carver Street Chapel, Sheffield, is a distinguished leader and ex-President of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. If Mr. Price Hughes may be taken as the foremost representative of the younger and progressive school in Wesleyan Methodism, Mr. Kelly may be said to unite in his person the past with the present. He is conservative of all that is best in old-fashioned Methodism, and reveres its glorious past; but his buoyant faith and Christian optimism enable him to have full sympathy with modern movements of aggression, and to claim the future for Christ and his Church.

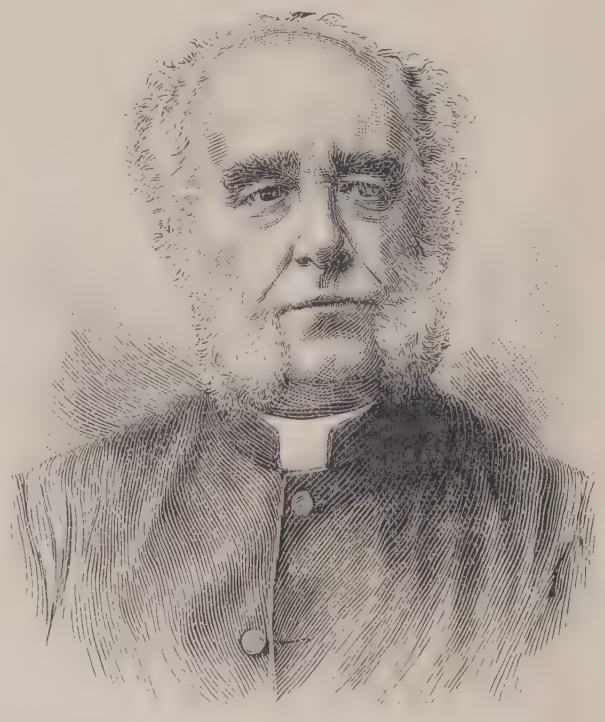
Intensely loyal as he is to his own denomination, Mr. Kelly none the less has warm sympathy with all the Free Churches, and is a declared advocate of a closer fellowship between the various branches of the Methodist family. A thorough Nonconformist, and a Protestant to the core, he has no vestige of the rancour of a narrow and bitter hostility to the Anglican Church. He has already ably served the Free Church Federation movement on the platform and in committee, and for two years in succession was President of the Metropolitan Federation. Mr. Kelly's whole-hearted devotion to this movement was not looked upon with great favour by some of the venerable ex-Presidents of the Wesleyan Conference, who doubtless feared that political entanglements might ensue. In his address from the chair of the Metropolitan Federation, Mr. Kelly humorously referred to the doubts of some of his friends. It had been said to him by some of his brethren that if John Wesley had been alive, he (Mr. Kelly) would not have occupied that position. To that he replied that he thoroughly believed it, for the office was the very one that Wesley would have rejoiced to fill himself.

Mr. Kelly is no stripling in point of age. He was born at Salford, Manchester, on November 25, 1833, and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1857. He is thus in the sixty-seventh year of his age, and the forty-third year of his ministry.

Venerable in appearance, he is alert and active as a youth. His energy and enthusiasm seem undiminished, in spite of the weight of years, and his capacity for work is a revelation to many a younger man. For many years Mr. Kelly has served the churches in many capacities. He has travelled hither and thither throughout the length and breadth of the land, and yet it can be said of him that he has never been compelled to break an engagement through failure of health. On the human side, Mr. Kelly accounts for his immunity from sickness by declaring "I don't worry; I clear things off as they come up—that saves a great deal of trouble and anxiety. It's not work, but worry, that kills men—and preaching memoriter."

Mr. Kelly received his early training in a Quaker school, and it is on record that he began at the early age of eleven years to engage in Christian work in the Sunday school. Thus the child was the father of the man. For Mr. Kelly is pre-eminently the authority on Sunday school work in Methodism. He was accepted as a candidate for the ministry in 1855, and spent four years in Didsbury College. During the last year of his residence he acted as assistant to Rev. John Bowers, the governor, who was that year the President of the Conference.

From the college class-room, the young minister passed to the rough life of the camp and of the barrack-room; for in 1859 he was sent to Aldershot to join Rev. Dr. Rule in his care for the spiritual interests of Methodist soldiers in the Queen's army. From her earliest days, Methodism has had devout representatives serving under the colours. But the religious liberty of the Nonconformist soldier was not secured without a stern fight. In these days it will scarcely be credited, but it is none the less true, that in the beginning of the century two corporals at Gibraltar were degraded, and received 200 lashes each for the fearful crime of attending Methodist services! Such atrocious cruelty could not long be perpetrated, but it was not until 1839 that an order was issued by General Lord Hill, the then Commander-in-Chief, giving every soldier full liberty to attend his own church. In actual practice it was long before this boon was absolutely secured to the Nonconformist soldier.



From Photograph by Messrs. J. J. & S. Johnson, 83, Church Street, Sheffield.

To Dr. Rule and to Mr. Kelly belongs the honour of gaining the complete victory for religious freedom in the Army. Mr. Kelly gained the right of entrance into military hospitals and prisons, and was the first Wesleyan minister to conduct services under the authority of the War Office.

During the eleven years which Mr. Kelly spent in the army work, first at Aldershot, and afterwards at Chatham, Sheerness, and in London, he laboured incessantly for the benefit of the men under his charge. Manly, outspoken, sympathetic, he won his way to the hearts of officers and men alike. The little iron church on the bleak hill above Aldershot was crowded with hearers. And in personal dealing with men Mr. Kelly was conspicuously successful. It has been said by one who has known him for forty years, that he has received probably more confidences from men than any minister now living. "Men of all ranks, sons of the gentlemen of England, lads run wild out of Christian homes, rough young fellows who had 'listed through sheer devilry—all sorts and conditions of men were drawn to him."

After a comparatively brief experience of circuit work in Wandsworth and Westminster, where he was very popular among the students of the Training College, Mr. Kelly was called to fill the office of secretary of the Wesleyan Sunday School Union. It was an eminently suitable appointment, and for fourteen years he cared for the interests of the youth of Methodism. Year by year, prior to Children's Day, Mr. Kelly published a "Letter to the Children," containing earnest appeals for decision, and pleading with the young, with a wealth of tenderness and felicity of illustration that were calculated to make lasting impressions upon the minds of the hundreds of thousands of lads and lasses into whose hands his "letters" came. As a preacher and speaker to the young, Mr. Kelly holds a position all his own. There is probably no Methodist minister who has preached more Sunday school anniversary sermons than he.

In 1889, Mr. Kelly became the Connexional Book Steward, an office which he still holds. As such, he is the head of the great religious publishing concern which dates from the days of Wesley, and which, under modern conditions, carries on the work, begun by the far-sighted evangelist himself, of circulating pure literature throughout the land. But the Book Steward retains his deep interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the young. It was an address by Mr. Kelly that led to the appointment by the Wesleyan Conference of 1894 of a committee to consider what steps should be taken to secure the extension of God's work among the youth of Methodism. The result was the establishment of "the Wesley Guild"—a young people's organization, combining the best elements of the Christian Endeavour movement, and of the old mutual improvement societies.

For two years Mr. Kelly was President of the annual gatherings of the British Chatauqua, and for a quarter of a century he has taken deep interest in the social and spiritual welfare of the boys of the Wandsworth Reformatory. He preaches to them frequently, and by personal influence seeks to win them from social ostracism to Christian citizenship. Space fails in which to enumerate all the departments of noble service in which Mr. Kelly has been engaged, but enough has been said to prove that the new President of the National Council is a man in every way worthy of that high distinction.

As a preacher, Mr. Kelly is racy and popular, fervently Evangelical, and intensely practical. He has none of the arts of the mere rhetorician, but speaks with the true eloquence of sincerity, and the directness of one who desires the immediate acceptance of the truth. On the platform Mr. Kelly's happy humour, illustrative power, and breezy optimism, combine with his other qualities to make him a bright and particular star in the oratorical galaxy of the leaders of the Free Churches.

Strength and Weakness.—God is with us whilst we are with Him. The greatest safety lies in duty, and keeping close to it. He is most in danger, and runs himself into it, that declines duty for fear of the cross and suffering from men. It has been our great error that we have not trusted in the power of God. We have reasoned about the worst that men can do, but have not believed the best that God can do. Sense and carnal reason must be left behind in the things of God. Thomas Hardcastle (while in Bristol gaol for conscience' sake, 1675).

Rev. Dennis Osborne,

OF POONA.

DURING recent weeks, from many pulpits and platforms in and around London, the cause of the famishing millions in our great Indian dependency has been advocated with telling effect by Rev. Dennis Osborne, of Poona. This week our friend returns to his sphere, to resume work which at the present time is attended by special difficulties and anxieties.

Mr. Osborne was born in India, and was orphaned at the age of thirteen, in the great Sepoy rebellion of 1857. Entering the Government service, he enjoyed social and other advantages above the common; but when at length he gave his heart to Christ, he resigned his appointment as Assistant Secretary in the Public Works Department, North-West Provinces, in order to preach the Gospel.

In the course of an interview last week, Mr. Osborne informed us that he was brought to the Lord in the city of Lucknow. He was subsequently greatly helped by the revival which followed the mission of William Taylor, afterwards so widely known as Bishop Taylor of Africa. He was, indeed, privileged to take part in the meetings held in connection with the movement, and his religious life acquired tone and symmetry thereby. Having joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Osborne began a life of ministry which has continued to this day. For twenty-two years he has been a presiding elder of the Church: he opened up work at Allahabad, where he laboured for ten years; he undertook a like enterprise at Mussoorie, where he stayed for twelve years. In 1897 he was transferred to Western India as presiding elder of the Bombay district, and made his home at Poona.

Questioned as to the object of his visit to England, Mr. Osborne described this as twofold. First, he came to seek a headmaster for the mission school at Poona; secondly, to bring before the British people the claims of India's millions in the present hour of trial, resulting from the visitation of plague, and attendant upon the prevailing famine. Though an utter stranger, he had been graciously helped in his enterprise, and was full of praise to God and gratitude to Christians of all denominations for the leading and assistance that had been given him.

Proceeding, Mr. Osborne remarked that he had selected a man who would follow him to the East to preside over the mission school. He was glad also to believe that God had blessed his endeavours to create increased interest in India's need, and to enlist deepened sympathy with her in the hour of sorrow.

The mere mention of Indian famines stirs the heart of Mr. Osborne. Too well he knows what they mean, in sadness for Christian workers, in misery and mortality among the native community. He remembers the famine of 1876-8; and that of 1896-7 is hardly passed into the region of recollection. Indeed, missionaries who then laboured to feed the hungry are still on the sick list. His appeals on many platforms during the six weeks of his stay among us have been singularly powerful, and the fearful facts in their mere recital have done the rest—inducing many to give liberally in aid of the relief funds now being raised by Christian people.

In some further remarks on his life and work, Mr. Osborne said that he had been for four years general evangelist for the Methodist Episcopal Church in India. He had twice represented the Church as delegate in the General Conferences in the United States of America. On those occasions, while passing through London he had spoken in Exeter Hall and other public places, and was honoured in becoming acquainted with Sir George Williams, and the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon.

FAREWELL TO MR. OSBORNE.

Mr. Osborne was bid God-speed on Tuesday morning last, when a breakfast was held at Cannon Street Hotel. The occasion was remarkable as evidencing the extent to which public opinion is being awakened to realize the devastating character of the famine visitation. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen well known in religious and philanthropic circles, and the proceedings were marked by the deepest interest and sympathy.

Mr. Frank Bevan, who presided, after reviewing the position and describing the Government works for the relief of the starving, went on to emphasize the dictum of Lord Curzon that an incalculable amount of good could be accomplished by private benevolence. The Viceroy had appealed for help in moving terms, adding that any person who should start to visit the affected districts with a hard heart would surely return with a broken one.

Rev. Dennis Osborne followed with a brief farewell address. He spoke as a sorrowful eye-witness of the succession of visitations which had fallen of recent years upon India. After referring to the last famine, and to the bubonic plague which so soon succeeded it, Mr. Osborne reviewed the state of the affected provinces, describing the import of the awful arithmetic of famine statistics as difficult to grasp. To gain an idea of the position, they needed to imagine a population as large as that of London in the throes of slow but sure starvation. The speaker pictured the homes of the peasantry, graphically outlining their normal condition of want, and moved his hearers to tears with a recapitulation of shocking sights which he had personally observed. He appealed both for the starving adults and for the orphan waifs who were wandering at large exposed to the machinations of unprincipled people; and said that many of these hapless little ones would be entrapped into vice unless help was forthcoming. Mr. Osborne's final words were full of hearty thanks for the sympathy which was being accorded to India by the British people, and of entreaty that no time or effort should be lost in meeting the urgent need.

Subsequent speakers were Rev. G. B. Durrant (C.M.S.) and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson (L.M.S.), both of whom had pathetic accounts to give, lately received from workers on the field; and Rev. I. F. Row. The grave questions of the frequency with which famines recur and of the necessity for undertaking preventive measures were dealt with by Mr. Robert Scott, who urged that the water supplies of India were sufficient, if properly conserved and distributed, to avert famine.

Mr. T. A. Denny added a genial word of encouragement; Lord Radstock suggested a general effort to raise money by the thank-offerings of Christian people; Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., expressed the fervent hope that this country should raise no less than a million sterling for the benefit of the sufferers.

The Indian Famine.

COMMUNICATIONS continue to reach us from many parts of the affected districts. It is evident that, while relief works are being organized by missionaries of all denominations, the sufferings of the natives are growing more and more acute.

Miss Fentiman, of Faizabad, is endeavouring to alleviate the miseries of women in Mohammedan zenanas who do not dare to leave their seclusion to seek aid. Industries are being started whereby these sufferers will be enabled to earn sufficient to keep them from starvation. Underclothing is to be made and drawn thread-work done. Particulars may be obtained from Mrs. Wiseman, Women's Auxiliary, Wesleyan Mission House, Bishopsgate Street, E.C.

Dr D. G. Barkley, convener of the Irish Presbyterian Foreign Missions, has received a letter from a missionary at Anand, in the Kaira district, under date February 23, stating that, including those relieved by missionaries or other private persons, at least one-fifteenth of the population of the district were being relieved. It had been found necessary to reduce the task required at relief works, to save the lives of those who are greatly weakened by hunger. Since this change the works had got a better name, and were more freely resorted to. "But," adds the missionary, "it is no exaggeration to say that there are thousands who are needy, and who, for one reason or another, are not willing to come on Government relief works. Some of them overcome their dislike to the works only when it is too late. They are already too far gone to be saved. No matter where I go in this district, I hear of individuals of this class dying of starvation." "I have seen," he continues, "several who have died in the famine poor houses. I have seen several who might almost be called living skeletons, and some of the sixty orphans we have taken in might be so described. Two have died, and some others are in a critical state." Dr. Barkley's address is, 12, May Street, Belfast.

A communication from Pundita Ramabai will be read with interest. Writing from Mukti, Kedgaon, Poona District, she says: "The famine is very distressing. About 350 people are receiving help and support on our relief works. Hundreds are hearing the Word of God read to them daily. Some of my Bible women are sent out into the districts where the famine is at its height, and are busy rescuing young girl widows and deserted wives; 180 young girls have been saved from starvation and degradation up to this time (March 2), and I hope to receive many hundreds more. Of all the young women and girls rescued during the last and present famine, nearly 10 per cent. had been driven to a sinful life by dire need. The help sent by your readers came in time to help me build a small house for these, and to give help to starving people in the district."

The Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird desires to make it known that the Loving Service League appeals to ladies generally for help in making garments, supporting widows and orphans, and raising contributions for famine relief. Particulars may be obtained on addressing Miss Kinnaird at 115, Mount Street, London, W.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

A MEETING, convened by the South Africa General Mission, was held on Wednesday last week at Exeter Hall. So large was the demand for seats that the Lower Hall, which had been engaged, was found insufficient, and the Large Hall was requisitioned, the move being justified by the presence of some 1,500 people.

The chair was occupied by Mr. Thos. B. Miller, who was supported by Rev. E. W. Moore; Mr. A. W. Bell, C.E.; Mr. John Colville, M.P.; Mr. T. A. Denny; Colonel Wellesley Robinson, C.B., and all the members of the Council. There were, in addition, on the platform several who had been engaged in missionary work in South Africa, or who were about to depart thither.

After hearty words by the Chairman, and by Mr. E. C. Faithfull—who, with Miss Ringland and Miss Rose Brown, is shortly to leave for the South African missionary field—the Secretary, Mr. Arthur Mercer, explained that the Mission exists for the purpose of taking the message of the Gospel not only to the Europeans and natives, but to the soldiers who are now fighting their country's battles. Much had already been done, and many soldiers had given their hearts to the Lord in the "Soldiers' Home" at the front. Among the immediate needs of the work was a sum of £300 to convert the hall in Capetown into a serviceable Soldiers' Home; and an urgent request for a like sum had also just come to provide for specifically Christian work at the front.

The Chairman reminded the meeting that the Mission tried to do good to the bodies as well as to the souls of our soldiers. Nothing, he added, gave them greater joy than to hear of such simple practical work amongst brave men, to whom the nation owed so great a debt of gratitude.

Mr. Michael Coates, who, with his wife, has been working amongst the natives of Swaziland, told of the deep workings of God's Spirit there, and instanced a native "boy," who, after conversion, worked hard to make restitution for property and money stolen from a former master.

Miss Heard, from Johannesburg, described the work there as consisting of every kind under the sun, among people of every nationality, speaking many languages; there were Dutch, Jews in great numbers, Chinese, Indians, English-speaking people, and natives.

Mr. Palmer Jones, also from Johannesburg, followed with an account of work amongst the natives in their compounds. It is far-reaching in its results, and has been productive of much blessing.

Mr. Samuel Holt, now stationed in Tembuland, spoke of his missionary labours among the Cape Mounted Rifles, who, he said, were stationed in the native territories at some eighty stations, some containing three or four men, and some thirty or forty; his work was to go up and down on horseback, and get into touch with them.

Mr. Frank Huskisson, one of the first workers and a superintendent of the Mission, gave touching details of efforts amongst our forces. He spoke of the work of God's Spirit in men of the Black Watch by a sergeant, who the other day sent over £28 to help on the work in South Africa, mostly the result of his own self-denial. In addition to the Soldiers' Homes at Cape Town, Wynberg, and Pietermaritzburg, three men had been up at the front, one with Sir George White at Ladysmith, and two at the Modder River. The former thought it an inestimable privilege, after Elandslaagte, to spend the night groping his way from man to man, binding up wounds, bringing water, or helping in any way. He was thereby afforded wonderful opportunities of whispering messages of God's love to wounded and dying men. The two latter workers, whose labours are described in "At Modder River,"* have had thrilling experiences under fire with Lord Methuen's forces, and Lord Methuen has called personally to thank them for their services, adding: "I have heard of newspaper correspondents sometimes risking a little when they are well paid for it, but you fellows seem to have no idea of danger; the shadow of the Almighty seems over you, or you would have been ere this in your graves, with many more of our brave men."

Altogether the S.A.G.M. has some nine workers at present fully occupied among the soldiers, with three or four others who give up a good part of their time to the same work.

After Rev. E. W. Moore had engaged in prayer, the Doxology brought the meeting to a close.

WITH GENERAL GATACRE.

THERE seems no end to the opportunities we have of helping the soldiers in various ways, and we all know how sympathy and kindly help will touch hearts and make a way for the messages of life. There is a spirit of inquiry among the soldiers. Men come to the tents of the Christian workers to inquire after the way of peace; others are finding Christ in the meetings whilst the Word is being preached.

Our large marquee, a gift from the residents of King William's Town, has been opened by Sir William Gatacre, who addressed the troops, nearly 2,000 of whom had tea and fruit outside the tent. They responded by a spontaneous outburst of cheering. The General, when sending us a donation towards the expenses, expressed his appreciation of its usefulness and good effect upon his men.

Next month we expect to realize the approach of cold weather in these highlands, where snow falls in winter. The troops are to be provided with woollen khaki uniforms. Our workers have only cotton khaki. If we had the material of strong khaki serge for thirty uniforms (tunics and trousers), we could have them made up. The material is not to be obtained in the colony. Gifts for the sick and wounded in the shape of cardigan jackets or waistcoats, warm socks, and jersey caps would be very acceptable.

Parcels may be sent to Mr. Ettmann, Mildmay Mission to the Jews, Central Hall, Philpot Street, Whitechapel, London, E. With the kind permission of Rev. J. Wilkinson, he is coming to join us as soon as possible.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn Howe,

Care of Mr. J. Stow Lister, King William's Town, Cape Colony.

Moravian Missions.—We are sorry to learn from its clerical secretary that the London Association in Aid of Moravian Missions (7, New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.) closes its financial year with an income £3,000 below that of last year. This is a serious matter. For there is a pressing need of increased funds (the Morton legacy, be it remembered, being only available for commencing new work), which, unless forthcoming, makes one of two alternatives—another deficiency or the surrender of more missions—inevitable. The causes will suggest themselves. We can only hope, and, as the Association bids us, pray, that God's people will supply the remedy speedily, and save the work from hindrance, or, may be, partial extinction. The annual meeting has been fixed for May 4 at 3 p.m., Lower Exeter Hall.

The Hope of Burma.

IT was the privilege of the writer on a recent occasion to visit the Karen Theological Seminary at Insein, which is conducted by the American Baptist Missionary Union, and so strong were the impressions received during the visit that I feel constrained to bring the Institution before the notice of friends in the homelands.

The hope of Burma's speedy evangelization is largely centred upon her own sons; all that has been said concerning the advantages of an indigenous ministry for Africa and other countries applies here with equal force, and one cannot help feeling that in the establishment of this seminary the Mission has gone to the root of the problem of evangelization.

The Institution was founded in 1845, and for several years was conducted in Rangoon. Subsequently it was removed to Insein, its present location, nine miles distant. During fifty years some hundreds of trained workers have been sent forth into the whitening harvest field, and there are to-day about 180 students, 150 of whom are Karens, and the remainder Burmans, in preparation for their grand life-work of seeking to SAVE THEIR FELLOW-COUNTRYMEN.

It was a great privilege to be given an opportunity of addressing these students. The attention throughout was most marked, and their voices at the close, uplifted in the hymn "To the work, to the work," seemed like an "Amen" to all that had been said. Most touching was the story told of two young workers who went to a distant station known as Minelongyi. Before they had been there six weeks one died of cholera; but the undaunted survivor, in writing to his college friends for a volunteer to fill his place, said, "You must not be deterred by the death of our old friend. Cholera may meet one anywhere, and God is over all. Think of our past successes, and be assured that God will bless us in like measure in the future!"

Let us think of this band of young men, soon to be the King's ambassadors in Burma, away among the wild hill tribes, across the Chinese and Siamese frontiers, and to the teeming millions beyond. Let us pray that before they go they may be endued with power from on high, and that each may be, in the coming years, an instrument in God's hand for turning many to righteousness, and for the pulling down of the kingdom of darkness and superstition.

Destitution in Jerusalem.

AT the kind invitation of Mrs. Elborough-Woodcock, a drawing-room meeting, in aid of the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews, was held at 8, Buckingham Gate, S.W., a few days ago. Colonel Knollys presided, in the absence of Lord Aberdeen, who wrote, as also did Lord Radstock, regretting unavoidable absence. Rev. Dr. Sheilds, of Kensington, bore testimony to the excellent work which was being done by the Society among the poor Jews in Jerusalem. He had recently visited the city, and had seen the work done in Abraham's Vineyard—the manufacture of the Kosher Soap (made of pure olive oil, and by the use of which many cases of eczema have been cured), building water-cisterns, from which the poor are supplied; stone-dressing, carpentering, &c.

Mrs. Finn, founder and secretary of the Society, told of the persecutions endured by the Jews in Russia, Roumania, and other parts of Europe, at the hands of so-called Christians; and of the work accomplished by the Society—seventy poor Jews are employed in the various works at Jerusalem, and thus enabled to provide for themselves and their families. "There are," she said, "45,000 Jews in Jerusalem, the majority of whom are in hopeless destitution, and to thousands of these work could be given if the Society had but the funds with which to go forward."

From America.—II.

ON the day after landing (Sunday, Feb. 4) we went to the First Presbyterian Church (the late Dr. Hall's), and were delighted to hear a thoroughly sound and evangelical sermon, with evident reference to current modern views. The preacher was Dr. Patton, President of Princeton University; and his subject, Paul's Gospel (Gal. i.). His divisions were—

I. What was Paul's Gospel? This was answered, not by teaching that Paul preached a Gospel peculiar to himself, and different from that of the other Apostles, but that it was the one perennial Gospel of Salvation by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, crucified and risen.

II. How do men preach another Gospel? (1) By misrepresenting what Paul said, putting a new meaning on it. (2) By discrediting Paul. It is said that his Epistles represent the opinion and feeling in Paul's time, but not what men think now. (3) Men who are not scholarly, and who would not be listened to if they talked on either of the above lines, preach another Gospel by ignoring sin and atonement, and teaching that man is working up to perfection by education, progress, improvement. But Paul says, "If man or angel preach any other Gospel than he has preached, let him be accursed."

III. Why is it perilous to preach another Gospel? Because if this Gospel means anything, it means salvation. Why is it safe to hold on to the old Gospel? Because there are no fashions with God—no change—He is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. This Gospel, which satisfied Paul, which changed him from a persecutor to a minister and a martyr, is not a forgery or a fraud, but the very and only way of salvation for men. What the world wants more than anything else is a revival of the Gospel which Paul* preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. "My mind reverts," continued Dr. Patton, "to the splendid man who so recently passed from us, and who, knowing little of criticism or of modern thought, could say with Paul, 'One thing I do: forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.'" Of all the eulogiums and appreciations of God's translated and transfigured servant, D. L. Moody, none has been more eloquent, more hearty, or more discerning than that with which Dr. Patton closed his valuable discourse.

One evening at Mr. Sankey's we met Dr. Cuyler, who lives close by. He is a patriarch among Presbyterian preachers, and has always been a leader on the old safe lines. He called our attention to an article on "The New Reformation," which appeared in the January number of "The Association Outlook." This is the organ of the "International Young Men's Christian Association Training School," from which come the secretaries of the Y.M.C.A. Dr. Cuyler referred with sorrow and indignation to the article referred to. It seems to be intended as a manifesto. I quote one sentence:—

> Atonement is at-one-ment. It was not offended justice, but unquenchable love that was made manifest in the life and death of Christ. Salvation is the result of a Christ-changed character. Redemption is not a legal process, but a vital process.

The fallacious statement that "atonement is at-one-ment" is perhaps the most concentrated possible form of "another gospel, which is not another." If "atonement is at-one-ment," there is no atonement in the true meaning of the word; for atonement is expiation, and at-one-ment is reconciliation. Atonement (i.e., expiation) is the cause; at-one-ment (i.e., reconciliation) is the effect. To say that the cause is the effect is to deny the cause. It is as false as to say that a father is his own child, or that the Creator and his creation are the same.

That "salvation is the result of a Christ-changed character" may be true or false, according to the way in which the sentence is interpreted. At best it is an ambiguous statement, and ambiguities are dangerous according to the importance of their subject. None are so dangerous as those which concern our eternal salvation. It is to be hoped that the Y.M.C.A. here and in Great Britain will repudiate the false statement that atonement is at-one-ment, and avoid the ambiguous formula that "Salvation is the result of a Christ-changed character."

On the other hand, in this "Association Outlook" is a wise and useful article on Bible Study; and in a paper on "The Love of Others," I find this observant passage:

> Under what conditions do American young men,
> OR ANY MEN OR WOMEN,
> sacrifice themselves? . . . It is comparatively easy to raise money . . . to help a man who had his hand jammed between two freight-cars, and who must therefore be unable to work and support his family for some weeks. The young man is giving his money for some definite thing. On the other hand, it is with difficulty that he will be persuaded to give his money to help secure the adoption of an automatic coupler that will prevent men getting their hands jammed. . . .
> One of the successful plans now being used by the Missionary Boards is to get Churches to be responsible for individual missionaries, thus bringing to bear this consciousness of the individual concrete case. Men will give to the support of the concrete missionary more than they will give to missionaries in the abstract.

I respectfully commend the wise discernment of this principle to any Missionary Boards which may be discouraging the support of individual missionaries by a church or by an individual Christian, and adopting the rule of merging all contributions in one general fund.

Havana, Cuba, March 3, 1900.

* May I be forgiven for saying that I enjoyed hearing the apostle designated, as in the New Testament, by his name without the prefix conferred by Rome, and which is coming into such general use in these increasingly ecclesiastical days. It sounded far more dignified and manly, and I thought "our beloved brother Paul" would have liked it better.

The Gospel in Spain and Portugal.

THE Reformed Churches, with which the name of the late Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, will always be identified, go forward in their labours with manifest proofs of the Divine blessing. Persecution has revived in various quarters in Spain, and at present not only a number of innocent men, but also their legal adviser, are charged with offences against a constitution that professes to grant religious liberty.

Some months ago fears were entertained lest four brave reformers should be sentenced to four years' imprisonment; and, although the fears still exist, they are decreased by the fact that the Bar of Valladolid has undertaken the defence of the advocate who has been attacked through the influence of the local priests on account of his alliance with the Protestants. The supposed crime of the Protestants is that they did not take off their hats to a religious procession which they could not possibly have seen. In other parts of Spain the Government officials have refused to listen to the appeals of ultramontane bigots, and the Gospel continues to be preached by faithful ministers.

In Portugal the Reformers increase in numbers and influence beyond the expectations of their friends, and during the past few weeks the secular press of Lisbon has boldly defended the character of a Roman Catholic priest who, on publicly joining the Reformed Church, was assailed by the ecclesiastical authorities. Funds are urgently needed for carrying on the work of reform.

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Rev. Thomas J. Pulvertaft, M.A., at the office of the Society, Church House, Westminster.

A Secret of Heart Rest.—The more singly, solely, and sincerely we deal with God in any matter, the more composed and quiet shall our hearts be, and the fewer our straits and disappointments, though they may seem otherwise to the world.—Thomas Hardcastle (1675).

Notes from New York.

THE Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church have appointed a week of penitence and prayer for their denomination, beginning on the 25th. The reason for this action is found in the decrease shown by statistics in Church membership and attendance at public worship. In their letters to the churches, pastors and members, the bishops name the following as causes of the retrogression to which attention is called:—Labour troubles, and the standing aloof from them on the part of the church; neglect of "the submerged tenth"; the Church being above its business, and allowing others to do its work among these classes; the speculations and vagaries of Christian Science; the absence of camp meetings; light literature; the excessive number of amusements, and the character of many of them; the side-tracking of moral and spiritual force necessary to build up the Church, and the lack of self-denial; the absence of revivals; criticism of ministers and of sacred things, and the "Higher Criticism."

The Controller of the City of New York, the Hon. Bird S. Coler, delivered the opening speech at the Methodist "Twentieth Century Movement" Convention at Syracuse, New York, on March 5. He thought that it was a great mistake to spend 200,000dols. on a church, and then only use it once or twice a week, and that these buildings should be used for educational as well as religious purposes. The Church, as a whole, should aim to make good citizens as well as good Christians; and he eulogized the work of the University Settlement Society of New York, which devotes much time and effort to teaching the foreign population in low parts of the city the ideals of American citizenship and government. From the free library maintained by that society, 30 per cent. of the books taken out refer to American history.

A press despatch from Topeka, Kansas, gives some interesting details that show the enormous interest felt in Rev. Mr. Sheldon's coming experiment in running the Daily Capital of that city for a week according to a standard advocated in his book, "What would Jesus do?" The pastor takes the editorial chair on Tuesday, March 13, and since last Friday over 100,000 subscriptions have been received for the series of papers that will come out under his direction. The total number up to yesterday was over 250,000. The advertising business of the Sheldon issues has also been enormous, although the rate now (March 8) stands at 26 dollars per inch for each insertion. Even at this figure the applications for space are far too many to be granted. All advertising contracts are accepted by the business managers of the paper on condition that they prove acceptable to Mr. Sheldon.

The Sisters of the United Brethren denomition at Marmaton, Kan., decided to erect a meeting-house in their town, but they only had enough money to buy the materials for the building. After some little delay in debate, they resolved to dig out the ground for the foundations themselves. So about a dozen of them put on old dresses, and set to work with pick and shovel on the excavation, only stopping to get dinner for their families. When they reached the scene on the third morning, they found a number of townsmen ready to relieve them of the balance of labour.

The Indians of Guatemala.—In the course of a recent communication, Mr. A. E. Bishop, Central America Mission, pleads for more workers amongst the Indian tribes of Guatemala. Much progress in this direction has been made already, but the scarcity of native workers calls for the larger sympathy of Christians, that these vast numbers of heathens may be brought into contact with eternal things. "Humanly speaking," says Mr. Bishop, "these tribes are in easy reach, living generally in healthy localities and in delightful climates, gathered together in cities and towns, reaching as many as 25,000. Shall they continue to pass into eternity with no one to tell them of a Saviour's love?" The work is considerably hampered by the existence of a heavy debt. Communications for Mr. Bishop may be addressd to him at Box 119, Guatemala City.

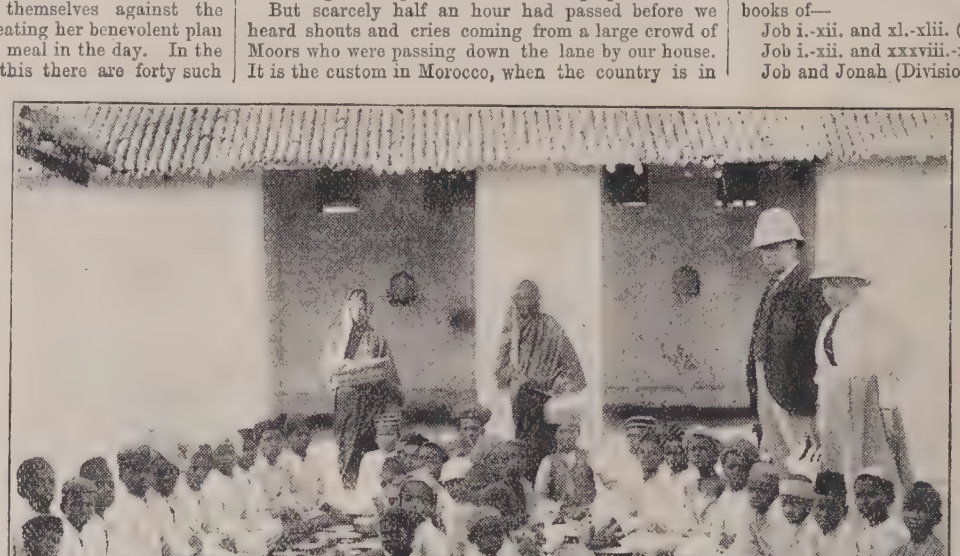
Famine Boys at their Afternoon Meal.

THE picture which appears on this page is from a photograph, taken at Ahmednagar, of boys fed in the Christian Literature Society's Normal School. This Society has been working in Ahmednagar for over thirty-five years. There is a large school, conducted by Mr. J. S. Haig, where, besides primary education, boys are trained to be teachers. It is a very useful institution. Most of its graduates are employed by various missions, and especially by the American Marathi Mission, as schoolmasters. The parents of these children are brought into frequent contact with the schoolmasters, who preach to them the truths of Christianity.

Mr. S. Karmarkar, one of the mission preachers, who supplies these particulars, adds: "This year's famine is more severe than the one of 1897. The hardships which a great many persons have to undergo are greater this time, as this famine has come so closely upon the former that the people have not been able to fortify themselves against the calamity. Mrs. Haig is repeating her benevolent plan of giving the schoolboys one meal in the day. In the picture which accompanies this there are forty such boys. The two women shown are cooks. They both are Christian widows. One has a basket of bread, and the other a vessel of curry. Each boy gets a whole bhákar (bread) and a cupful of curry. But for this one meal the boys would have looked mere skeletons — as crowds of famine-stricken children can be seen in this land. This hospitality cannot continue without help. We are aiming to save these and others from premature death."



MRS. HAIG'S FAMINE CHILDREN, AHMEDNAGAR.

Another effort to help starving children is that which is being made in the the Telugu district of the Madras Presidency. In that part thousands of people are living on roots and leaves, and in several villages there is not a drop of water to be obtained.

As the dry and hot season is approaching, the results are appalling to contemplate. In view of these conditions, it is gratifying to find that definite steps are being taken in this locality for the protection of orphans—the ever-plentiful fruit of a famine. A number of missionaries recently assembled at the home of Dr. J. E. Clough, and decided to establish an orphanage. The institution is to be known as the Ongole Faith Orphanage, and is to be dependent upon voluntary offerings.

Although the undertaking is born of the present great need for the relief of famine orphans, it is desirable that the work shall sufficiently develop to meet the need of a permanent institution.

A Kind Little Lady.

THE following incident will show how the kind thoughtfulness of our brave hero, General Sir George White, for all those around him, has descended to his little daughter of some six years. She was walking with her nurse near the borders of Windsor Great Park, when she met the cripple boys from Princess Christian's Holiday Home. Fastening her eyes on the most helpless one of the number, she said: "Poor little boy," "Poor little cripple boy."

No rest would she give those around her till she was driven into Windsor to buy oranges and cakes for the little sufferers; and when the news of the gallant relief of Ladysmith came she was allowed further to show her sympathy by inviting all the boys to tea. A beautiful repast was then enjoyed, followed by fireworks.

Surely these boys were among the most highly favoured in the land! We thank God for the loving kindness shown towards them by the little daughter of the brave General. J. K.

Aiweesha.

"If ye have faith."

AIWEESHA is a pretty, brown-eyed Moorish maiden, about ten years old; she has for some time made my house her home, attending the school which we hold in the morning, and having her meals with me. She has learnt many Psalms and Scripture passages, and is getting on well in needlework and reading, the latter of course in Arabic, as that is her native language. She was born in Tangier, and has never been more than a mile or two from her home.

An American missionary and her children had promised to spend the afternoon with us before I left. This greatly delighted Aiweesha, as she dearly loves the whole family. It was a bright, sunny morning. I was busy in the house, when, about twelve o'clock, Aiweesha ran into my room with tears in her eyes, and said, "Oh, Tabeeba, what shall we do?" Everything is arranged in the garden (for in that sunny land the afternoon was to be spent out of doors), and now see what dark clouds are coming up; it is going to rain, and no one will be able to come." And the tears flowed faster and faster. However, before I had time to reply, she said: "I know what I will do; I will go and ask God not to let it rain." Away she ran, and, as usual when she prays, shut herself up alone in the small schoolroom. Before long she came back to me again, with a happy, satisfied face. "I have told God about it," she said "and asked Him not to let it rain;" and away she went into the garden again to continue her preparations.

But scarcely half an hour had passed before we heard shouts and cries coming from a large crowd of Moors who were passing down the lane by our house. It is the custom in Morocco, when the country is in need of rain, for the better educated men and boys to assemble in large numbers and go all round the town, continually shouting prayers to God to send the rain. They have a way of generally starting these processions when they see the clouds gathering!

Poor Aiweesha, of course, heard the shouting; and again she ran into the house in the greatest distress. "Oh, Tabeeba, what will God do? I have but just asked Him to give us sunshine, and now there are all these men praying to Him to send the rain. What will God do?" "I do not know, dear," I said, "what God will do; but whatever He does is sure to be just right."

Somewhat happier, Aiweesha ran off to the roof, and there stood watching the clouds grow darker and darker, until at length some big drops fell; but presently I heard a little voice shouting joyfully, "The rain has stopped, the clouds are going, the sun is coming out again." By two o'clock, the time we expected our guests, the sun was shining brightly, and Aiweesha, from her watch-tower, called out "They are coming, Tabeeba; I can see them—baby and all." And away she ran to meet them.

A happy afternoon followed, without a cloud, and our friends safely returned to their home. In the evening, as Aiweesha and I sat working, the rain came. It fell in such torrents that soon we were both hard at work trying in vain to keep it out of the house; it was pouring through the ill-fitting doors and windows. As Aiweesha merrily helped me, she suddenly looked up and said, "Tabeeba, it was true; God did know what to do, for He has sent both the sun and the rain," and together we thanked Him.

Will you remember to pray for this little one, and also for the thousands of children in dark Morocco, who have never heard of Jesus? Jennie Jay.

"The Beatitudes" (Matt. iv. 25 to v. 12).

Golden Text—"Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God" (Matt. v. 8).

Introduction.

FIND on a map the places mentioned in the first verse given for study, viz., Galilee, Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, Jordan; by this we can understand what a mixture of all classes, all ages, all characters, there would be; to these people Christ had many new things to say and teach, such things they had never heard before, and in our lesson we read some.

Mr. Moody said: "If you live by the Gospel precepts, you may live on the Gospel promises." Jesus Christ has to teach us some precepts to-day, and to every one is a promise given.

"Set" (1)—In the East teachers sit to teach.

"Disciples"—Many followers, not only apostles.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—The one word "Blessed" is given to every division; it means the highest possible degree of happiness. The divisions are carried out in the lesson.

These beatitudes give us the true Christian character, and the first step towards this end is to be "poor in spirit," (3) which means "being humble."

The humble-minded are the subjects of the Kingdom of Heaven. Humility always was, and always will be, the only way to true repentance. "Poor in spirit" is the opposite to pride, and pride, we read, is an abomination to the Lord (Psa. li. 17; Prov. xiii. 7; Isa. lxvi. 2; Isa. lvii. 15).

As the first step was "humility" (4), the second is "repentance," viz., sorrow for sin. The one follows the other, and the result is "comfort," which means Christ's own peace and rest (Isa. lix. 2; lxi. 3; Matt. xi. 28-30).

The next stage in Christian growth is "meekness" (5), willing to abide by God's will, willing He should carry out his plan with us, even though we do not always understand it (Psa. xxv. 9; xxxvii. 11; 1 Peter iii. 4).

Hunger and thirst (6) show a healthy body; so does hunger and thirst after spiritual things show a healthy soul. Righteousness—right actions, right motives, &c. (Psa. cvii. 9; Isa. lv. 1; John vii. 37, vi. 35).

"Merciful"—kind, forgiving. In the Lord's Prayer we are taught to pray, "Forgive as we forgive." As we deal with our fellow-men, so will God deal with us (Psa. xli. 1; Prov. xviii. 24; Mark xi. 25).

As the Christian grows, purity must of necessity come into the life (8). "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." God is holy, and the subjects of the Kingdom must be holy, too (Psa. lxxiii. 1, xxiv. 4; Heb. xii. 14; 2 Cor. vii. 1).

God is a God of peace (9); Jesus Christ is the Prince of peace. The Holy Spirit brings peace when He takes possession of a heart, and that heart, in its turn, must be a peacemaker (Phil. iv. 7; Isa. ix. 6; Gen. xiii. 8).

The persecuted will be blessed (10), for persecuted in this world the Christian soldier will be if he is true to his colours (2 Tim. iii. 12; ii. 12; Rev. vii. 14-17; 1 Pet. iii. 14).

Notice "ye," "you" (11). It all turns on "for my sake." What are we willing to bear for his dear sake? Insult, false accusation, lies, hatred, separation, and even to be cast out as evil. (See Luke vi. 22.) And why? Because you resemble the Christ whom the world hates (Heb. xi. 26; 1 Pet. iv. 14).

Like a beautiful bell chimes in that word at the end, "Rejoice," "Rejoice," "Rejoice" (12). It is worth all the persecution to receive the great reward at last, and hear the Master who drew out this plan say, "Well done."

"Blessed are the Poor in spirit,
Pure in heart,
Peacemakers,
Persecuted,
Mourner,
Meek,
Merciful,
the Hungry, and Thirsty.

THE FORMING OF THE CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

1. Humility.
2. Repentance.
3. Meekness.
4. Deep desire to do right.
5. Kindness.
6. Purity.
7. Peacemaking.
8. Patiently bearing persecution.
9. Living "for Jesus' sake."

Y.M.C.A. Notes.

IN response to the invitation of the British Commissioners, a handsome stand has been prepared by the English National Council to represent the work of the Y.M.C.A. at the Paris Exhibition, and is assigned a prominent position in the Social Science department. The world-wide character of the work is strikingly shown by an artistic illuminated design, in which, under the figure of a spreading and well-fruited tree, the Association is depicted sheltering a group of young men of various races and climes. Beneath this is the Association motto, "That they all may be one," while above it is a large reproduction of the Y.M.C.A. emblematical badge.

Returns of the work in Germany show that there are now in that country 1,687 associations, with an aggregate membership of 92,500. Sixty-one of these occupy their own buildings, which are of a total value of 3,105,000 marks; and twenty-nine enjoy the advantage of the whole-time services of a secretary.

In France, where the work is attended by extreme difficulty, there are 146 associations, of which, however, only ninety are connected with the National Alliance. The total membership of the affiliated societies is 4,587, which is an increase of 60 per cent. upon the returns for the year 1895.

The opening of premises in Glebe Street, for the use of the recently-formed Association at Stoke-on-Trent, took place on the 15th inst. Well-attended and most enthusiastic meetings were held afternoon and evening in the Town Hall, under the chairmanship of Mr. H. M. Robinson, the president. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Canon Sutton, of Aston; the Vicar of Stoke, Rev. A. L. Fillingham, and the travelling secretary, supported by the Mayor of Stoke, Mr. R. Heath, J.P., and others.

The Y.M.C.A. at Poona shows signs of spiritual progress. The Workers' Training Class has for its leader Mr. J. H. Lowe, whose Bible teaching has been blessed to the members. Two new Bible circles are inaugurated, one for Indian Christians and one for clerks.

At the annual meeting of the Sydney, New South Wales, Y.M.C.A., interesting accounts of the work were given by the general secretary. The principal event of the year was the mission conducted by Rev. C. H. Yatman. In 20 days he held forty-three meetings, and 1,450 inquirers filled up covenant cards. A move has been made to reduce the mortgage debt, Sir James Fairfax having started the fund with a donation of £500. Other donations brought the total up to about £900. Religious work had been carried on as usual, with good results in all departments.

The Council of the N.E. Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, at their last meeting decided to make a grant of £30 to the Tottenham Y.M.C.A., and £100 to the New Premises Fund of the Canning Town Y.M.C.A. It was also decided to continue the special crusade demonstrations, against intemperance, gambling, and impurity, at a number of the largest centres throughout the district.

The annual meeting of the Brompton branch will take place on Monday next at St. Columba's Church-room, Pont Street, at 8 p.m.

Intercession.—Christ suffers not that one should pray for himself alone, but for the whole community of all men. For He teaches us, not to say "My Father," but "Our Father." Prayer is a spiritual, common possession; therefore we must despoil no one of it, not even our enemies. For, as He is the Father of us all, He wills that we shall be brothers amongst each other, and pray for one another, as for ourselves.—Martin Luther.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

Of the numerous efforts put forth for the weal of the sailor—initiated and maintained by well-directed philanthropy—the Seamen's Christian Friend Society occupies a conspicuous position. The spiritual results which have crowned the endeavours of fifty-three years, are sufficient to prove that the blessing of God has attended the labours of those who are working in the interests of seafarers and others associated with shipping. Not only from the port of London, but from the Sailors' "Bethels" and "Rests" around the British coast, there come tidings of continuous blessing, and the missionaries' reports abound with incidents showing how God has prospered the "Word of his Grace" to the eternal benefit of those brought under the sound of the Gospel at little meetings on shipboard, in forecastle or cabin, and the larger gatherings at the institutes on shore.

At the Society's headquarters the work is both extensive and varied, comprising English and foreign Evangelistic meetings, noon-day devotional gatherings, Bible classes, Christian Endeavour Society, Sunday school, &c. The attendance and interest of sailors has been most encouraging, and many are those who have been arrested from their careless and indifferent living. On one occasion, after the Gospel had been proclaimed in English, German, and Swedish, nearly forty seamen from various climes resolved to forsake their former evil ways, and turn with full purpose of heart unto the Lord.

The Society endeavours to urge upon the sailors the benefits of total abstinence, believing that taking the temperance pledge has proved the means of preventing many from falling victims to the snare and curse of the taverns while on shore. At Lynn another mission has been started, with a temporary seamen's institute and home, which, it is hoped, will shortly become a permanency.

The world-wide correspondence which is conducted by the missionaries has been of a fruitful character. The letters which arrive at the institutes bear striking testimony to the valuable service rendered in this department. One of these runs:—

"I sincerely thank you for your kind Christian letter, which has done so much to cheer and comfort me, for, alas! I find my shipmates are not only strangers to the love of God, but scoffers at religion."

Another sailor writes from Copenhagen:—"It is many months since I was at your place, but I will not forget it. As I look back to it, I feel it was the happiest time I ever spent on shore."

Whilst seeking to befriend sailors in every possible way, safeguarding their interests, and promoting their temporal comfort, yet the Society's main object is to win them for Christ. Many are the instances of the mysterious workings of God's goodness, and innumerable are the expressions of gratitude from men who have been tided over seasons of darkness—temporal and spiritual—and have been led to trust their lives in the keeping of One who has declared Himself to be the "confidence of them that are afar off upon the sea."

"Underground London."—At the present moment four new underground railways are being constructed in London, viz.: The Baker Street to Waterloo, the Moorgate Street to Islington, the Finsbury Park to Moorgate Street, and the Bow to Whitechapel. Nearly 4,000 men are employed in constructing these lines. Mr. E. G. Smith, of the Navvies' Institute, writes: "My colleague and myself visit three of the railways, descending into the tunnel where the men are working (in some parts from ninety to upwards of 100 feet below the surface). We give short addresses and distribute Gospel literature." The Navvy Mission Society pay the stipends of the missionaries; but good literature would be gladly received at the Navvies' Institute, Station Road, Walthamstow, E.

The Wickliffe Preachers.

THE work of the Wickliffe Preachers, in connection with the Protestant movement inaugurated by Mr. John Kensit and organized under the title of the Protestant Truth Society, has undoubtedly been productive of much good in directing public attention to the pretensions and operations of the sacerdotal party, and arousing evangelicals to take action, where needed, in defence of Reformation principles.

Evidently the preachers are young men of earnest and devotion. We have been privileged to look through some of the weekly report forms which the workers fill in and forward to London, and have found therein evidences of industry and ability. A preacher's position is by no means a sinecure. The days are well occupied in morning bible study and prayer, followed in the afternoon by house-to-house visitation and the distribution of helpful literature, the evenings being occupied with open-air or indoor meetings.

In the course of their peregrinations, the preachers have visited many parts of the provinces. Their sustained protest against the introduction and maintenance of Popish practices, especially in those places where fear or lethargy has allowed the Romanizing party to hold sway, has been timely and valuable. Recently compiled accounts show that great numbers of people have been reached. It must be remembered that the mission of the preachers is not only to controvert error, but to preach the Gospel. It is part of their charge that they shall "forget not, at every meeting, to invite poor, lost, guilty, hell-deserving sinners to Christ for immediate salvation," so that "God the Holy Ghost will bear witness, with the Word, and precious souls shall be born again by the incorruptible seed of the 'Word of God which liveth and abideth for ever.'"

As to literature, over 350,000 pamphlets have been given away, including a history of the Reformation, an edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, sermons of an evangelistic character by Rev. E. A. Stuart, and a number of anti-infidel works.

To follow on and strengthen the preacher's work, bands of local workers have been organized, and some good work is in progress. Controversial classes and open-air and indoor lectures are to be arranged, and Protestant electoral rolls sent out. Owing to the war contributions have fallen off of late, but it is hoped that no curtailment of the work will become necessary.

Personalia.

Dr. T. C. Edwards, principal of Bala Theological College, is very ill. On Tuesday he was reported to be in a critical condition.

Dr. John Marshall Lang, minister of the Barony Parish, Glasgow, has been appointed to be Principal of Aberdeen University, in the room of the late Sir William Geddes.

Mr. Whytock (late of the Congo), deputation secretary of the Regions Beyond Mission Union, is leaving to-day on a visit to Canada and the United States. He will be thankful for opportunities for missionary testimony on the other side, and may be addressed: Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario.

The announcements as to Rev. G. Campbell Morgan resuming work immediately are inaccurate. The operation in his throat proved more severe than was expected. He is now enjoying complete rest at Aberystwyth, and when he resumes work, at the end of April, he will confine himself to his pastoral duties at Tollington Park. His place at the Colonial Missionary meeting in May will be taken by Rev. W. Hardy Harwood.

Batley.—At the annual church meeting in connection with the Gospel Hall, Batley, Yorks, the reports from the various agencies at work proved to be of an encouraging character. Throughout the year the evangelistic services had been crowded. Several drunkards had been reclaimed, backsliders restored, and believers quickened to higher life and service. The work among the carriers and cabmen, open-air meetings, public-house door missions, hospital and workhouse visitations, and women's Bible meetings had been vigorously prosecuted.

London Wesleyan Mission.

THE vigour and enthusiasm which characterizes the operations of London Wesleyans in their mission enterprises were manifest on Monday evening at the annual meeting of the London Mission. A large audience assembled in the Queen's Hall, and the gathering was in every way worthy of the great object of its promoters.

The chair was taken by Mr. T. R. Ferens, of Hull, who spoke in appreciative terms of what had been accomplished by the mission, especially in the interests of the constantly flowing stream of young life from the country. Some from his own town, on coming to live in the metropolis, had been received by the Mission into membership.

Rev. W. D. Walters, general secretary, gave a brief summary of the work at the mission centres during the year. The membership of the Mission now numbers 3,000, and there has been advancement "all along the line." He strongly appealed for the support of all who desired to see that progress maintained.

Rev. Walford Green spoke of the reflex influence of the Mission—not only in London, but in other centres, where their methods had been adopted and blessed by results beyond all calculation.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., in a vigorous address, regarded the success of the past as very little compared with what the future promised. Methodism had not to tell off its best ministers to consider in solemn conclave whether incense should be burnt in places of worship either for purposes of worship or for sanitation; nor had they to discuss whether they should burn candles in the daylight or not. Their primary duty must be to preach the Gospel of Christ, and promote agencies which aimed at the regeneration of man.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes spoke at some length on the organization of the Mission, and the co-operation of the provinces in the undertaken. Referring to the West London Mission, Mr. Hughes said that 90 per cent. of the young men who entered the inquiry rooms came from the country. The only limit to their work was the incapacity of the halls to hold the congregations, every Sunday hundreds of people being crowded out.

Rev. Peter Thompson spoke in warm appreciation of the valuable aid of the Sisters. Many he had known personally had been led to seek Christ through the patient, persevering visits and exhortations of these ladies. The medical department enabled them to supply material aid as well as spiritual comfort. He earnestly appealed for more workers for the East End, and gave some encouraging evidences of the fruitful and permanent work of the Mission.

Irish Notes.

AT the twelfth meeting of the Belfast branch of the Irish Missions to the Jews, it was stated that over a thousand Hebrew New Testaments, as well as a large number of Yiddish tracts, had been distributed. Referring to the objects of the Society, Mr. J. Julian Grande remarked that at the present time there was great need on the part of Christians for a stronger enthusiasm on behalf of the Mission to the Jews in Ireland, for at no time were there more opportunities for their evangelization than now. The Gospel seed had already taken root, and spread itself all over the Irish Jewry.

The Dublin Battalion of the Boys' Brigade has had two very successful meetings in the Metropolitan Hall, the place being crowded to overflowing each evening. On the first evening there were 1,156 boys present, and on the second 1,070. The leading ministers of the various denominations were also present, and so was the Lord Mayor of Dublin. The Archbishop of Dublin presided on one of the evenings, and delivered a very suitable address, in which he urged the boys to be manly and to follow in the footsteps of the Saviour. On the second evening Lord Justice Holmes presided, and amongst those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. S. Prenter, Wesley Guard, G. Mahaffy, and the Dean of the Chapel Royal.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR MARCH 25.

"The Glory of Obedience" (Matt. xxi. 28-32).

YOU can picture the early morning in the homestead. The vineyard is the family patrimony. The definite article indicates it as the object of the family's common work and toil. The father has the burden of responsibility and direction. Son, go work! There is an air of command in the words, coupled with tenderness. Though God is our Father, He is also Governor and King, and expects literal obedience. The mistake of too many Christians is that they are willing to take the shelter of the Father's home, and share in the benefits of Christ's redemption, without yielding literal obedience. Sonship implies obedience. Note that the obedience follows the sonship; we do not work to become sons, but having had the right granted to us to become the sons of God, we are prepared to hear Him say, "Go, work!" We were created unto good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them. There is a bit in the vineyard which will never be cultivated until you put your hand to it; souls to be won by you, which perhaps will never yield till you take them captive.

Young sons and daughters of God! Go, work! He will not give you heavier work than you have strength to perform; will send you refreshment in the noontide heat, and at evening a full reward.

The answer was an abrupt refusal, "I will not." Children often treat their parents with a brusque unpoliteness which they would not think of extending to strangers. The more the shame! But those who are so blunt and rough often hide a tender heart in their breast. The hard rind conceals luscious fruit: like the cocoanut, the tough exterior needs simply to be tapped, and refreshing milk issues. There is always hope in a man who at the first vehemently refuses and antagonizes the Gospel. Only yesterday I was told by a Christian worker that the man who had blankly refused a tract had no rest until he had apologized, and sought the Saviour. This son was the type of many people who seem least likely to be moved by the appeals of the Gospel. This class includes men like Saul of Tarsus, St. Augustine, John Bunyan, John Newton, and Brownlow North. But so often such become the most earnest Christians. There is a sense in which it takes a very bad man to make a good man; reclaimed poachers make the best gamekeepers. Despair of none. The man who says, "I will not," is the one who probably within an hour will repent himself and make for the vineyard, toiling all day, not without some shame in his soul.

Beware of the temperament of the younger son! Easy-going, pleasure-loving, mobile, polite. Notice he says, "Sir." With bland suavity, he assures the father that he will attend to all his wishes. But as hour follows hour, his friends drop in, amusements invite, the growing heat disinclines, various excuses suggest themselves, with the result that he does not darken the vineyard paths. One has met this type of character in the home circle and inquiry room, and probably there is no nature so hard at the heart as this plausible and well-spoken individual.

The one point with Christ was, to do the will of God. It was a matter of comparative indifference whether the speech was rough or smooth, the manner polished or uncouth; everywhere and always he asked that men should do the will of the Father that was in heaven. If the publican, who seemed least likely, did it, he was accepted; whereas the Pharisee, who promised so well, but failed to perform, must stand rejected. Mr. Moody once asked Mr. Spurgeon to come to the East End of London, promising him an audience of 10,000 persons as an inducement. Mr. Spurgeon gave a memorable reply: "I am not eager to speak to 10,000 persons, but to do the will of God."

C.E. NOTES.

Dr. Clark writes that when on board the China en route for the East, he met many missionaries bound for China, Japan, Korea, Siam, and the Philippines, all of whom were deeply interested in the propagation of Christian Endeavour. One of these had received his first impulse to the missionary life from the C.E. Convention at Minneapolis.

The sixth annual Scottish Convention is to be held in Paisley on April 21, 22, 23, and 24. Arrangements are now being made for special speakers and topics. Amongst the former will be included Rev. Henry Montgomery and Rev. H. B. Workman, of the British National Council.

About Books.

A Manual of Sermon Construction, by Rev. Robert J. Wardell (1s. C. H. Kelly), is a singularly clear and succinct statement of method designed to assist local preachers.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons have issued a new pocket English-German Dictionary of Business Words and Terms, with a list of abbreviations in general use. It has been prepared by Fritz Hundel, and is a model of compression and comprehensiveness. In content, it will meet all reasonable demands of the commercial clerk; in shape it is what the pocket requires, being two inches and a half broad and six and a half long. (2s. 6d.)

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson has written the story of his recent voyage in the North Seas, and he gives it to the world in a handsome volume, My Trip in the "John Williams." All friends of missions will delight in the pages; supporters of the L.M.S., who followed with a personal interest the building of the mission vessel, will have a still stronger attraction to the book (2s. 6d. L.M.S. House; and Simpkin, Marshall. & Co.)

A very instructive volume of studies is Twice: The Repeated Words of the Lord Jesus, by L. M. Moor. (1s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) The pages show that to a remarkable extent our Lord expressed similar truths and made like declarations in different periods of his ministry. These repetitions are distinguished as to time and significance; and those who study the book will thank the author for leading them into very interesting and highly profitable fields of Scripture investigation.

Two useful little books by Rev. Charles Bullock are: Sunrise in Britain: How the Light Dawned; and The Eclipse of Truth: How the Light was Obscured. (1s. 6d. "Home Words" Office.) The latter book is the sequel of the former; and the two tell the story of the introduction of the Gospel to Britain, and the subsequent arrival of Roman agents with the teachings and practices of Popery. The treatment is essentially popular, and both volumes are admirably illustrated.

Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier have added to their useful series of missionary books descriptive of the work in particular countries, In Afric's Forest and Jungle, in which Rev. R. H. Stone summarizes his six years' life and experiences in the Yoruba country. Mr. Stone moved much among the people, discussed religious and humane questions with bloodthirsty chiefs, and observed with a keen eye the appalling horrors of uncivilized life in the Niger towns. His book is a welcome contribution to missionary literature. The illustrations are numerous and good (3s. 6d.)

A pamphlet at once substantial in form and useful in content is Westminster College, Cambridge: An account of the opening of the College at Cambridge, on 17 October 1899, with a history of the College from its foundation in 1844 to the present time. (1s. nett. Publishing Office, Presbyterian Church of England, 14, Paternoster Square, E.C.) Edited by Rev. A. Halliday Douglas, M.A., and fully illustrated, these pages will not only have attractions for all members of the English Presbyterian body, but likewise for such as are interested in theological colleges and their important work.

The late Rev. J. Jackson Goadby was a man who deserved well of Evangelical Nonconformity. His "By-paths in Baptist History" testified to his historical erudition and literary attainments. One of his works, which was originally published privately, has now been issued in a second edition, The Best Society, and Other Lectures. Among other contents may be mentioned "The Wit and Wisdom of Thomas Fuller;" "Wise Saws, English and Foreign;" also character-sketches of Oliver Cromwell, Bulstrode Whitelock, Mrs. Lucy Hutchinson, John Howard, Sydney Smith, and William Cobbett. This is a very instructive book, with an admirable portrait of the lamented author. (5s. Elliot Stock.)

The Poetical Works of John Milton, as issued by Mr. Henry Frowde, is a beautiful book. Edited after the original texts by Rev. H. C. Beeching, M.A., it is in bold type, and reproduces those features which the careful student and literary antiquary will know how to value. There are many facsimiles of title pages, also a fine frontispiece after the engraving of Faithorne. (3s. 6d.) The "Oxford Miniature Edition" is an admirable companion volume. The text is the same, but with the spelling modernized. By the use of the well-known India paper, the publisher is able to give us the complete poetical works of Milton printed in clear type in a very handy pocket volume. Though the pages number nearly 1,100, the book is only about three-quarters of an inch thick. (3s. 6d.)

Mr. G. Washington Moon's little book, The Soul's Inquiries Answered from the Bible, is properly described in the preface as "a sacred mosaic of over 1,750 texts of Scripture." The pages give readings for every day of the year; and these are so arranged that a Scripture question is answered by one or more Scripture statements of fact or faith, experience or hope, love or devotion. The compiler's fear of dogma has carried him too far in some instances; as when, in answer to the penitent's question: "What shall I do to be saved?" he gives an answer suited to the believer's inquiry as to the means whereby he may glorify God. The book has already had a large circulation; the revised edition is said to be "practically a new work." (Paper, 8d.; cloth, 1s. 6d. Longmans.)

In his goodly volume, The British Empire and Alliances: or Britain's Duty to her Colonies and Subject Races, Dr. Theo. E. S. Scholes discusses problems which have a moral significance as well as a political importance. Here is a survey of the British Empire, with the story of its commercial development, also a discussion of international relations, actual and possible. The growth and decline of other great Powers are also described, and lessons drawn therefrom. Taking his facts from sources of acknowledged authority, Dr. Scholes is not content to argue for political expediency on the part of Great Britain so much as for moral rectitude and national righteousness. He discusses Chinese trade and the sugar question as regards the West Indies; but no pages of the book are so timely in information or so strong in argument as those in which he deals with the colour question. His championship of the cause of the Negro race is based on fulness of knowledge and thorough sympathy; and we trust the pages will be instrumental of much good in lands where the white and dark races are found side by side. In a chapter entitled "Our Future Policy," Dr. Scholes holds that, in view of the dangers attending expansion, "it seems incumbent that we should make the concentration and consolidation of the empire our future policy." (8s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

Mr. Mackenzie Bell's patriotic poem entitled "True Sons of Britain," which lately appeared in the Morning Post, has been set to music by Mr. Charles Mills. (2s. Hart & Co.)

Under the title of Be Definite, Mr. Gerald Coultas adds another to his series of plain and earnest booklets on spiritual topics. (1d. Marshall Brothers.)

Cassell's Illustrated History of the Boer War is a new penny serial that is sure of many readers. The second part will appear on March 28, and succeeding parts weekly thereafter.

Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward have issued, in the excellent "Useful Arts and Handicrafts" series, a capital little book on Repousse and Metal Chasing, and another on Tools and their Uses (each 6d. net).

Mr. A. R. Sidders, 55, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W., successor to R. J. Masters, of the Victoria Publications, has issued a chaste intaglio card, in green and silver, entitled Asleep in Jesus, and bearing a short poem by Mary Fenton, based on 1 Thess. iv. 14. (4d. post free.)

The Evils of Alcoholic Liquor and The Liquor Traffic is the title of Mr. Silas Henn's latest pamphlet. Those who want telling facts as well as strong arguments will find both here, from the pen of a Christian who grieves over the evil he exposes. (3d. The Author, 4, Himley Road, Dudley, Worcestershire.)

Messrs. Bemrose & Sons, Limited, have issued, in pamphlet form, a letter by Mrs. Lewis, sister of Mr. Schreiner, Prime Minister of Cape Colony, entitled The War: A Voice from South Africa. (2d.) Mrs. Lewis holds the present conflict to be "a holy war, designed by the Most High to secure justice and freedom to the native tribes of South Africa."

Pamphlets of real value and interest are The Comforter: His Mission and Work, by W. J. Norton—a paper read at a meeting of the Women's Protestant Union. (3d. A. H. Stockwell & Co.) The Rock of Ages, a New Year sermon by C. Silvester Horne, M.A., an issue of "The Kensington Congregational Pulpit." (1d. Passmore & Alabaster.)

The Everlasting People, by Tillie Entrican, deals with the Jews—their past, present, and future. Within the limits assigned her the authoress has done exceptionally well in her attempt to set forth the facts of history and the anticipations of prophecy. (2d. The Author, Y.M.C.A., The Parade, Bridlington.)

Rev. N. Dimock, M.A., deals with a subject on which he can speak with authority in The Crisis in the Church of England: its History and Present Position (3d. Elliot Stock). The pamphlet contains a paper read, in June last, at a meeting of the South-Eastern Clerical and Lay Church Alliance, and printed by request of those who heard it.

The opening lecture of the session of the United Presbyterian College, delivered in November last by Rev. Principal Hutton, D.D., has been issued in pamphlet form. It is entitled Christian Unity and Ecclesiastical Union, in relation to the Mission of the Church. (6d. nett Alex Gardner, Paisley). Great principles are dealt with in these pages.

The City Press, 148 and 149, Aldersgate Street, E.C., has issued The C.I.V. Souvenir, No. 2. The illustrations are different from those appearing in No. 1, and include portraits of many of the Imperials and new groups of the detachments. A revised list of the men forming the regiment is also published. (2d.)

In Firm Footpaths for Young Feet, Mr. J. H. Greene points out, by means of many texts and illustrations, the path to be taken, and the devious and dangerous by-paths to be avoided. As a missioner to children, Mr. Greene is on familiar ground, and his talks to the young in this booklet are simple, earnest and direct, and are written in the light of long experience amongst children. (1d. Church Association.)

District visitors, scripture readers, and all who would comfort the suffering, will find helpful thoughts in Canon Bateman's Short Sermons for Sick Rooms (1s. 3d. C. J. Thynne). The boldness of the type, and the excellent arrangement of these brief discourses, render the book one that is sure to prove of service to those who minister to the sick and dying.

Evangelistic.

Gipsy Smith in Bornemouth.

AN eight-days' mission, under the auspices of the local Free Church Council, by Gipsy Smith has proved a great blessing in Bournemouth. Beginning on Saturday night in the Shaftesbury Hall, the building was found far too small to accommodate the numbers which came, and adjournment was made to Richmond Hill Congregational Church. From 1,400 to 1,600 gathered each evening, while on the closing Sunday probably 2,000 were packed in the building. Rev. J. D. Jones, M.A., B.D., pastor of the Church, conducted an overflow meeting in the Lecture Hall. About 300 passed into the inquiry rooms through the week, and all the Free Church ministers cordially co-operated.

Mr. George Clarke at Bolton.

Mr. George Clarke has conducted a fifteen-days' mission in the Temperance Hall, Bolton, under the auspices of the Free Church Council, assisted by the Nonconformist Ministers' Association, the Y.M.C.A., and the Sunday School Union. The mission commenced with a gathering of young people, which crowded the Hall. After the evening services in the churches there was a "rush" for the Temperance Hall, and thus an opportunity was afforded the missioner of speaking to Church members and inspiring them for effort to reach the unsaved. Interest in the work deepened as the mission proceeded, and large numbers of all classes have received blessing.

Mr. Charles Cook's Work.

A fortnight special mission has been held at Hyde Park Hall, with gratifying results in the conversion of many unsaved, and the building up of God's people. Mr. Leonard Weaver spoke with power, and the singing of Miss Rose Williams was helpful. At each meeting some confessed Christ. On Sunday evening we returned to our usual meetings, when the Metropolitan Theatre was crowded; and we were busy for an hour subsequent to the service, pointing sinners to Christ. Next Sunday, March 25, I hope to celebrate my twenty-fifth year of ministry as an evangelist in this one building. Chas Cook.

Hinckley Evangelical Alliance of Free Churches.

The recent ten-days' mission in connection with the above, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, has resulted in spiritual revival. The meetings were held in the various Free churches, and on most occasions the seating capacity was tested to its utmost capacity. When expounding the Scriptures the missioner was particularly at home, his method having a telling effect. A large number of persons, apart from the children of the Sunday-school, entered the inquiry room. The mission will doubtless have the effect of awakening many to a higher sense of their responsibility and also in the closer union of the Free Churches for the common weal.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond in the Southern States.

In the course of his recent tour, Rev. E. P. Hammond, after leaving Charleston, was invited to Orangeburg, S.C., to visit Claflin University and the State College, which have an aggregate of 1,200 students. A blessed work was done among them, especially in the State College, whose president, Hon. T. W. Miller, is a conspicuous leader of the coloured race.

Columbia was next visited. Several hundred professed conversion in five days, and a revival began in Allen University. Mr. Hammond then spent the Sabbath at Momtreat, a resort where people from the North have sought an equable climate. It was founded by Rev. J. C. Collins, who still resides there, and some of whose children had been converted in Mr. Hammond's meetings in New Haven. The son of another minister there had been similarly blessed in Los Angeles; while a third minister, when a boy, had been converted in one of Mr. Hammond's meetings for children near Alton, Ill. In the services a number of persons yielded to the Saviour. The work will be continued by local ministers. Mr. Hammond next visited Biddle University at Charlotte, N.C. In two days and a half, over 300 gave in their names professing conversion. The Christian students assisted in the inquiry meetings.

The Gospel Tent Campaign.

Already a considerable band of well-known evangelists, pastors and teachers are prepared to enter into and vigorously sustain this work during the coming summer. Bands of players and singers, with consecrated music and voices, are needed for this mission. Some hundreds of preachers will be needed; and, comprehending the Lord's people of every name, and making vital union with Christ the great aim and object of the mission, the work must succeed.

"Let nothing be done through strife or vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." There should be also at an early date the fixing of two or three whole nights for special waiting upon God. There is a capital room in Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., suitable for such meetings of evangelists, ministers, and brethren who know their need of enduement with power from on high. We shall be glad to hear of suggestions in order to increase of "love, power, and a sound mind." It is not numbers but reality, not quantity but quality, that is needed. There should be a great—yea, a divine exorcising power received, in order to cast out the demons of unbelief, indifference, intemperance, covetousness gambling, sensuality, and ungodliness. These kinds go not forth save by prayer and fasting—by direct divine intervention.

What can we say to induce scores of ladies whose ordinary social life has in it so little of real usefulness, to come to the meetings, not only to get blessing, but to impart it? What home visitors they might become!—what living advertisements of the executive forces which should "boom" the campaign! Who will distribute invitations and visit tens of thousands of the houses? Who will help to scatter the Word of life in the homes, and sing the Gospel into human heads and hearts?

May the summer months of 1900 know a Gospel campaign that shall be felt throughout the lengths and breadths of the great city! London needs such a mission. The people are ready for it. They will hear. They will come, and in this respect "the King's business requireth haste." The monetary cost is trifling. It is not more than a tenth of the sum which is often expended upon some church edifice in which to-day a mere handful of people congregate. It is neither buildings nor large sums of money that are needed, but men and women who are fully yielded to God, surrendered to his service, and prepared to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty forces of evil and sin, which are destroying multitudes of our fellow men. We trust that the end of the month will see the £3,000 either promised to or in the hands of Mr. Garstin, the well-known and estimable treasurer of the London Tent Campaign. His address is Queen Square, Aldersgate Street, E.C. Henry Varley.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has just completed a fifteen-days' mission in the East-end Tabernacle, Derby Road, Gloucester. The services on Sundays, morning and evening, have been evangelistic, and in the afternoon, for men only, on social purity. Several yielded to the Saviour. The mission was a source of blessing, specially to young men. Sceptics sought interviews, and at the week night services the meetings were thrown open for questions from those seeking light. At Clason Memorial Free Church, Motherwell, Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelization Society (Scottish Branch), has conducted a fortnight of special services with much acceptance and with tokens of the Lord's gracious presence.

A very helpful four-weeks' Gospel Mission has just been held in the Baptist Chapel, Longhope, Gloucestershire, by Mr. J. Coates, of Ross, and Mr. G. Bentley, of Stroud; the pastor, W. Leyshon, co-operating. The meetings throughout were remarkably well attended, and between forty and fifty persons, chiefly young people of the Sunday school, professed conversion.

At the mission lately held at Wootton, Oxfordshire, by Mr. J. Harris, of the Evangelization Society, a spiritual awakening followed on the preaching of the Word. Mr. Thomas Payne's recent eleven-days' mission at the Bloomsbury Institution, Birmingham, was, Mr. T. Henry informs us, an encouraging time, many coming to the Lord, and blessing being given to believers. Mr. John Elliott writes of meetings at Immanuel Hall, Southsea. "The Lord is working in our midst, especially amongst the young, and the meetings are to be continued." Mr. W. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has held a mission at St. Albans. Notwithstanding rough weather, many attended the services. Mr. Sampson rang a large bell, and announced the services in several important streets. Good work was done.

The meetings being held by Mr. Henry Varley at Bradford are growing in numbers. Arranged so as to cover large portions of the city, many hundreds in all parts are hearing the word of life. Sunday last was a memorable day. The afternoon gathering of men will not soon be forgotten. Mr. Varley's address upon "the largest word for meaning that we ever use" was enthusiastically received by the large company of men who assembled, whilst at night the Manville Methodist Free Church witnessed a scene that made all hearts glad. The congregation was large and deeply impressed; Miss Shepard, of New York, sang "Saved by Grace" very tenderly. In the after meeting forty confessed Christ, and the night's service closed with joy and gladness to many hearts. The meetings are continued throughout the coming week.

Evangelists' Engagements.

Mr. Henry Varley.—Till Mar. 25, Bradford, Yorkshire (Inter-denominational Mission. Meetings will be held in fifteen churches, representing ten denominations); Suns. Apl. 1 and 8 at 11 a.m., and 6.30 p.m., East London Tabernacle, Burdett Road, E.

Mr. J. S. Harrison.—Mar. 25, Borough Road.

Manuel Matamoros' Mother.

IT is a pleasure to learn that some friends have come forward to help the mother of Manuel Matamoros in her present need. As we recently stated, she finds herself in pecuniary difficulties; as the mother of one who was a martyr to the cause of religious liberty in Spain, the mere statement of her necessitous condition should be its own appeal.

Mr. William Greene, of 3, Endsleigh Gardens, Euston, N.W., who has for many years been the English correspondent of Dona Dolores, writes that some months ago about £50 was sent to her; about £10 is still required to relieve the burden which weighs upon the aged lady's mind. This amount will, doubtless, soon be in hand.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

IT seems to have impressed everyone who saw the Queen at Woolwich that she had no smiles even for the patients. Her Majesty's manner does credit to her heart. The wreckage of a battlefield can cause nothing but sadness to a sensitive mind. It was not merely what the Queen saw there, but possibly the scenes her imagination depicted at Magersfontein, Colenso and Paardeburg that made her face grave. The maimed men she went to cheer were also only a fraction of the sufferers; and thought will pass from the present to the absent. Nor can it be forgotten that the deadly work still proceeds.

It is distressing to hear that, as a result of the war, the financial circumstances of many admirable societies are in anything but a satisfactory state. A lady, well-known in connection with work among the poor in West London, writes us, emphasizing the fact that much suffering must result if the generosity manifested towards the Army should divert sympathy hitherto accorded to religious and philanthropic work. She reminds the Lord's stewards: "These things ought ye to have done, but not to leave the other undone."

The enormous application for the war loan of £30,000,000 is another proof of the vast wealth of this country. About £350,000,000 was offered to the Bank of England, much of the amount being doubtless attracted by the high rate of interest on such safe security which the loan provided. The recent debate in the House of Commons on the death duties proved the very large number of wealthy people who live in this country. Yet the experience of nearly every charitable society shows that the small givers' donations are the most reliable source of income.

Some missionary societies are in sore straits to maintain the work to which they are already pledged; while extended operations—the entering in at open doors—is out of the question altogether. Assuming that at any rate some proportion of the wealth of the country is in the possession of Christian people, "What shall we then say to these things?" Does it not seem that Christ's disciples have the means for everything else—luxury, pleasure, investments, self-gratification—except the sending of the knowledge of his saving name, in obedience to his own command, to the ends of the earth? Oh, for a new baptism from heaven of the missionary spirit!

By the time these lines are before our readers, Mr. James Neil will have launched his course of illustrated lectures on "Palestine Life" in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, S.W. Undertaken under the auspices of the Holy Land Lectures Fund, these demonstrations should prove of great service to preachers, teachers, and Bible students. There are afternoon lectures every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday (3.30), and evening lectures on the first and last named days (eight o'clock). The admission is free, and there are some reserved seats.

Although the Bill for preventing the sale of intoxicating drink to children under sixteen years has passed its second reading, advocates of the temperance cause cannot afford to slacken their efforts in its promotion. Notices of various amendments have already been given. One member is to move the insertion of the word "knowingly" in the clause defining the offence, thus relieving the licensee from responsibility for the acts of his employés, and throwing upon the prosecution the onus of proving that the landlord knows what takes place on his premises. Another member proposes to make a distinction between the child as a messenger and the child as a purchaser; and by a subsequent amendment endeavours to take out the heart of the measure by restricting its operation to drink purchased by children under sixteen for their own consumption. Another would confine the restriction to drink sold for consumption on the premises, thus leaving the children at liberty to purchase drink inside the house, and consume it on the doorstep.

Fortunately, there is no proposal to lower the age recommended by the Commission, but there is every evidence that the opponents of the proposal will leave no stone unturned to obstruct and mutilate the measure. No modification will at all meet the needs of the case. One of the main purposes of the Bill is to stop children being sent to the public-house as "messengers."

The Cardiff Council have taken a very desirable step in deciding to establish an Inebriate Home for that locality, as at present there is no such establishment in the district to which offenders under the Acts can be sent. As the Government will contribute ten shillings per week per inmate, and these inmates will be required to work for the benefit of the home, the additional cost to the ratepayer will be comparatively small. The total, however, is another amount to be added to that huge bill which the sober citizen is annually required to pay simply because the State persists in bolstering up the drink trade, with its inevitable adjuncts of poverty and crime.

In a recent interview, Mr. Richard Whiteing, the author of a volume, "No. 5, John Street," is reported to have said that the religious agencies at work in the poor districts of London, and other cities, > are too closely identified with the social and economic systems from which the poor believe that they themselves suffer, and in that sense their very benefactions and charities tell against them . . . The most tremendously successful organisation in dealing with the poor would be some poverty-stricken order as poor as themselves, supposing only it was tremendously rich in the gifts of the Spirit.

Mr. Whiteing has painted some terrible pictures of the condition of things in some of the slum districts; but we should like to ask him, and those of his literary colleagues who have found a vein in realistic stories of life in certain districts of the Metropolis, what London would have been to-day if it had not been for the labours of devoted men and women who, endowed with intense love and burning faith, and often without purse and scrip, went down into the depths to proclaim Christ and Him crucified to the perishing? Socialism may be, and is, "in want of a personal force." The Gospel has that personal force within it, and its blessed influence is certainly, if slowly, making its presence felt.

The National Union of Teachers has collected some valuable information on the relation between crime and education. During the ten years before the passing of the Education Act, the prison population increased from 115 out of every 100,000 of the population to 128. In the next decade, 1870 to 1880, it had fallen to 111, in 1890 to sixty-eight, and in 1899 to fifty-six—less than one-half what it was thirty years ago. In the same time prisons have decreased from 135 to sixty-six. It seems also that all our prison population but 2·5 is drawn from the uneducated of our people; for a large number of our children even yet obtain very little education or none.

Favourable as these results are, we must not shut our eyes to the irreligious condition of vast numbers around us. The grievous thing is that a living and operative religion has so small a hold upon the nation; to change that should be the unceasing effort of all the churches.

We heard the other day of a wealthy man who was giving away large sums of money. When asked the reason, he said that he was anxious to improve his ledger account in heaven. A lady of considerable means was recently about to conclude arrangements for investing a large sum in a remunerative fashion, when it suddenly struck her that the best form of investment would be to give the money to a charitable cause. She sent the cheque at once, and had the satisfaction of assisting a large number of the most deserving poor. There is no need for us to point the moral. These facts speak for themselves, and may give the hint to some who are blessed with much of this world's goods.

Exceedingly popular is the appointment of Rev. Dr. Marshall Lang, of the Barony Parish Church, Glasgow, as the new Principal of Aberdeen University. He is a man of considerable attainments, and is the author of several religious and theological works, including one of the Theological Library Series, "Life—is it worth Living?" His sympathies are large and generous, without reflecting in the least upon his decided Evangelicalism. Though a loyal Presbyterian, he is in much esteem in circles beyond the bounds of his own church. An eloquent preacher, a capable leader, a sympathetic friend, numerous opportunities will be given him of using, in the best interest of the Church of Christ, the great gifts the Lord has entrusted to him. Seven years ago Dr. Lang was the Moderator of the General Assembly of his Church, and more recently President of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance.

The oldest Baptist minister in the United Kingdom is the venerable Rev. John Aldis, who is spending the evening of his days at Beckington. Mr. Aldis is considerably over ninety years of age, but he retains a pathetic interest in the work of the Baptist Churches, and indeed in all religious efforts. He recently wrote, on the occasion of the Sunday-school anniversary of Spencer Place Chapel, Goswell Road, a letter mentioning that he had joined that church seventy-six years ago. Mr. Aldis concluded, "I am waiting to renew my fellowship where will be no sin nor sorrow."

Recently the Church Times had some sneering remarks in regard to the use of the Rosary, to the great astonishment and indignation of the Romish Press. In the current issue of the Church Review, however, a prominent position is given to the views of a writer who professes to have been wounded by the "unseemly attack," and who urges that > English Catholics should be more fervent in their use of the holy Rosary, [as] apart from the liturgical services of the Church, it is the most beautiful form of devotion used in the Catholic Church, and it can never be appreciated until it is tried.

And yet, apart altogether from any question of Mariolatry, there is an inspired injunction against "vain repetitions," and the warning example of those who were denounced by St. Paul as having "worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever."

Some very interesting and instructing facts are given by a contemporary upon Free Churchmanship and Crime. Cornwall is instanced as a typical county. Out of over 52,000 Communicants, nearly 40,000 are connected with the Free Churches. Very few of the inhabitants, comparatively, find their way to the workhouse, while it is notorious that no other county is so free from crime. This is exceedingly gratifying, showing that the principles of the Gospel, as taught in the New Testament, apart from ecclesiasticism and priestcraft, go to make Christian citizens, who are a strength to the community where they live, and an honour to their country. We have not yet seen the end of the moral and religious influence of Free Church thought and life upon the national character. "Protestant Dissent discourages pauperism and crime."

Those who are acquainted with Free Church polity and practice will not need to be convinced that there are serious reasons why the door of the ministry should be carefully guarded. From time to time this subject has come under consideration in the Congregational bodies, and on Monday last it was before the Staffordshire Congregational Union in session at Hanley. There are many difficulties, but yet something may be done. Among other things, a special committee desiderated satisfaction on (1) Christian character, (2) views as to Christian doctrine and Church polity, (3) educational qualifications, and (4) ministerial aptitude of the minister or evangelist. These points cover a wide ground, and possibly go as far as reason and prudence will justify.

Encouraging reports reach us of the activity of Christian young men in New York City to engage in mission service. A gentleman, prominently identified with the aggressive work of the Episcopalians there, says :—

> On the books of the Society there are more names of applicants for service in connection with outposts and mission chapels than there are places in which to station them.

A group of young men in Brooklyn Tabernacle have also undertaken special work in the missions this church sustains. It is a hopeful sign when the younger life in a church undertake the spiritual uplifting of those who are "without God in the world." Only living churches can thus inspire and send forth workers, burning with zeal, in the great cause of evangelism.

Rev. Herbert Tugwell, the Bishop of Western Equatorial Africa, who for some little time has been subjected to much unpleasantness owing to his having stated in The Times that a large number of the deaths of Europeans in West Africa are due to intemperance, has furnished to an interviewer his views in regard to the drink question so far as the native races are concerned. It is hardly necessary to say they are in accord with those of almost every evangelist in the mission field. After an episcopal experience of nearly ten years, the Bishop remarks :—

> Drinking to excess amongst the educated Africans is far more common than it used to be. Then, with regard to the unchristianized native population, great mischief is wrought by the sale of cheap spirits, and that hideous traffic undoubtedly greatly hinders all attempts at progress on the coast.

The Bishop's testimony to the results of mission work is, however, unmistakable, and a striking point in it is the statement that last year the converts contributed £5,330 in support of the Mission, with an additional sum of £741 for other mission work, and £200 for the British and Foreign Bible Society. It is pleasant too to know that, owing to the Bishop's bold action in the matter, it has been decided to impose a much higher duty on spirits.

A missionary in Arabia has carefully calculated that the number of Mohammedans at the present day is no fewer than 196,500,000, including 20,000,000 in China and 58,000,000 in India. Looking at these astounding figures, we certainly may find cause to cry to God day and night to hasten the time when the Saviour, "lifted up," shall have fulfilled his promise to "draw all men" unto Him.

It seems strange that Germany and France should be able and willing to protect their sailors from crimps in foreign ports, and that Britain should have her far more numerous sailors quite exposed to these harpies and their satellites, yet such is the case. It is affirmed that in the Consular Shipping Office at New York these crimps may be seen like so many officers of justice taking possession of half-drunken seamen of our nationality, and hauling them off to dens of infamy. Our consuls complain, but in vain. Greed of gain appears to be a great motive at the bottom of the evil; it is even affirmed by responsible men that between some ship-owners, or their agents, and these crimps there is an arrangement whereby each receives mutual advantage. The whole system needs another Samuel Plimsoll to expose, denounce, and change it.

The author of a recently published volume dealing with the "Scientific basis of Morality" professes to have discovered that "there is no real evidence of the existence of a universal brain, without which a universal mind could not exist." It would therefore follow that creation has been self-creative! And it is upon froth such as this that many of the pseudo-scientific critics of the Bible are forced to feed. Not one of them is yet able to answer the simple protoplasm argument put forward by Joseph Cook in the Boston lectures some years ago. As in David's day, so in our own time, with its accumulated evidence of proofs of the Divine government, it is the fool that hath said in his heart, There is no God.

The Bishop Designate of Liverpool, in the course of his address to the clergy and laity of his diocese, says :—

> Like St. Paul at Corinth, I am coming amongst you "in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling," trusting that He who stilled the fears of his apostles by the vision of Himself, and by strong words of hope and of good cheer, will not fail to guide and strengthen with his Divine Presence and counsel the servant whom He is sending amongst you.
> There are two great boons which, stranger as I am, I would ask of you :—
> 1. Give me your prayers. One far stronger and more able might well shrink from the oversight of such a diocese as Liverpool. But "He that calleth is faithful," and prayer links man's weakness to God's almightiness. With this letter I venture to send a copy of an old Collect from the Order of Consecration of Bishops. It is based upon St. Paul's words to Timothy, and sums up some of the chief needs of a bishop in all ages.
> 2. Be patient with me. Confidence and sympathy are not the creation of a day, but the growth of months or years. I do not ask for them at first. I shall make mistakes. "A man who never makes mistakes seldom makes anything."

Every now and again we get one of those cumulative attacks upon the Bible narrative which seem to mark the high-water point of what has been misnamed "religious thought," and at almost stated intervals our monthly reviews are flooded with discussions upon questions of Biblical criticism which have been met and disposed of again and again during the last half century. At the present time we are suffering from such an infliction; but fortunately it is not necessary to re-read these attacks upon Divine truth—they duly pass into the waste-paper basket, as their predecessors did before them, and the Word of God abideth for ever with its Gospel of pardon and peace, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

That we are "fearfully and wonderfully made" has always been known to self-observant persons; but the truth of the words becomes more apparent the more we know of ourselves. For example, a medical expert, who gives his whole time to brain investigation, estimates that the organ contains over three thousand millions of bodies called neurons, each neuron again being a complex body. These are combined in an infinite number of smaller and larger groups, to regulate the functions of the body and the operations of the mind. The energy of the brain is distributed over its several areas; of mind, muscles, nutrition of the body, and digestion. One area can, under pressure from the will, use up some of the energy belonging to others; but the process is injurious alike to brain and body. God has tempered the whole together, and any interference with his ideal of the harmony and interdependence of the parts is sure to do harm. The old saying, "Know thyself," has more force than ever, and more solemnity is in the words, "Your bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost."

The Prevention of Famine.—I.

THE absence of water is the cause of famines, yet India's greatest treasure is water. The eternal snows of the everlasting Himalayas—five miles in height, and 1,500 miles long—form an unfailing source of supply of this life-sustaining element.

The magnificent rivers of India, equal to any in the world, are sufficient, when treated by experienced hydraulic engineers, to supply the needs of our dependency of India, and to insure that famine in that land shall be an unknown calamity. Prevention is better than cure.

There are men who, in the face of the magnificent canals executed by the late General Sir Arthur Cotton in connection with the great rivers in the Madras Presidency—the Godavery, the Kistnah, and the Cauvery—are unable to see that prevention of famine is possible. One noble Lord, on whom Sir Arthur called to urge the claims of India in this respect, for want of something better to say, remarked that "water would not run up-hill!" Other opponents, equally prejudiced, have said that canals for irrigation and navigation cannot be executed everywhere; to which Sir Arthur's common-sense reply was—"Do it where you can." Others, again, have stated that in a season like the present even some of those great rivers run dry. For this his remedy was—The storage of water.

In my close intimacy with Sir Arthur for over two years, amongst many other things, I learned from him that in connection with the Toombudra, which has a fall of only seven inches in a mile for some seventy miles, a bund or embankment of 100 feet high would form a lake of ninety miles in length, containing four or five thousand million cubic yards. This would be only one among many tanks which, at a comparatively small outlay, could be provided in various parts of India, forming inexhaustible reservoirs, sufficient to keep all the canals which could be made throughout India in working order, in the absence of the Monsoon rains, or in any time of drought.

Allowing 5 per cent. for interest and repairs, the cost would be about £1 per 200,000 cubic yards of water—a perfectly nominal cost when compared with well water at £1 per 3,000 cubic yards, and that for a water incomparably inferior to river and tank water.

The objection raised by successive Governments is—the want of money. This is the crowning fallacy of all, and has been the most fatal to the increase of canals for irrigation and navigation throughout India during the last sixty years.

This is the eighth famine during the reign of our Gracious Queen, and Empress of India. From official sources I learn that—

In the famine of 1837-8, 8,000,000 of people were affected, and 800,000 died.

1860-1—13,000,000 were affected, and upwards of 1,000,000 perished.

1863—a quarter of the population died in some of the districts. The total deaths were enormous; nearly the whole of the labouring population were swept away.

1866—nearly 1,000,000 persons perished.

1868-9—1,250,000 persons, according to the Government estimate, died of hunger.

1876-8—the mortality exceeded 5,250,000.

1896-7—In June of the latter year there were no fewer than 4,500,000 persons in receipt of relief, and Lord George Hamilton stated at the Mansion House that at that date upwards of £10,000,000 sterling had been disbursed in relief. But at a later date, when the sum total was arrived at, it was stated in the columns of The Times to amount to the almost incredible sum of £90,000,000 sterling.

Referring to the famine of 1876-8, the late Sir James Caird wrote:—

The people of England can hardly realize the loss by death in that famine. Over 5,000,000 of human beings—more in number than the population of Ireland—perished in that miserable time. If the people of this vast metropolis (London), with the millions in its neighbourhood, were all melted away by a lingering death, even this would not exceed in numbers the loss of India. A result so fearful in extent, and so heartrending in its details, was brought about by want of timely preparation to meet a calamity, which, though irregular in its arrival, is periodical and inevitable.

The total amount expended on canals for irrigation and navigation up to 1897 was £37,000,000 sterling; and all that outlay shows most wonderful returns in the shape of an ever-increasing governmental revenue, to say nothing of the growing prosperity and consequent contentment of the natives.

The irrigation and navigation canals connected with the three great rivers — the Godavery, the Kistnah, and the Cauvery—which were executed and completed by the late General Sir Arthur Cotton, and his able coadjutors, about fifty years ago, show extraordinary results, giving in these three pioneer works a financial return—in the Cauvery, 55 per cent.; in the Kistnah, 18 per cent.; and in the Godavery, 17 per cent.

After this, to complain of want of money is ridiculous in the extreme. There is no safer or more remunerative investment than these canals for the millions of money in this country waiting to be advantageously employed.

Robert Scott.

Why Not Rejoice More?

By Rev. T. L. CUYLER, D.D.

EVERY child of God may well rejoice because he has such a Father in heaven. "I have set the Lord always before me; therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth." "In his presence is fulness of joy." This refers to the experiences of the present life, and then up at his right hand will be the "pleasures for evermore." It is a bad heart that skulks away from a loving Father in sullen distrust and dread. Then, too, what joy is kindled in our souls when we are brought into full reconciliation with God, through the atoning love and mediation of Jesus Christ! The returning prodigal's heart thrills under every kiss of his forgiving Father.

Earth has a joy unknown in heaven,
The new-born peace of sins forgiven.
Tears of such pure and deep delight,
Ye angels, never dimmed your sight.

The assurance of a full salvation is enough to keep our hearts aglow. "I give unto you eternal life," says our omnipotent Saviour; "ye shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck you out of my hand." All things work together for good if we love God.

EVEN SHARP PRUNING

may make us yield richer clusters of spiritual fruit, if we will let God have his way. And when the discipline and conflicts of this earthly school-life are end ed, we look upward, and see that "our names are written in heaven."

All these joys our loving God provides for us, and offers them to us. We cannot create canary birds; but we can provide cages for them, and fill our rooms with their music. Even so we cannot create the rich gifts which Jesus offers; but they are ours if we furnish heart-room for them.

Now, with all these pure and substantial joys within our reach, it is a sin and shame for a genuine Christian to be wretched. Is not disobedience to God a sin? He commands us to rejoice. No duty is more clear. "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice!" "The joy of the Lord is your strength." You can fill your soul with inspiring thoughts, and with memories of mercies; you can occupy your soul with plans of doing good to others and with acts of obedience to the inward voice of Christ, such as will kindle your soul into a glow. A noble woman of my acquaintance makes rainbows on the cloud of her widowhood by ministrations of mercy to the poor and the destitute.

THERE IS A "GODLY SORROW"

over our shortcomings, and over the woes and wrongs of others that every Christian ought to feel; but such sorrow must never be allowed to drown out the deep abounding joy of the Lord down in the very core of our souls. There is a gulf-stream of God-given joy that ought to send its warm current through the wintriest waves of trials and adversities.

The coal-beds are solidified sunshine. The love of Jesus streaming down into your soul makes the central heat; that heat generates spiritual power. So doth the joy of Jesus become your perennial strength. A doubting ague-smitten Christian cannot do much but shake. A backsliding Christian is on his road to a cell in the castle of Giant Despair. But "he who is nearest to Christ is nearest to the fire," and the contact keeps the heart aglow. Why not rejoice more? Count up your golden mercies, count up your opportunities to do good, count up your exceeding great and precious promises, count up your joys of heirship to an incorruptible inheritance, and then march on the road heavenward shouting!

The Song of the Lonely Seamstress.

He is my only Master,
I work for Him alone;
My fingers fly the faster
To feel I'm all his own.

And as I work He watches,
And cheers me with a smile;
I answer Him in snatches
Of love-notes all the while.

And when I stop to measure,
Or breathe a moment free,
He, too, has ample leisure,
And spends it all with me.

I love to entertain Him,
All through the livelong day;
And though my sins have slain Him,
He will not go away.

He is my own dear Master,
And still, as Cana's Lord,
He wardeth from disaster
His child's poor, scanty board.

Sometimes when I am pining
For human friends to come,
I see a sudden shining
Fill all my little room.

Through the dark night He eyes me,
And should the tear-drop start,
His whispered sweets surprise me
Like music in my heart.

Then when the dawn has painted
With gold my casement dim,
"Thou'st borne, and hast not fainted!"
Awakes me straight from Him.

"For my sake hast not fainted—"
I say it o'er and o'er;
The Man with grief acquainted,
I love Him more and more!

I rise, and boldly yield me
To Love where'er it lead;
I know that grace will shield me
From sin and want's dire need.

And though sweet gleams of childhood,
White cot and sunny stream
The tangled copse and wildwood,
Will haunt me like a dream—

I kneel, and desperate, borrow
New strength from Him each hour;
Till lo, my dark to-morrow
Seems yesterday in flower!

Living Sewing-Machines.

THOUGH in the manufacturing of garments, as in every department of industry, machines are now working at full speed where clever hands used to excel, the art of sewing still exists, and ladies with dainty taste prefer the insertions and hemmings of their wear done by hand. The difference in price, if any, is insignificant. How is it that so much labour should have so small a value? In reply to a similar question, asked at one of the London shops, this illuminating answer was given: "We get these articles from the Irish convents."

We do not know how far these convents resemble those pious institutions in France, with regard to which Madame O. Gevin-Cassal (Inspectrice Générale des Services de l'Enfance) exclaims: "If there be a horrible leaven which France cannot tolerate in her veins any longer, it is the hypocrisy that is being manufactured in those houses so carefully shut up from the lay world."

We give a résumé of what she says in her article on "Claustral Education," which appeared in a late number of the Revue de Morale Sociale. Under the shadow of the Cross or the effigy of the Virgin, deeds are being perpetrated which make us tremble with sorrow and indignation. Little daughters of poverty-stricken families, waifs and strays, are gathered into a huge prison under pretext of charity, and presumably for education. What is their life, and

WHAT THEIR TRAINING?

Little ones under thirteen years of age rise at 5 o'clock in summer and 5.30 in winter, sewing until 7 o'clock. From 7 to 8 prayer, breakfast, and mass; from 8 to 12 school. One hour for dinner and recreation. Then sewing again until 7 or 7.30, with but one half-hour's interval. The older girls rise an hour earlier, and their work consists of sewing all the day long until 8, and sometimes, when orders are pressing, until 10 and 11 o'clock at night.

With a poor diet, consisting mostly of soup, bread and vegetables (no milk), and the utter neglect of hygienic laws, can there be any doubt as to results of such a system? They are trained to be living sewing-machines, and sewing-machines they are, sensitive only to the striking of the clock. Woe unto her who has not finished her two chemises in the day, or whatever the task may be. The punishment awaiting the backward, and sometimes administered by the priest, is as varied as it is cruel and fiendish. We cannot enumerate its diversities, as some of them are of a most revolting nature. Those who have the heart to shut up a child with a corpse in the "refroidissoir" are worthy imitators of the Spanish Inquisitors. Why are the orphans thus treated? Is it to alleviate the sufferings of others, to bring help to the destitute? Oh, no! It is for the display of Romish supremacy, for the erection of beautiful chapels, and the showing-off of a magnificence in their religious rites which

DAZZLES AND SUBDUES THE SENSES.

One would think that after leaving the convent these clever needlewomen could easily earn their living. No, they have no idea of cutting out. Everything has been given into their hands cut and prepared. Even if they had been taught, they could not possibly compete with the religious establishments, which, to be sure of customers, make the lowest possible prices; thus, on the one hand, cutting the ground from under the women who might struggle for honest livelihood, and, on the other hand, providing luxuries for the demi-monde—their best paying customers.

The Virgin is well off in such places, and fascinating, for coveting young eyes, are the precious stones of her necklace—bought, may be, with the tears of starving orphans, and the gold of immoral women.

Well may we ask, What is the prospect of these girls, then? As long as they are fit for work, the sisters are anxious to keep them, and do so not infrequently by force. Their health or sight failing, they are gladly dismissed, with little or no money, and, what is worse, without any experience of the world and its dangers. If not led astray from the first, they may endeavour to find their living; but how? Domestic service requires knowledge of domestic work; it also requires bodily strength. Having neither, they fall.

AND FINALLY FALL.

In strong terms Madame G. C. protests against the existence of paying educational convents. Five-sixths of the young French generation receive their instruction in these establishments. "Bon ton" and fashion very often take the place of commonsense. Men who publicly oppose this system as pernicious send their own children to convents in order to be at peace with their wives, or for some other reason touching the comfort of daily life.

"Enlighten the woman, and she will turn her back upon the confessional." Rome is perfectly aware of that; hence her hatred against freedom, and hence her endeavour to dwarf the woman's brain, like the Chinese dwarf their feet.

Within the sheltering walls of a convent the future mothers of coming leading men are imbued with pettiness, prejudice, and vanity. The meek sisters under whose care the young souls are placed made a vow of life-long poverty and humility. We would expect them to discourage any manifestations of caste. But far from it: the pupils "of consequence" know very well the prestige given them by the position or the money-power of their parents, and others know it too; hence jealousies and enmities.

The system of confessional espionage—opening and intercepting letters, &c.—naturally leads to hatred, intrigue, and deceit. A hyper-hysterical prudery, such as is observed by order in these houses, does positive harm to soul and body: it makes cleanliness impossible, and awakens a curiosity in the pupil's mind dangerous in its suggestiveness. Add to this the fascinating nerve-exciting mysticism of the Romish cult, and then wonder no more if so many young ladies re-enter their homes compromised in health and spiritually crippled.

"All these crimes," says the author, "have lasted too long. Is it not enough to make disappear one or the other of these fortresses of wickedness, which may have caused more scandal than others? Away with the whole convent-education!" Every lover of justice and truth, every friend of the oppressed, will join in this rally-cry. W. M.

"Tell Jesus."

TELL Jesus when the burden seems too great for you to bear;
Go lay it at the feet of Christ, and know that He will care;
And tell Him all the little things that come to cloud your way,
The puzzles and perplexities that trouble you to-day.
Tell Jesus all there is to tell—about your daily needs;
About the dim uncertainties through which your pathway leads;
About the cherished hopes that lie crushed lifeless at your feet,
The golden dreams left unfulfilled—the labour incomplete.
If you could know how tenderly He makes our cares his own,
You would not stand apart again and bear the pain alone;
You would not miss the joy and peace of walking at his side,
Of finding tempest changed for calm, and sorrow sanctified.
I tell Him all the story now—no other friend can be—
In morning light or evening shade—what Jesus is to me;
His human heart is still the same to-day as yesterday,
And in his love I find my rest, and in his strength my stay.

"Good News To-Night!"

ONE night, just before the midnight hour, the men were crying the news in the streets—

"GOOD NEWS TO-NIGHT! GOOD NEWS TO NIGHT!"

It was startling to hear these words called in the still hours of the night, and the sudden cry, wafted up to the windows of sleepers and watchers alike, had a deeper meaning than at first appeared.

It reminded many of those words in the Book of God—

"IN SUCH AN HOUR AS YE THINK NOT,"

when, with startling clearness, the voice of Jesus will fall upon the ears of his watchers, and He will call his own.

"GOOD NEWS TO-NIGHT!"

The good news of the Gospel of God the Saviour; it is in our midst morning, noon, and night, and how many of us hear it and heed it? That night very few bought the paper containing the "good news." Some thought: "Oh, it is too late—I can wait until morning." Others nodded knowingly to one another, saying: "Don't heed! There's no fresh news—it is only a tale." Yet others, awakened by the cry, turned in their beds, thinking: "Bother those men! One cannot even sleep in peace!" Some again would perhaps say: "Good news! Well, it does not trouble me what the news is!" Some opened their windows and listened: "Oh, it is the same old cry; we had all that in this morning's papers." "Good news!" another would snort. "I don't believe in it!"

And so the news was received—only a few caring to possess the papers containing the news, yet all the time the news was true. In seven different ways, and perhaps many more, men heard the cry:

"GOOD NEWS TO-NIGHT!"

1. Some put it off till to-morrow—"Oh, yes some day I will be a Christian."
2. Others doubted its urgency—"There's no danger. God is a God of mercy."
3. Others rejected it—"Take thine ease; eat, drink, and be merry."
4. Some were indifferent—"Oh, I'll take my chance; I don't worry."
5. Others thought the news stale—"That old Gospel! We want a new one."
6. Many did not believe—"We will not have this Man to reign over us."
7. Others, again, believed and were glad—"How beautiful. . . . are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth salvation!" (Isa. lii. 7). "Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; and they shall obtain gladness and joy; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away." (Isa. li. 11). What do you think of God's "Good News To-night"?

M. B. GERDS.

Hallowing Christ.

"WE do not hallow Christ as we ought, unless we absolutely confide in every word of his lips. Did you ever think that not to trust Jesus Christ is to blaspheme and profane that holy name by which we are called; and that to hallow Him means to say to Him, 'I believe every word that Thou speakest, and I am ready to risk my life upon thy veracity'? Distrust is dishonouring the Master, and taking from Him the glory that is due unto his name."—Dr. Alex Maclaren.

"Do Something."—I have often had occasion to observe that a warm, blundering man does more for the world than a frigid, wise man. A man who gets into a habit of inquiring about proprieties, and expediencies, and occasions, often spends his life without doing anything to purpose. The state of the world is such, and so much depends upon action, that everything seems to say loudly to every man: "Do something—do it—do it,"—Richard Cecil.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 1. Psa. xlvii.

THE Lord's Day should be full of praise; this psalm is therefore the most appropriate for the beginning of the week. Let us desire to have lightsome hearts for ourselves, and that our song should be caught up by all the world, Christ hath been made a Minister of the truth of God, that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy (Rom. xv. 9-11). He is already King over all the earth (4-7), but as yet unrecognised. When will the day arrive that the King shall come to his own, and his own recognise Him with song?

Have you ever realized that God is prepared to subdue your enemies for you? Your failure has arisen from your perpetual effort to grapple with and overthrow them; you have yet to learn, through failure and disappointment, your utter impotence, and to throw yourself at the feet of Christ and ask Him to subdue what has hitherto been unsubdued, and to bring every enemy under his sceptre, that God may be all in all, for He must reign till He hath put down in our heart, as well as in the universe, all hostile rule and authority and power.

The soul that trusts God to subdue its foes trusts Him also to choose its inheritance. Oh, well is it when, in the morning of life, the maiden or youth puts the choice of all the unknown in the hands of God; when the choice of the partner of life, of the career and future home, of friends and pursuits, is perpetually consigned to Him who has a purpose of love in every creation, and desires to work out in each some unique and perfect plan! The R.V. gives in its margin the present tense, "He subdueth . . . He chooseth . . . He loveth." Thread these three, and wear them next your heart. It is a threefold cord, full of comfort.

This psalm commemorates a great deliverance. The kings of the earth had assembled themselves to overthrow Jerusalem: their forces on the land were supplemented apparently by ships, the ships of Tarshish upon the sea. A confederation of kings were in league to fulfil some purpose of destruction.

Then in the Temple the people gathered to think of God's loving kindness. Their prayer ascended into his holy habitation, and in answer God make Himself known in the palaces of Mount Zion for a refuge. We are not told the precise manner of the Divine deliverance. It seems as though some sudden panic-trembling took hold upon the allied forces, whilst an east wind broke the ships. But in any case the embattled hosts melted away as the snow before the sun—they were dismayed and hastened away; and as God had done in the past, so He had done again; and as his people had heard, so had they seen.

It is a great thing to see as well as hear, to put God's promises to a test, and verify them to ourselves; for we are able to magnify the greatness of God, and to say, "as is thy name, so is thy praise." It is important to remark these two contrasts (vv. 8, 10), for they contain the very heart of experimental religion. Yes, dear soul, try God to the uttermost, and He will be to you all that He has promised, all your forefathers have declared. He will be your God for ever and ever, and your Guide even unto death. Do you ask what the towers and bulwarks of Zion are? They are the perfections and attributes of God. These fence around the defenceless with an invulnerable protection.

TUESDAY, April 3. Psa. xlix.

A proclamation to all the world! The psalm resembles the old public criers, who commenced their proclamations with "Oh yes! Oh yes!"—a corruption of the French "Oyez" (Hear). And indeed wisdom and understanding have suggested the significant utterances that follow, and which are of universal importance. It would seem that the psalmist himself was listening to voices unheard by ordinary ears which suggested the speech. Be sure to incline your ear to God's parables before you open your dark sayings and interpret the mysteries of his providential dealings with men! It is interesting to know that dark sayings may be set to heart-music. Things which seem dark and foreboding, when explained by the Spirit of God break in music on our soul—soothing, stirring.

The burden of the psalmist's proclamation is the impotence of wealth. The millionaire cannot prolong the life of his brother, wife, or friend. If, like Queen Elizabeth, he cries from his dying bed: "A million of money for a moment of time!" the inextricable sand passes unheeding through the hour-glass. He must leave stocks and shares, jewels and gold, at the call of Death, who is described in v. 14 (R.V.) as the shepherd who calls his flock, to fold it in Sheol.

How different the lot of the upright! As the morning of eternity breaks, they enter upon their dominion; their soul is redeemed from the power of Sheol, and welcomed into the mansions of the Father's home. The everlasting habitations open wide their portals to receive the upright. If this life were all, we might be inclined to envy the wealth and glory of this world; but what are these as compared to the true riches of spiritual character, which not only give peace of conscience in this world, but are imperishable in all worlds, and in all future ages?

This is certainly one of the most majestic of all the compositions of the book. For literary power and beauty it cannot be excelled. The psalmist has heard the voice of God calling the entire earth from east to west. It is as though his speech accompanied the effulgence of the dawn with which He shines forth. The advent of God is prepared for and announced by tempest and fire, and when presently He is come and has seated Himself upon his throne, He calls to the heavens above, and to the earth beneath, and the whole creation assists whilst He judges his people.

Then, through the crowded hosts, his saints advance—a silver stream through shaggy banks. They stand before Him, and He, who before addressed the listening earth, directs his speech to his saints, who have entered into covenant relationship with Himself. Have you entered into that relationship? For, if so, you shall hear from the judgment-seat of God the words: "I am God, even thy God." There is no need for us to expatiate here upon the spiritual insight of the psalmist, who realizes that God cannot be enriched by anything that we can bring, because all things are his; but we may urge on ourselves and others to offer the sacrifice of thanksgiving, to pay vows of consecration, and to call aloud for help in the day of trouble. These are the characteristics of all those whose God is the Lord, of the people whom He has taken for his own inheritance, and whom He will avouch as his own in the judgment.

THURSDAY, April 5. Psa. li.

This Psalm reminds one of a ladder which climbs from the horrible pit, with its miry clay, into heights of sunny joy, where the new song is appropriate. It is the cry of the lost sheep, which has been torn by barbed fences, harried by wild dogs, and drenched with the mud of the morass, but which the Shepherd has found, and is preparing to place on his shoulders rejoicing. These stones have been worn by the feet of myriads of penitents, and are wet with the tears of the saints, who, like Augustine, tell their life-story as a confession.

That sin is a stain that needs washing, an ill-inscription which needs obliteration, a leprosy that demands the cleansing of the High Priest; that we must confess our sins if we would be forgiven, and that we are forgiven as soon as we confess; that, in addition to the hereditary taint which we receive from our parents, we voluntarily yield to the power of the tempter; that, in addition to forgiveness, we need the inward cleansing, the resetting of broken bones, the creation of the clean heart, the renewal of the right spirit, the joy of salvation, the willingness for consecration, and over all a crown of blessed joy—such are the lesson which successive generations have learnt from these memorable words.

But who shall describe the service that succeeds forgiveness, when transgressors are taught, and sinners converted; when the loosed tongue sings aloud, and the mouth is opened to show forth God's praise? There are no sacrifices so dear to God as broken hearts, no offering so precious as contrite spirits; and it would be impossible to compute all the walls which have been built, all the Jerusalems which have been founded, all the congregations which have been won, as that at Pentecost was, by men whose service was inspired by an immeasurable gratitude for the forgiveness of which once they had entirely despaired.

FRIDAY, April 6. Psa. lii.

The inscription points the occasion of the psalm. Two threads are interwoven, let us trace them.

The ungodly is often a mighty man. He boasts himself in mischief, his tongue resembles the sharp razor that slips in the hand and inflicts a grievous wound; he loves evil and lying; he loves words which devour reputations and the peace of homes, and the welfare of souls. But his destruction comes apace. Dragged forth from his tent, cut off root and branch from the land of the living—such is the end of the man who refused to make God his stronghold, and trusted in his wealth and wickedness. It is not difficult to see conspicuous illustrations of this. One died recently in a wretched condition in Birmingham; others fill high places.

But what a contrast is presented in the humble believer who trusts not in the abundance of his riches, but in the mercy of God, which abideth continually, for ever and ever (vv. 1, 8), who waits on the good name of God in the presence of his saints. He is like a green olive tree in the house of God, and flourishes in the courts of the Lord. From his heart proceeds a perennial thanksgiving, as he beholds the overthrow of his foes, and gives thanks to God for ever because He has done it.

Let us notice the tender similes of the Psalms. The tree planted by the streams of water, whose leaf does not wither; the palm tree and the cedar; the fruitful vine in the innermost parts of the house; the plants which grow up into early maturity—such are the emblems of devout and holy souls. We can have this portion only when we hear Christ saying, "From Me is thy fruit found."

SATURDAY, April 7. Psa. liii.

That this psalm should be repeated from Psa. xiv., with very few variations, indicates, like the "Verily, verily," of Christ, that the truths contained in these words merit unusual attention, and the remarkable fact is that they supply the Apostle with the phraseology with which he describes the state of the ungodly in the presence of God, closing his quotation by saying, "We know that what things soever the law saith, it speaketh to them that are under the law, that every mouth might be stopped, and all the world might be brought under the judgment of God."

We have here the photograph of the natura heart. Whether the camera is held before Jew or Gentile, the result is equally terrible: all may not have gone equally far from the fold, but all are astray. In this case the glass is cracked, and in that shivered, but the cracked is no more perfect than its companion. The professor of religion, as truly as the publican and harlot, requires a salvation from outside.

It is interesting to notice the differences between the two psalms. In v. 1, the works of sin described in Psalm xiv., are iniquity in Psalm liii. In v. 3, to go aside is equivalent to going back. In v. 4, God is in the generation of the righteous that He may scatter the bones of those that encamp against his chosen. Compare also xiv. 6 with the last clause of liii. 5.

The two psalms close with identical words, longing for a return from captivity. God alone can bring again the captivity of his people when captured by strong besetting sins, or periods of backsliding and relapse. Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as the streams in the south!

On the Way to Cuba.

GOING, like Abram, still towards the south, we came to Tampa. Mr. Plant, the founder of the Plant System of railways and steamers, built here the Tampa Bay Hotel, one of the most luxurious on the American continent. Tampa has become historical as the place where the U.S. army encamped, and the port from which they embarked for Cuba in the recent war.

Previous to their departure a good work was done among them. The Presbyterian minister, Rev. J. G. Anderson, induced Mr. D. L. Moody to organize meetings, and Major Whittle, Dr. A. C. Dixon, Mr. Sankey, Mr. Stebbins, and other preachers and singers came down, and the results were great. Mr. Anderson told us that, in meetings conducted by himself, more than 500 soldiers professed their faith in Christ as their Saviour. Most of them were engaged in hot fighting and never returned.

THE CITY OF TAMPA

is nine miles above Port Tampa. In 1880 its population was 700; in 1890 it had increased to 7,000. It is now 30,000, and likely to grow still more rapidly, for the opening up of Cuba will create an increased trade, of which this will be one of the principal receiving and distributing places. This city and the island of Key West (which belongs to the United States) are the chief factories of Havana cigars. In Tampa 3,000,000dols. a year are paid to the employés, and 20,000,000dols. worth of cigars are exported to Great Britain alone. Some of them are sold at the fancy price of a dollar each. It is pitiful to think of such an amount of labour and money being expended on a traffic so wasteful and so deleterious. We were conducted (by permission) through the largest of the factories. Among the thousand men and women we discerned very few healthy or happy-looking faces. Men, women, children—all smoke, half-a-dozen cigars being a daily allowance.

With regard to its religious condition, we were told that Tampa is "a conglomeration of heterogenous and miscellanous incongruities," whose spiritual state cannot be estimated. It contains twelve nationalities, with many creeds, yet mostly with none. Roman Catholics preponderate, for the people are chiefly Cubans. Also it is the form of religion which makes "the two go together." A factory-girl told us that she was formerly a Baptist; but she got fond of dancing, and found that the two didn't go together.

We met here Mr. Moody (a namesake, and perhaps a distant relative of our departed friend), who had been pastor of the first Baptist church for two years, during which time over a hundred had been added to its membership; but he lamented that though his strong convictions and stern rebukes had created a stir among easy-going professors, he had not succeeded in placing the card-table and the theatre outside the pale of social amusements. He had accomplished this in his previous pastorate at Hot Springs, where he is accepting an invitation to return, and will arrange for the approaching Southern Baptist Conference, said to be the largest in the world.

I was reminded of an experience last year in Georgia. At an hotel dinner-table a lady, who used to arrange for evening card-parties, offered to introduce us to the manager of the opera; but, seeing that we did not seem grateful, she said, "But perhaps you don't go to the opera." She asked what denomination we belonged to; she said she was a Baptist, and her convictions were very decided on that subject.

Mr. Moody did not seem much surprised when we told him of the incident, but counterbalanced it by another. A young lady in a ballroom in Mexico declined a request for a dance, saying she was a Baptist and did not dance. The mayor of the city inquired who these Baptists were who did not dance, and having gained the information, he contributed to their funds 250,000dols. Doubtless a girl of so much Christian courage and consistency would be led on to draw the line outside the ballroom altogether, as the safer and more consistent position.

PORT TAMPA CITY

is laid out in streets, but as yet the houses are few and scattered. We turned into an Adventist Chapel, where a preacher from Georgia was come to hold a mission. He had an extensive knowledge of the letter of the Bible. He insisted that the meek would not go to heaven, but inherit the earth, according to Matt. v. 5. The spirit of meekness, however, was not evident in the dear man himself, though most of what he said was true, though I did not say Amen to the above assertion. He declared that he was not there to explain what the Bible meant, but to tell them what it said.

As we left we fell in with a deacon of the church, who was going our way. He had been a Methodist, but a year ago had joined the Adventist Church. He was manager of Picnic Island, which he invited us to visit. He had been and had lost his left arm in the war. "Do you allow any coloured people into your meetings?" I asked. "Yes, if they take the back seats. One young thing came and sat in the front seat. I very soon told her to sit behind." "Do you thing Jesus will prepare a back seat in heaven for his redeemed blacks?" asked my wife. "Oh, I guess we shan't know the difference there—yellow, green, or black will be all the same." "Then colour can't be of much importance, anyhow." I reminded him that the Bible says, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the whole earth." "Yes, but He did not say we shall be all equal." "Nor do I. There are social grades among the whites as well as among the coloured. I am speaking to a citizen of a free country regarding the simple human rights of men, white or coloured." I told him of Miriam being smitten with leprosy for speaking against Moses because he had taken an Ethiopian wife. But he would not have it there was equality of any kind, and if the Bible seemed to say so, he didn't believe it meant it. In reply to which, I reminded him that the preacher had insisted that our business is with what the Bible says, not with what we think or wish that it might mean.

Perhaps before we absolutely condemn this ex-slave-holder we had better each examine ourselves whether we are willing and obedient in everything to what the Scripture says.

Leaving Port Tampa at 11 p.m., we

by 3 p.m. next day, and stayed there a few hours. As we left the hotel, a little man entered, who afterwards came to our boat. He is forty-one inches high, weighs fifty-six pounds, is thirty-seven years old, well formed, all his members in due proportion. His name is A. L. Sawyer. He offered us some photographs, and we got into conversation. He was born in one of the other islands, but for thirty-five years has lived in Key West.

"And are you going to heaven?" I asked. "I expect so," he replied, with a bright look and a cheerful voice. "Why do you expect?" "Because I trust in Christ and his righteousness. I have no righteousness of my own to trust in." Then he told us he was converted at eighteen, and since then had been living a Christian life. He might have made money if he had consented to make a show of himself; but has never regretted not having done so. Christ has enabled him to live according to his principles, and he is glad.

"Do you think you will come to England?" asked one. "I don't know. When Paul got converted on his way to Damascus he did not know what a long way the Spirit would take him. He did not then think he should see Rome."

Two Methodist ministers, going to establish a mission in Havana, asked what church he belonged to. "Well, I am a Baptist, but I am working with the Methodists."

Several gathered round the little man, listening with evident interest to his intelligent testimony. What a small thing can break down the shyness which keeps us apart. We were reminded of the lines:

> Were I so tall to reach the pole,
> Or grasp the ocean with a span,
> I must be measured by my soul.
> The mind's the standard of the man.

Many of our readers will remember Pastor A. J. Diaz, a sketch of whose career was given several years ago. Since reaching Havana, we have found him carrying on the work of conversion in a converted theatre, which accommodates 3,000 people, of which more in another letter. R. Cope Morgan.

A Pathetic Story.

A TOUCHING incident is related by Pasteur Ferdinand Faivre in connection with Gospel Work amongst French priests at St. Aubin de Blaye, Gironde. A young man who has been afflicted with general paralysis for seven years past became a Christian after six months' illness. His sufferings have increased, and he is now all but blind. In spite of this, he is always calm, serene, and happy under circumstances which to the world are appalling. No one comes near him without being enlightened by his speaking to them of the Gospel. Some time ago a small wooden carriage was made for him. On this he wheels himself about, distributing New Testaments, and telling of the solace and comfort, joy and peace, which fill his heart.

A pastor who had spent thirty years in the ministry remarked to him, with tears in his eyes: "In all the time I have been at work as a pastor, I never met a man like you." "Then," answered the young man, "it is a great grace that God has shown me." He often meets with infidels who declare that their reason refuses to believe. "You cannot understand? What is your intelligence beside that of God. Do you ask the drop of water to connect France with America—to carry ships from here to the United States? No; but what the drop of water cannot do the ocean does. The ocean is God; the drop of water is yourself."

Some singularly gratifying results of evangelistic effort among French priests have been witnessed; and while the work has been fraught with true blessing, its operations are somewhat hindered by the deficit in its funds. Communications may be addressed to M. Ferdinand Faivre, St. Aubin de Blaye, Gironde, France.

Portrait of a Good Preacher.—A good preacher should have these virtues and qualities: First, he should be able to teach plainly and in order. Secondly, he should have a good head. Thirdly, he should have good power of speech. Fourthly, a good voice. Fifthly, a good memory. Sixthly, he should know when to stop. Seventhly, he should be sure of his message, and study it thoroughly. Eighthly, he should be ready to stake limb and life, goods and glory, on its truth. Ninthly, he must be content to be vexed and criticised by any and everybody.—Martin Luther.

The Indian Famine.

THE news from the famine-stricken districts continues to be of a terrible character. Lord Radstock has issued a circular letter, suggesting that on Good Friday, when we specially remember how our Lord "carried our sorrows," a general effort should be made in the interests of the sufferers from famine. The circular says:

"The land from which 60,000,000 get their only food is rainless and parched, and already 5,000,000 of gaunt sufferers are trying to earn a bare subsistence on relief works, while many more, equally destitute, are too far away, or too weak, to profit by Government help; and for some time past corpses have been found in the jungle, and children are being sold by their parents. Worse still, till July, at the earliest, no grain will be available for food or fodder for cattle. Besides this, in districts outside the famine area, grain is at famine prices. According to the latest statement, help on the largest scale is needed, for food, for comforts for sick, for clothing of destitute, and housing of orphans, and replacing agricultural and industrial plant. Many of his people desire to help, in his name, these starving millions, and to send an offering—in some small degree commensurate to their debt to Him—and thus, in a practical way, commend the Gospel of Jesus to their helpless fellow-subjects in India. They believe many wish to try and save some of the millions of sufferers, and thus serve our Lord, who has entrusted them to our care. Therefore they invite their fellow-Christians to help to make the offering adequate to the need and worthy of our Christian faith and Empire." The idea has received wide and influential endorsement. Contributions can be sent to Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard Street, E.C., who will transmit the fund, as a "Christian Offering," to the Central Committee, Calcutta.

We append some communications recently received from workers in India:—

Dr. Colin Valentine, Agra Medical Missionary Training Institute, Agra, quotes Lord Curzon, who recently said, at Calcutta: "To anyone who may think that the recent rains which have fallen in some parts of India, and the fringe of which has even reached us in Calcutta, may sensibly alleviate the position, I must regretfully point out that while they have been of some assistance in parts of the Punjab, even there they have produced no check upon the upward rise of relief figures; while elsewhere in the afflicted parts there has been no rain at all, and the ground is like an oven which, as spring grows into summer, will become hotter and still more burning." Dr. Valentine adds: "The rain was too little in amount, and came too late to do us any good. There are now upwards of four millions of people on famine relief works. Before the end of June the number will have increased to seven and a half millions. This state of matters will go on increasing until the end of July, when, if the rains are favourable, there will be grass for the few cattle that remain. It will be a month later, however, before the grain crop can be reaped; and, until then, the mortality will be great, especially among young Hindu widows and children."

Mr. John Lampard, of the Balaghat Mission, writes to us:—

"Contributions from readers of The Christian and others have enabled us to do something for the famine stricken Gonds. These aboriginal people have a deep-rooted dislike to mixing with other castes and people on large Government relief works, so that they greatly appreciate the help we are giving them in or near their own villages. We have been enabled, too, to employ from 100 to 150 adults. Our two kitchens, where cooked food is given twice a day to destitute children, it is satisfactory to know, are highly spoken of by Government officials. A large number of little ones attend daily, and the throng is increasing weekly. The children are taught the story of Jesus, to sing hymns, and learn Scripture texts during the interval between meals; they return to their own homes at night. We should much like to be able to give help in the way of bullocks and seed grain to ruined cultivators before the season commences in June; also blankets and cloth to the needy when the rains begin in that month. Our workers are availing themselves of the special opportunities of relief operations to preach the Gospel to the poor demon-worshippers among whom we work."

The War in South Africa.

BY the courtesy of a correspondent we are enabled to give some extracts from an interesting letter lately received from a private at the front:—"There are five of the Lord's followers in this half of our regiment. We are meeting together every night for prayer, and to talk of Him who has done so much for us. "We have had two dear brothers called up higher since the war commenced, one at Kimberley and the other here with us; he was shot through the heart while bandaging up a wounded comrade. An unconverted man remarked to me about the smile he had on his face when dead; he used to be so simple in the Lord, and the amount of persecution he stood was a good testimony of our Lord's grace and power. The other brother was the oldest Christian in the regiment, and was a great help and example to us; he used to live very close to the Lord.

"There was a dear lad in the 42nd Regiment at the battle of Magersfontein, who was severely wounded, lying by some more of his wounded comrades, and who, when offered a drink of water, said: 'No, thank you, give it to some of the others; I am drinking of the Water of Life.' He died soon afterwards; praise God for such testimonies of his grace. A brother in one of the Lancer Regiments was telling me about a conversion of one of the 5th Fusiliers. A man asked him (the Lancer) to help him put a beer barrel into a cart at Orange River, before we marched out to our first battle; he met the man again one night at Modder River, and the man said that he was now saved and told him how it came about. It appears that during the battle of Belmont he cried out to the Father of mercy, and that after he arrived in camp, he was eating his breakfast and everything seemed so different to him to what it used to be, and that suddenly the truth came to him that he was a converted man."

The Soldiers' New Testament.

THIS deeply interesting little book is now in course of distribution. Consignments are on their way to South Africa, and arrangements are in progress for securing circulation among the troops.

As we have already stated, the book is bound in red, white, and blue. It bears on its covers emblems of war and peace—also on one side the words, "South Africa, 1900," and on the other side, "Peace through the blood of his Cross," and "My peace I give unto you," with Scripture references.

In the words of Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, the book is "admirably printed on good paper, and nicely illustrated." The illustrations are fifty in number. Lord Wolseley adds, "I should be glad to hear that every soldier in South Africa possessed one of them." This wish will doubtless soon be realized; doctors, nurses, and others coming in for similar treatment.

Particulars of the book may be had from Mr. W. Walters, at the Scripture Gift Mission, 15, Strand, W.C. Memento copies will be sent post free for 7d.

For the Paris Exhibition.

NOTICE TO YOUNG MEN.

THE English National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, announces that the French-speaking Association in Paris, which occupies a handsome building in the Rue de Trévise, is making special arrangements with hotels and private families, in order that Y.M.C.A. members and friends may find comfortable accommodation in Christian surroundings. An officer has been set apart entirely for this work, and for the purpose of assisting young men and others with necessary information as to places of interest, churches, &c.; and the Association restaurant, reading and correspondence rooms, gymnasium, and baths, will be generously placed at the disposal of accredited visitors. Communications should be addressed to M. Paul Théis, Secrétaire-Général, Union Chrétienne de Jeunes Gens, 14, Rue de Trévise, Paris.

The English-speaking (Anglo-American) Association, which has rooms at 160, Rue Montmartre (near the Bourse) is also desirous of rendering help in the reception and guidance of visitors; and its secretary, Mr. H. D. Barclay, will be particularly glad to welcome and advise young men from this country or America. Regarding this Association, an esteemed correspondent, "J. F. A.," writes: "The Association is now thirty-two years old, and has been struggling through manifold financial difficulties all along, but has been able through God's grace and help to 'keep its head above water,' and to be the means of drawing many a young man's heart to Christ. The committee are doing their best to collect the necessary amount for better, larger, and more comfortable quarters, and have started an Extension Scheme Fund for the purpose—they were in hopes of realizing the full amount (£3,000) required before the end of April; but not more than £620 have been collected and promised. With £1,000 in hand, they could secure the new premises and move into them at once; and thus offer to the young men and their friends better accommodation than at present."

TO YOUNG WOMEN.

Writing of the work of the European Continent Standing Committee of the Young Women's Christian Association, the Bishop of Stepney says:—"A Home in Paris for English girls employed in the Exhibition is being opened by some large societies which make the well-being of girls and young women their care. The office in London is 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W., and the Home in Paris, 32, Avenue Duquesne. All who are in anyway responsible for girls who may be seeking service at the Exhibition, should not fail to communicate with the office, from which investigations will be made as to the situations offered in connection with the Exhibition."

In view of statements in a society journal "that one of the horrors of the Exhibition of 190h will be the wholesale ruin of hundreds of English girls," a letter has been addressed to Britis0 exhibitors for distribution amongst their employees. Signed by Rev. Dr. Noyes, hon. chaplain to Her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, it says: "I venture to ask if you would kindly supply each of your employees coming over with one of the enclosed notices of services in the English Church. They will thus be informed of the names and addresses of the clergy to whom they could apply if necessity arose. I also enclose particulars of two homes in Paris for young women, where they could reside in safety, in the society of respectable English girls, and have the benefit of counsel from ladies who are devoting themselves to this work. We are anxious to do everything we can to look after the spiritual and temporal welfare of those who are to be employed at the Exhibition this year. I shall be happy to answer any inquiries upon the subject." Dr. Noyes's address is: 103, Rue la Boetie, Paris.

Miss M. McLean, of the Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Dock, Essex, is in want of bags (for books), for distribution to a party of 300 Japanese sailors shortly arriving at Portsmouth.

The Late Lord Harrowby.

MANY will hear with sorrow that the Earl of Harrowby passed away on Monday last. He had been ill with bronchitis for nine days only, and as recently as March 13 presided over the Staffordshire County Council, of which he had been chairman since its creation. He died at Sandon Hall, near Stone, in the presence of the Countess, and Mr. J. H. Dudley-Ryder, M.P. (his nephew), Mr. R. J. H. Somerset (an old friend), and Mr. J. Cubitt (his personal attendant).

The late Peer (Dudley Francis Stuart Ryder) was son of the second Earl of Harrowby, and born in 1831. He was educated at Harrow, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated in due course. In 1856 he was elected M.P. for Lichfield, which city he represented as Viscount Sandon till 1859; and for some time he was private secretary at the Colonial Office. He was first elected M.P. for Liverpool in January, 1868, and was three times elected for the borough. To the first London School Board he was returned for Westminter (1873). In February, 1874, he was appointed Vice-President of the Council of Education in Lord Beaconsfield's ministry, and for four years represented that Department in the House of Commons. He afterwards held the post of President of the Board of Trade, with a seat in the Cabinet, having twice refused the Chief Secretaryship for Ireland. He succeeded to the title of Earl of Harrowby on the death of his father, November 19, 1882.

The late Earl was much besides a politician. He was an authority on educational matters, and served on the Royal Commission on Education in 1886. He was also more than that: he was a man of Christian principle and religious activity, and took a deep personal interest in Christian work. In the language of The Times:—

> Like his father before him, he held strongly, but without any trace of acrimony, the Evangelical position; and it was natural that after Lord Shaftesbury's death, when the presidency of almost every Protestant society was vacant, their committees should look to Lord Harrowby as a natural successor. He was by training a man of affairs who was understood to stand to Disraeli as Shaftesbury had stood to Palmerston, as a nomenclator of suitable candidates for ecclesiastical vacancies. Lord Harrowby made it a wise rule not to accept the empty dignity of the presidency of a society unless he could take an active part in the direction of its affairs. The most distinctively Evangelical society with which Lord Harrowby agreed to ally himself was the Church Pastoral Aid Society. He gave a limit of time for his holding of the presidency, and, finding that it meant the display of more vigour and more readiness to fight than his health allowed, he retired when the limit was reached. Consequently he has had no part in the violent religious struggles of the last year or two, except that he kept a firm hold on his own Evangelical convictions.

The one office which the Earl held to the last, and which he ever esteemed it a great privilege to hold, was the presidency of the British and Foreign Bible Society. As succeeding Lord Teignmouth, Lord Bexley, and Lord Shaftesbury, he entered into a heritage of honour, and his services to the Society were many and unstinted. Latterly, through physical weakness, he could not attend the weekly committee meetings as formerly; but occasionally he was able to avail himself of the privilege, though it involved being carried up to the committee-room in an invalid chair. It was always a pleasure to meet him on the occasion of the Society's annual meeting. His addresses were comprehensive and pointed; his deep interest in Bible work, and his eager concern for the spiritual welfare of mankind at large, were ever manifest. Personal nobility and strength of character were admirably combined in his presence and bearing.

The lamented Earl married, in 1861, Lady Mary Frances Cecil, daughter of the second Marquis of Exeter; and he is succeeded in the earldom by his only brother, the Hon. Henry Dudley-Ryder. He was a kind-hearted man, and his charities were on a considerable scale, and always singularly unostentatious.

Among the Red Indians.

By Rev. EGERTON R. YOUNG.

LAST summer it was my great joy to attend a camp meeting, with some hundreds of Indians, on Christian Island, in Georgian Bay, Canada. For the whole week, three delightful services, of great spiritual power, were held every day, out under the shade of the great forest trees. To this beautiful spot came hundreds of Indians from six reservations. They pitched their tents around the well-wooded spot selected for the services. Diligently they worked until the church in the woods was well cleared of all underbrush, and comfortably seated for the hundreds of worshippers.

The only roof consisted of the great overhanging trees, whose intertwining branches, covered with innumerable leaves, kept off the heat of the summer sun. A number of fire stands were speedily erected, and from them, during the evening services, the brilliant fires made the camp-ground almost as light as day.

From Photograph by Messrs. Maull and Fox, 187A, Piccadilly.

The Indians all come well supplied with food, and two natural springs of purest water, near at hand, furnished abundant supplies. There was not one drop of intoxicating liquor on the whole island. So all were well and happy.

The services were eminently spiritual and profitable. Many of these Indians are devout Christians, as very faithful, earnest work has been done among them by devoted missionaries for years. Still, there were many who had not yet fully decided for Christ, and to them especially these are found to be of great service and blessing.

Every morning at six o'clock a prayer meeting was held on the ground, conducted by the Indians themselves. At the same hour all the whites who could muster met in the largest room in the home of the resident missionary. Very hallowed and precious were these early gatherings for praise and prayer. Then all repaired to their tents for breakfast and family prayers.

At ten o'clock the bell was rung, and the people gathered for the first public service. Bands of singers, from the different Indian reservations, were organized into a choir, and sweetly did they, from their own happy hearts, both in English and Indian, sing the songs of Zion. After the opening services, a sermon was preached by a white missionary, followed by an earnest address by an Indian evangelist and preacher. These Indian addresses were often of great eloquence and spiritual power, and produced profound impressions upon the unconverted, frequently causing many, then and there, to decide for Christ.

At the close of the Indian's address, the after-meeting would be held, in which much prayer was offered up, and instruction was given to those seeking the Lord. It was most delightful, and at times affecting to see how, went out into the ground among their still undecided friends and relatives, and with loving words, and often even with tears, besought them to be reconciled to God. Very seldom did they plead in vain. It was very blessed to see a chief go out into the crowd, and, finding his own brother, a great stalwart fellow who had wandered far away into sin, put his arm around his neck and plead with him, with such importunity and yet with such tenderness, that the proud will surrendered, and the weeping, trembling man bowed down at the feet of the Crucified, and soon received the blessed assurance of the Divine favour.

Three times a day were these full services thus held. In addition, there were many smaller ones, where peculiar cases wanted Scriptural instruction and special prayer. A blessed memorable week it was, as during it many scores of Indians were happily converted—among them a chief, a man of great force and influence.

It is a remarkable historical fact that this camp meeting is not a mile distant from the ruins of the old fort, made by the Hurons more than two centuries ago, when they made their last desperate stand against their terrible foes, the Iroquois. In spite of all their efforts, the poor Hurons were defeated with awful carnage, as more than six thousand of them were here slain. As, guided by an Indian, I traced out the foundations of the fort, now nearly all overgrown by

FOREST TREES AND SHRUBS,

I could not but contrast the former scenes with what we are now witnessing so near at hand. Then there were the war-whoops and yells of the victors and vanquished, with all the attendant horrors of that awful massacre. Now the forests are vocal with the songs of Zion. Here at least the Prince of Peace is King to-day, and for this we will and do rejoice.

Against the successful holding of the camp meeting from year to year there is one great drawback, and that is the absence of any place in which the daily services can be held in case of wet or stormy weather. There is no suitable building of any kind.

What they need is a large tent, capable of holding several hundred people. This, with the necessary seats, lamps, and flooring, can be obtained for about £100. At a council held last summer this matter was thoughtfully considered; and, as I saw how essential it was for the success of these annual meetings, I gladdened the hearts of those poor but thankful Indians by telling them that, as I was soon going to Great Britain, I would try and raise the money. Communications may be addressed to me at 21, Gutter Lane, E.C. I expect to remain in England till the end of May.

Christ was offered once for all; now He requires nothing but that we should give Him thanks for ever.—Martin Luther.

The City of London Total Abstinence Union held its annual meeting a few days ago, when the Bishop of Stepney gave a forcible reply to the question, "Why am I a total abstainer?" Several directors and employers spoke of the useful and permanent service rendered by the Union in the interests of the temperance cause, especially in houses of business.

A 29 Years' Record.

MR. CHARLES COOK, EVANGELIST AND PRISON VISITOR.

FOR many years past our readers have been familiar with the many-sided work of Mr. Charles Cook. His travels in the interest of prisoners have aroused the sympathies of people who know nothing of dungeon life, and have, in more countries than one, led to wholesome reforms in dealing with criminals. His labours as an evangelist have been characterized by features that have met the warm approval of evangelical Christians, and wherever he has gone he has made sincere friends and witnessed the blessing of God attendant upon his preaching. He is one of the great army of open-air preachers; and, alike in London parks and on the sands of fashionable watering-places, he has proclaimed the Gospel, with "telling" effect, during a long period of years.

A Londoner by birth, Mr. Cook has put the greater part of his life into work in the Metropolis. He was born in 1846, at Notting Hill; his family were of the well-to-do trading class, but not of the decidedly Christian order. Thus, in early life, he lacked the influence of spiritual training, and was easily drawn into worldly courses and the ways of sin. Being active in body and mind, he developed a smart young manhood, and everything portended a successful theatrical career.

The dramatic power and talent which have marked the Gospel preacher were exhibited in a marked degree by the youth. Attention was in those days divided between the theatre, the dancing-room, and the racecourse; and reading and observation were largely concentrated upon the literary and artistic side of acting and stage demonstration. In a casual way, just at this critical time, the young man listened to a sermon based on the words "Resist the Devil." He realised the need of taking a personal stand against sin; and, trusting Christ as his Saviour, he found peace and joy.

This crowning experience became his in one of the buildings of the Y.M.C.A. in West London. Separation unto God meant separation from the world; and this involved service for Christ and a concern for men and women who are living "without God in the world." In a word, Mr. Cook's was a "thorough" conversion.

For ten years Mr. Cook sat at the feet of Mr. John Hawker, the well-known Y.M.C.A. secretary, growing in spiritual experience and in practical acquaintance with Christian work. As a public speaker he showed much readiness, and those about him very soon learned to rely upon his ability and sweet reasonableness in Christian testimony. At length, in 1872, the moment arrived for the gift thus cultivated to be exercised to definite purpose. That year Hyde Park was thrown open for public speaking, and here the Gospel preacher took his stand, alongside the sceptical critic and the political and social agitator. Thus Mr. Cook's talent, combined with fervid zeal, was placed at the service of Christ, and, in due course, open-air meetings that were truthfully described at the time as "the largest in the world" were being conducted in West London by an evangelist who was still young in years. Scores of people were converted, and the question had to be faced: "What can be done for the comfort and shepherding of the converts?"

As he had not waited for any human call to preach, so also Mr. Cook did not hesitate to assume pastoral responsibilities. A building was erected in Stourcliffe Street, Edgware Road, and designated Hyde Park Hall. In less than six months the hall was enlarged, but even then it was inadequate to the needs of the growing work. Amplius! was still the cry, and the Metropolitan Theatre was hired, and congregations of two or three thousand gathered Sunday by Sunday. Here, as in the Park, a soul-saving work has gone on for many years; and converts of many nationalities have been banded together in happy fellowship. Others have gone to swell communions in various parts of London and the provinces. The congregations in the Park have often included men of name and distinction. It was once rumoured that Mr. Gladstone had been present, and upon hearing this the late Mr. Gawin Kirkham wrote to the great statesman, inquiring if this were so. The reply was: "I not only was present, but I had the pleasure of helping the good preacher by keeping a little child quiet."

Our readers have been made familiar from time to time with Mr. Cook's work in the interest of prisoners in many lands. His travels in this ministry of mercy have brought him into contact with many statesmen and philanthropists, and have resulted in various reforms tending in the right direction. The late C. H. Spurgeon spoke of him as "the John Howard of our day," and the designation was true to fact. In this line of work Mr. Cook has been particularly anxious to carry the Word of God to those who were removed from all human comfort. In Spain and Morocco, in Egypt and Russia—among Papists and Mohammedans, and those who know even less of God and his Christ—he has taken the Gospel in one hand, and the bread that perisheth in another. In a word, he has appeased physical hunger, and told of Him who is the Bread of Life.

Mr. Cook's movements in this special work has not been unattended with danger—have, in fact, had a spice of adventure and romance about them. His book, "The Prisons of the World," enlarges upon these aspects of his philanthropic labours, and tells many stories of crime and criminals. It were worth some toil to be able, as in one instance, to secure the immediate liberation of 150 men, who for years had been unlawfully detained in prison awaiting trial.

From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

Enterprise and boldness of action on the part of our friend have not, however, been limited to prison visitation work. Some years ago he rescued a lad from drowning in the sea at Lowestoft; on another occasion, while crossing the Tête Noire Pass in Switzerland, he was privileged to save the lives of three ladies. More recently he has been honoured by the Royal Humane Society for "gallantly saving life in the Thames."

In the midst of these varied endeavours, Mr. Cook has not merely enjoyed a certain distinction, but has possessed the confidence and esteem of Christians of all denominations. As a lecturer on social and religious topics, he has occupied platforms throughout the United Kingdom, and upon such journeys it has been his delight to meet with men and women who have laboured with him in the Gospel in West London. And this leads to the remark that, along with other qualities, Mr. Cook has ever exhibited that most important characteristic of the Christian worker—a co-operating disposition, in which personal good nature and kindly consideration for others are closely combined. As a result, there are among his helpers to-day, in the choir and other departments, men and women who for years have considered it a joy to "lend a hand" in advancing the work of the Mission.

At the end of twenty-nine years of labour Mr. Cook may seem weary in the work, but he is not weary of the work. On Sunday last, he completed the twenty-fifth year of service in the Metropolitan Theatre, and the anniversary gatherings were very largely attended. In fact, directly the doors opened, the people streamed in, and in a short space the huge building, resplendent with its showy decoration and electric light, presented an imposing spectacle. The proscenium was occupied as usual by the choir, and from the rear of the stage there gleamed, amid the heavy crimson hangings, an inscription, in large characters: "To God be the glory." Those words well represented the spirit of the meeting.

The service was distinctively evangelistic, and Mr. Cook occupied but a few minutes in referring to the many happy associations connected with the anniversary. He pointed out that, eschewing politics, they had consistently aimed to demonstrate that the Gospel of a risen Christ and a coming Kingdom was mighty to attract and convince the masses. Indeed, what story other than that of a Saviour's love, would suffice to fill the same building for twenty-five years? As to results in soul-saving, Mr. Cook desired to say little, but the spiritual eagerness and devotion of the regiment of workers around him needed no statistical emphasis. All the members of the evangelist's family have been brought to the Lord in connection with the Mission, and all but one are actively engaged therein.

Mr. Cook made reference, of course, to the open-air work, observing that the toil of his friends on the platform was not confined to that building, nor to the Hyde Park Hall. They rejoiced to preach salvation in the Park, with God's heaven for a sounding-board and mother earth for a platform. It appeared that the converts gathered in represented no less than twenty-eight nationalities; and that during a tour undertaken by Mr. Cook in America, in every town he visited, with one single exception, there were some who sought him out to bear witness that they found Christ as a result of the Hyde Park work, and were still holding to the truth.

Reminiscences of friends who had spoken at the Theatre brought in the names of C. H. Spurgeon, Dr. Talmage, Rev. J. McNeill, and others. Mr. Cook concluded his address with a pointed appeal to the unconverted. Such tried supporters of the work as Lady Hope, Mr. T. A. Denny, and Mr. F. A. Bevan took part in the proceedings. Lady Hope drew encouragement from the remarkable character of the service, and went on to speak of the love of Christ and the joy of Christian work. Mr. T. A. Denny expressed his satisfaction at being present on that "red letter night," and at having been long associated with the movement. Mr. Bevan rejoiced that the people were being gathered in, and recalled how, when difficulties were placed in the way of preaching in theatres, the great Lord Shaftesbury dealt convincingly with the matter in a debate in the House of Lords.

The timely words of the speakers received earnest attention, but certainly the most notable moment of the evening was that when, following the spontaneous action of some members of the choir, the entire audience—including saint and sinner, well-to-do, middle class, and denizens of West End slumdom—rose, and sang with feeling "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

All who know Mr. Cook will pray that his usefulness may be enlarged with the passage of the years. Some would fain hope that the time is coming for him to place his time and energy at the service of the churches generally. His ministry as a teacher has been as acceptable as his special work in the department of evangelization. Should he feel disposed and prepared to launch out upon wider endeavours, he will find in the churches many friends ready to welcome him as a Gospel missioner.

Free Breakfasts in Edinburgh.

THE Sabbath Free Breakfast Mission of Edinburgh has now attained its semi-jubilee. To the Drill Hall, Sunday by Sunday, hundreds of bare-footed, ill-clad children make their way to be fed with both temporal and spiritual food.

Being an outcome of the revival which attended Mr. Moody's visit to Edinburgh in 1874, the mission has carried on a steady work amongst the lowest classes of Edinburgh society, amidst scenes of depravity and vice—never needing to reconsider its policy or methods, its main purpose being to bring the lowest and most degraded to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In addition to the preaching of the Gospel, there has grown up in connection with the mission quite a network of agencies for the rescue and reclamation of young and old. Of these none perhaps are more distinctly successful than the meetings which are held in three lodging-houses, each accommodating between seventy and eighty men. The Sabbath school is another flourishing department. It was commenced with twenty or thirty children, but the attendance now numbers from 350 to 400, under the care of thirty-six teachers.

It is impossible to estimate the far-reaching results of these twenty-five years of labour. About a thousand every week, through the instrumentality of the mission, hear the Gospel; the lowest dregs of society are reached—not by one great spasmodic effort, but by quiet, patient, and continuous work.

The hon. treasurer and superintendent is Mr. Robert Wilson, 3, Queen Street, Edinburgh.

Will any Friends of Mr. Jesse Dupee, Potters Bar, communicate with Mr. T. B. Summerfield, Fairlawn, New Barnet?

The Glasgow Campaign.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE evening meeting in St. Andrew's Hall assumed larger dimensions than ever on Sabbath of last week. The Fisk Jubilee Singers, who were on a visit to the city, were enlisted to take part in the praise; and the overflow meeting filled Berkeley Street Church.

In all the divisions the closing missions are in progress, and to-morrow (Friday) will see the conclusion of the six months Campaign.

CHALK TALKING TO ADULTS.

In making a beginning at the Mizpah Hall, Pitt Street, Mr. J. W. Van de Venter was agreeably surprised to find an excellent gathering, notwithstanding exceptional attractions held out a short distance away. He found himself in the midst of a large company of praying people. The open-air work was vigorously prosecuted, and by this means careless ones were attracted and brought in.

Mr. Van de Venter has been mainly engaged among the young since coming to the city; but his chalk-talking has more than once proved its adaptability to the needs of the parents as well as the children. When we looked in at the hall, the subject was, "Jesus knocking at the door;" and, as the unmistakable outline of the head of the Saviour was rapidly sketched, all were on the alert. The music was bright, the prayers voiced a spirit of earnest waiting upon God, and at the close there was visible evidence that the Holy Spirit was in the midst. One man seemed in a few minutes to be enabled to open the door and let the Saviour in. Another case was that of a man much addicted to drink, who "could not see the way," and at the evangelist's request half a dozen of the workers agreed to unite in prayer for him.

IN THE EAST END.

Mr. Hugh Paton took up work in Wardlaw Memorial Church, Bellgrove Street. There being no other congregation specially interested, the workers were agreeably surprised at the successful beginning they were enabled to make with their own small numbers; and both at the corner of the Gallowgate and in the church the attendances on the Sabbath evening augured well for the days following. The field was one in which evangelistic missions were not familiar; but Mr. Paton showed great tact in accommodating himself to the circumstances. Preaching first from his favourite text (John iii. 16) he set himself at once to disarm all prejudice against after-meetings. A promise simply to tell the story of his own conversion resulted in only three persons leaving the church when opportunity was offered; and ere we left a number were aroused as they never had been before.

A MISSION AMONG HIGHLANDERS.

Glasgow Bridge is recognised as the best centre for reaching numbers of the Highland people of Glasgow for any purpose whatsoever, and so it was peculiarly fitting that, when Rev. John Mackay (formerly Free Church minister at Cromarty) joined the Campaign evangelists, he should be located in Tradeston Free Church. The northern accent was heard on every side, both out of doors and in the church, and the audiences had an entirely different aspect from those at any other centre. The first tune as we entered on Tuesday evening was "Old Hundred," and it was sung as only a Highland congregation can.

The evangelist showed, from beginning to end of his address, his complete familiarity with the religious difficulties, and prejudices, of his fellow-countrymen. The condemnation and responsibility of the sinner, along with the tender love of God, were proclaimed (from Ezekiel xviii. 4, 20, 23; xxxiii. 11), and all through the Saviour was lifted up. Outward responsiveness during the service there was none, but intense earnestness was written on many faces, and it was a moving sight at the close to see a hundred such men and women stand up to renew their consecration.

THE BROTHERS WEAVER.

For their closing mission the Brothers Weaver were transferred to the Tent Hall, and the meetings were among the brightest and most successful held there during the winter. One noteworthy feature of the audiences was the gathering in of converts and other friends from the other missions which the evangelists have recently held in different parts of Glasgow.

Evening after evening the Word has been blessed. At the opening service a Highlander, who had been for some months in spiritual darkness, was enabled to take God at his word simply as a little child; and later in the week we saw young men and women whose faces changed to an expression of joy as the way of salvation was explained to them.

On Thursday evening a specially interesting gathering was held in Young Street Free Church. Over seventy persons who had professed conversion during the visit of the Messrs. Weaver were invited to meet the workers and other friends, and nearly all were able to come. The minister (Mr. McCracken) and his coadjutors realize the importance of following up what has been already done.

OTHER MISSIONS.

Mr. Rowland D. Edwards has closed his mission in North Woodside Free Church with a feeling of profound thankfulness to God. During the second week he had the continuous help of Mr. J. R. D. McAusland, whose exquisite presentation of the Gospel in song seemed to crown the work. On the closing evening the lessons of the mission were summed up and pressed home in a talk on "Confession" (Matt. x. 32; Rom. x. 9; Lev. xvi. 21; 1 John i. 9); and the Word was with power. Blessing has come to a number of the unsaved, and the manifest pouring out of the spirit of prayer showed that Christians have been quickened and strengthened.

The remaining evangelists at work during this week have been Rev. John McNeill, Dowanvale Free Church; Rev. W. R. Mowll, St. Silas' Church; Mr. James Marshall, Garngad United Presbyterian Church; Mr. Harry Young, New Cathcart Free Church; and Mr. William Thomson, Kirkintilloch.

CHILDREN'S MISSIONS.

The work among boys and girls is now being conducted on a more restricted scale than formerly, the ground having been almost entirely covered. In addition to his adult services in the evenings, Mr. Thomson has been holding afternoon meetings for children at Kirkintilloch. Mr. John Stewart was at work in another neighbouring town—Shettleston. Two missions were going on in the city. Rev. William Baird was in the East End (London Road Free Church), and we found Mr. T. M. Pratt in Pollock Street United Presbyterian Church.

Being his own artist, Mr. Pratt's series of illustrative slides are continually changing and growing, and in his hands the lantern is a most efficient supplement to the preaching. The crowds that have remained to after-meetings in some of the missions have led to strenuous efforts being made to sift those who thus stay behind. The result was that the children with whom we came into contact seemed to have their minds really set on "the things above." The prayer meetings for young Christians also gave evidence of a deep and good work going on.

Scottish Notes.

MUCH prayer is being offered in connection with a series of special meetings for young ladies in the west-end of Glasgow, to be held in the hall of Kelvinside Free Church, from April 2 to 11. The services will (D.V.) be conducted by Miss Etches, of London.

The semi-jubilee meeting was held last week of the Edinburgh Sabbath Free Breakfast Mission—Rev. Dr. J. Hood Wilson presiding. It was reported that the total attendance during last year had been 44,508 persons, including 22,122 men, 10,900 women, and 11,486 children. The average per Sabbath was 855. Dr. Wilson said the mission was originally started by Mr. Moody, and no church or society in Edinburgh had done better work. Sometimes it had been said that the workers held out a bribe to people; but, if so, it seemed of all bribes the most legitimate, useful, and desirable. If by this means the lowest stratum of Edinburgh society was reached a work was being accomplished of the utmost importance. Rev. George Wilson (St. Michael's) also gave an address.

Arrangements have been completed by which the now well-known Bible Booth will, during the summer season, make the round of the principal race-meetings and fairs of the West of Scotland. As in former years, it will be under the charge of Mr. Daniel Graham, of the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, who will be assisted by a number of the colporteurs.

The Anti-Gambling League (Scotland) has been congratulated by the London Society on the success which has attended a case raised before the law courts, dealing with the issue of gambling coupons by a weekly paper, which had been appealed to the High Court of Justiciary. It was reported at a meeting held last week that the Paisley Corporation have included in an omnibus Bill, now before Parliament, clauses which, it is hoped, will enable the police to deal more effectively with betting and gambling.

Last Sabbath was observed as Young People's Day in Glasgow, and in other centres throughout the Free Church of Scotland, and full advantage was taken of the opportunity for instructing the rising generation on the struggles which the Church has passed through, and the fundamental truths for which Nonconformists have contended both in Scotland and England.

The fifteenth annual conference of the Scottish branches of the Railway Mission was held at Hamilton on Saturday, March 17. The reports presented showed that the twenty-seven branches are in a healthy state, and that the work is making satisfactory progress. It is worthy of notice that the mission has three representatives at present in South Africa, where they are provided free with two saloon carriages for their accommodation and travelling. On the Sabbath a preliminary prayer meeting was succeeded by a number of evangelistic addresses, and thereafter by two large open-air gatherings at the Old Cross and the New Cross of the town.

Many friends will be interested to know that Pastor D. J. Findlay (St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow) is so far restored in health that he and Mrs. Findlay hope to sail tomorrow (Friday) on the ss. Alaska for a trip to Constantinople and the Black Sea ports. They expect to be absent for about ten weeks. During this period the services at the Tabernacle will (D.V.) be conducted by Messrs. James Macfarlane and Hugh Paton.

United Christian Evidence Brigade.—The aim of this useful society is "to declare and defend Christianity as a Divine revelation." Its headquarters are at The Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E., and Dr. Barnardo is the president. During the past year the members have been able to carry on an aggressive work with beneficial results, in various densely populated parts of East London. Open air speaking is largely relied on, and the work of "declaring" as well as "defending" has been kept well in view by the many workers. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Mr. W. R. Truscott, 25, Robeson Street, St. Paul's Road, Bow, E.

Opposition in Ireland.

MAY I ask the earnest prayers of your readers with regard to the work of the Irish Church Missions Society in the city of Cork? For a considerable time it has been possible to hold open-air services in and near the city without molestation, and with much encouragement; but on Sunday, March 11, our two open-air services were broken up by an infuriated crowd, the workers being beaten, and only rescued with difficulty by the police.

The trouble seems to have arisen out of the fact that someone, a few weeks previously, gave a copy of one of the Gospels to a Roman Catholic, in or near one of the Roman Catholic Chapels. The incident was at once made use of by the Roman Catholic press, and the "iniquity" of "circulating Testaments in a Catholic Chapel" was held up as a gross insult to the Roman Catholic faith. Public feeling, already at a high tension owing to the war, was easily aroused by exaggerated statements in the press, with the result above recorded.

Not only, however, are the open-air meetings broken up, but the house-to-house visiting is only carried on in the face of much opposition and violence, the workers being assaulted and shamefully treated. Doubtless the better feeling of the populace will assert itself in time; but for the present there is much need of earnest prayer that the workers may be Divinely protected and cheered, that the Roman Catholics generally may become more tolerant, and that many of them who disapprove of the violence meted out to our workers, may be led to search the Scriptures for themselves.

Irish Notes.

THE annual meeting of the Qua Iboe Mission has just been held in the Y.M.C.A. Buildings, Belfast—Mr. W. S. Mollan presiding. The Mission on the West Coast of Africa sprang into existence out of Mr. D. L. Moody's visit to Belfast in 1874. The chairman said he did not know any mission more economically managed or more successful. The report stated that during the year ninety-two persons had been received into church-fellowship, and the total membership was now over 450 persons. The two great obstacles with which the missionaries had to contend were the liquor traffic and polygamy, and they were gradually conquering both. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Rev. John Entrican and Mr. Ed. Heaney.

A meeting to bid farewell to Miss Ellison, who is going out to Jerusalem as a missionary nurse, has been held in Dublin. Miss Ellison, who is a daughter of the late Dean of Ferns, and a niece of the Bishop of Killaloe, was presented on the occasion with copies of the Bible in German, Spanish, and Arabic.

Galashiels.—Mr. Tennyson Smith's temperance campaign in Galashiels concluded on Thursday night, March 22. The whole town has been stirred, the hall having been packed night after night, and numbers being turned from the doors. The temperance cause has received a great stimulus from the visit.

The Bishop Hooper Protestant Van has been visiting Baptist Mills (Bristol), Frenchay, Winterbourne, and other villages in the locality during the past month. Increased interest in the Gospel has been manifested, and the lantern lectures on Martin Luther and the Martyrs have been widely appreciated.

The Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions which is to meet at New York from April 21 to May 1 bids fair to be the most important assembly of the kind ever held. The 2,000 delegates who are expected to attend will include veterans from all parts of the mission field. Some seventy of these representatives have been appointed by missionary organizations in this country. The Conference is attracting remarkable interest in America. Many who cannot attend the Conference may be glad to study the full report which is announced for publication during the summer. Communications should be addressed to Rev. T. H. Darlow, hon. secretary of the British Committee, 146, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 1.

"Always Ready" (Luke xxi. 29, 36; xii. 35-40).

IN the first instance our Lord referred to the fall of Jerusalem, which was to take place within forty years from the moment of speaking (see vv. 20, 21, 24). Every one that can should read the account of the siege and fall of Jerusalem, as told by Josephus, one of the most graphic and interesting narratives in the world. This, in a deep sense, was a coming of the kingdom of God, which was to be as summer to the world; and this will explain how Christ was able to say that the generation should not pass till all things were accomplished. He knew that it must be so, and that his words were the very truth of God.

But there are other crises in our lives which come to us all, as sudden and destructive as the legions of Titus were to the material city. And, against these, we need to be always on the watch. When these days break on our lives, no angel faces look out of heaven to warn us; no trumpets sound the alarm; and we are overwhelmed before we know, unless we "take heed" to ourselves. There are three sources of weakness which indispose us to resist temptation, and by yielding to which we render ourselves unable to stand when that day comes suddenly "as a snare." If our hearts are overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, which are largely temptations to our physical life, and with cares which affect the mind, we fall before the temptation as the forest tree does before the storm, when the borer-worm has already eaten out its heart. In all days of temptation and crisis and alarm, only those prevail to escape who watch at every season; only those are able to stand blameless and faultless before the Son of Man whose lives have been full of supplication and prayer (v. 36).

The second passage given for our study presents the brighter aspect of the coming of Christ. Every cloud has the darker and brighter side, like the cloud that led the march of Israel, and which was a midnight to the Egyptians, whilst it was like the morning dawn to Israel. So the fall of Jerusalem, which was full of menace and terror to the ungodly Jews, whose hands were wet with the blood of Christ, only led his children into closer fellowship with Himself—to them it was like the union of the marriage feast. But much more will this be so at the second advent, which may take place at any time, and to which our Lord's words have a deeper reference. Whilst it introduces the great tribulation for the world, it will inaugurate the marriage feast for his own. They will lift up their heads and cry: "This is our God, we have waited for Him. He has come to save us."

It becomes us to gird about our loins for alert and earnest service, to trim our lamps, filling them with the oil of the Holy Spirit, and to be always on the outlook for Christ, as in the East they wait through the darkness for the coming of the bridegroom with his train. To them that look for Him He shall appear without sin unto salvation.

What a beautiful thought is contained in verse 37, where the Lord shows his respect and love for the faithful servants who have continued to watch! He treats them as He did his disciples in the upper room, when He girded Himself and began to wash their feet. In heaven Christ's servants will serve Him, but the Master will also serve them. The love of God to all eternity must express itself in tender ministries to his children.

The 39th and 40th verses may be applied to death's intrusion into the house of life. Because we know not when Christ comes in the air, or sends his angel Life, in the disguise of death, to bring us home, let us be ready.

David, Shepherd and King.

I COUNT it a great honour that my name is dear to the young, and that my life has such unfading charm for them. Were I now to tell you the whole story of my romantic, yet Heaven-directed, career, I should keep you listening for hours. All that I can possibly do, in the short time and space allowed me, is to give you, in a few sentences, the barest outline of the life I lived, many generations ago, in Palestine, my native land.

My father's name was Jesse, the grandson of Ruth. He had eight sons, and I was the youngest. I early learned to tend my father's sheep in and around Bethlehem, my birthplace. My name signifies "beloved;" it may have been given me in special tenderness as the darling of my family. I had two sisters: one was named Zeruiah, whose sons were Abishai, Joab, and Asahel. The other was named Abigail, whose son was Amasa. Bear these facts in mind, and you will be more interested in what the Scriptures record of these my nephews.

While Saul was King of Israel, I was anointed by Samuel to succeed him; and for that purpose they fetched me from my sheep-watching. Being able to play upon the harp, I was fetched to Saul's palace to soothe and amuse him. He was so pleased with me that I became his armour-bearer. I often took up my harp to remove his melancholy.

At length he bitterly persecuted me. Twice or thrice he tried to kill me with a javelin while I was harping before him, and many a time he hunted for me among the rocks and woods of our country.

When the Philistines made war with Israel, with my sling and stone, trusting in God, I slew the haughty Goliath. That brought me great fame among my countrymen, but it increased Saul's jealousy and bitterness. With the aid of my men I slew 200 of our enemies, and thereby won the hand of Michal, Saul's daughter, in marriage. I also secured the unfailing friendship of Jonathan, his son.

My wife once saved my life when her father sent to kill me. She let me down at night from a window, and placed an image in my bed as if I were ill. At various times I fled for my life to Nob, Adullam, Moab, Hareth, Maon, Engedi, Ziph, Gath, sometimes having a band of men, over whom I was captain. My royal enemy died by his own hand in battle on Mount Gilboa, and my beloved and fearless friend, Jonathan, was slain there by the Philistines.

Then I was chosen King of Israel, and as such I reigned in the ancient city of Hebron seven years. I was thirty years old when I began to reign. Before I was thus exalted from the sheepfold, I had endured much hardship and sorrow, also encountered many dangers. I removed my palace to Jerusalem. There I spent the remainder of my life, thirty-three years, having been King for forty years, with all the honours, responsibilities, and labours of rule and government.

I engaged in many wars. One of the worst was the civil war of Absalom, my son. Through God I overcame all my foes; my nation was prosperous, and I made great preparations for building the Temple. I sought God's forgiveness for all the wrong I had done. He blessed me with such a sense of his power and wisdom, and fatherly love and mercy, that He enabled me to write many of those psalms you sing. My son, Solomon, reigned in my stead. I died full of honours, yet simply trusting in God's mercy. Let that spotless and loving Almighty King, Jesus, who sprang from my family, be your pattern and your King all your days.

17th Quarterly Prize Competition.

January to March.

RULES.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   - I. Those under ten years of age.
   - II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   - III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   - IV. Those between fifteen and eighteen.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and your Age last birthday.
5. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday, April 11. The results will be announced on April 26.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.
10. Chapter and Verse must be given wherever possible.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and no papers can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly.

☞ Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for the prizes.

Division I.

1. (a) Mention Job's different trials. (b) Which was the worst? (c) What did he say about his losses? (d) What did he "long for"?

2. (a) Give the names of his three friends; (b) How did they first show their sympathy?

3. What is said—and by whom—of (a) sparks, (b) shuttle, (c) chastening, (d) white of an egg, (e) shock of corn, (f) spider's web, (g) a post.

4. (a) What did God say to Job's friends? (b) What did He command them to do? (c) What did Job do for them?

5. Complete the following verses, and say by whom each was spoken:—(a) Cease from troubling, (b) The Lord hath taken, (c) Canst thou by searching find? (d) He is not a man, (e) granted me life, (f) an appointed time.

Division II.

1. How is Job's character described (a) by God, (b) by Satan, (c) by Eliphaz?

2. Complete the following verses, and say by whom each was spoken:—(a) Know it for thy good. (b) Should man be just? (c) Can the rush grow? (d) Is there any daysman (e) Then thou markest me (f) Is not my help in me?

3. (a) How many children had Job? (b) Name his daughters. (c) What did Job do "continually" for them? (d) What were they doing just before their death?

4. (a) What advice did Job's wife give? (b) What did he reply?

5. What is said—and by whom—about (a) the crafty, (b) right words, (c) the lowly, (d) children of the foolish, (e) brook, (f) shadow, (g) swift ships, (h) Leviathan?

6. (a) What did God permit Satan to do to Job? (b) What did He forbid? (c) What did Satan ask God to do?

7. Give a list of Job's possessions (a) at the beginning, (b) at the end of this history.

Division III.

1. Give a list of Job's possessions (a) at the beginning; (b) at the end of this history.

2. Summarize Job's description of God in Chap. ix.

3. What is said about (a) hypocrisy; (b) old age; (c) life after death; (d) visions of the night.

4. Give instances of the last-named from other parts of Scripture.

5. (a) How, (b) by whom, is "a man" compared with "his Maker?"

6. Where is Job mentioned elsewhere in the Bible?

7. (a) What did God "prepare" in the Book of Jonah? (b) Describe the purpose of each. (c) What is said about a whale?

8. Why did the shipmaster wake Jonah?

9. What lessons did God teach him?

Division IV.

1. Give from New Testament verses similar in idea to (a) vii-1, (b) vii-2, (c) from Psalms give one like vi-30.

2. Distinguish briefly between the light in which Job regarded his sufferings and that in which his friends regarded them.

3. (a) Who was his fourth friend? (b) Why was his wrath kindled? (c) What was his chief contention?

4. What is the appropriateness of the comparison in vi-15.?

5. How did Job describe (a) his comforters, (b) his own earlier life?

6. (a) In what two phrases did Job express his humility? (b) what led him to this?

7. Explain Job's references to (a) a daysman; (b) redeemer (c) ransom; (d) forgers of lies; (e) physicians.

8. What is the chief lesson taught by this history?

9. Summarise the lessons taught by Jonah's history.

10. (a) What was it that led Nineveh to repentance? (b) Give instances in Kings and Chronicles when King and people acted together for good or evil.

11. What lesson does (a) James teach from Job? (b) Jesus from Jonah?

12. How would you summarise the character (a) of Job? (b) of Jonah?

Some time ago, I announced that I should give Special Prizes to those who should win ten prizes or certificates out of the sixteen competitions between January, 1896, and January, 1900.

I have been glad to find that no less than forty-seven of my "nephews" and "nieces" are entitled to these Special Prizes, which have been sent off, as it shows their continued interest year after year, as they have passed out of one division into another.

I am glad to receive so many letters from those who have received them, but there are so many I cannot answer them all personally.

Personal.

Charles Ardley, Elsie Brinkworth, Joan Clarke, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Dorothy and Kathleen Deckford, Elsie Hore, Elsie Morgan, J. Neligan, Ruth Pledger, Muriel Shaw, Darcy Sharp, Glanvill and John Smith, Frank Thompson, Freda Wilson, Rachel and Kenneth Young.—Your answers to No. 219 were quite correct.

Annie and Jessie Rich, Ruth and Mary Gregory, Kitty Malin, Winifred Gardner, Percy Phillips.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers," and trust the study will be useful and interesting.

Winifred Ingram, Francie, Stanley and Florence Hoyte.—Thank you for the donation. I hope you enjoyed your "plain fare" for a week.

Willie Hooper, Rowland Willis.—I am sorry you have been unwell, and hope you will soon be quite better again.

Grace Chappell.—I hope soon to hear that your poor finger is quite well.

Stanley Drew, Elsie Hore.—Thank you for your letter giving change of address.

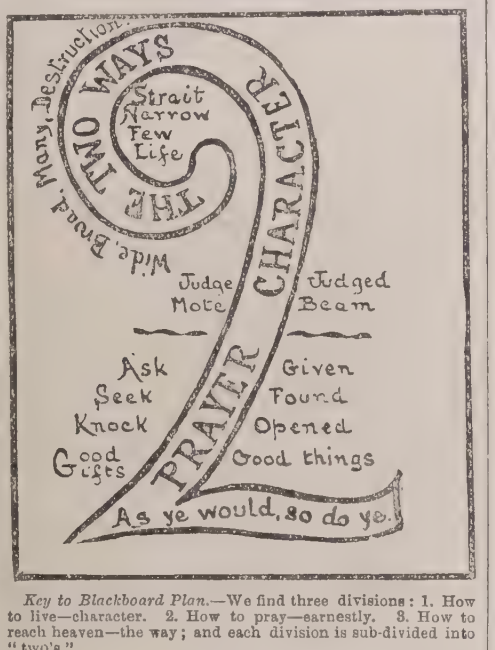
"Precepts and Promises" (Matt. vii. 1-14).

Golden Text—Verse 12: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

Introduction.

TO-DAY'S lesson continues from last week, and is part of that wonderful Sermon on the Mount, when Jesus Christ put before men life and religion in quite a new aspect to them.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—We find three divisions: 1. How to live—character. 2. How to pray—earnestly. 3. How to reach heaven—the way; and each division is sub-divided into "two's."

1. How to Live.—As we grow our characters are being formed. Every day we live we add good or bad to that character. How shall we form ours? Christ teaches us.

To be careful how we talk about people—not to pass unjust, unkind, unnecessary sentences on anyone (1, 2). To judge means to declare, or tell, something about a person. The judging of these two verses has nothing to do with the work of the judges who go about the country to punish crime; it has to do with us as individuals, and how we are to behave towards our fellow men. It means we are not to try and hunt up another's failings and sins and then pass our opinion on them. Last Sunday we learnt "Blessed are the merciful." (See Rom. ii. 1; xiv. 3, 4, 10, 13; James iv. 11, 12.)

We may be guilty of the very faults of which we accuse others; also we may be, and very probably are, the worse of the two (3, 4). Compare a mote (particle of dust) to a huge beam in the roof of a house.

A hypocrite (5) is one who acts a part that is not true or genuine; for instance, we are hypocrites when we pretend to be what we are not. To pretend we have no great faults, to think we are much better than others. Let "us be what we seem to be," and get rid of hypocrisy from our lives.

In character-forming for good, there must come in the Golden Rule (12); so that, as well as "Be what you seem to be," there should be added, "Do as you would be done by" (Luke vi. 31); also "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven," &c.

2. How to Pray.—Some people pray like boys who knock at doors and then run away. Jesus Christ would teach us there must be much earnestness about prayer. It is as though He said: "Inquire."
"Search earnestly."
"Persevere."

True prayer consists of three parts: 1. Asking. 2. Giving. 3. Receiving.

Asking (7-11). This word occurs five times in five verses. It is enlarged in "seek," "knock." The conditions of asking (John xvi. 23, 24; 1 John iii. 22, v. 14, 15; Matt. xxi. 22; Mark xi. 24).

Giving:—Sending the answer to the asking. Stones may look like bread, but they are useless for food. Serpents may appear like fish, but they are hurtful (9, 10). Earthly parents would not give like this, neither would the heavenly Giver, "our Father" (James i. 5).

Receiving:—Getting the answer from the Giver. The conditions are in Jer. xxix. 12, 13; Prov. viii. 17. We need the Holy Spirit above all (see Luke xi. 13; Eph. iii. 20).

3. How to reach Heaven.—Contrast the two ways: two entrances, two endings, &c. The narrow gate is wide enough for penitence, high enough for humility, but too narrow for guilt.

Choose you this day which way you will go.

Lessons We Gather.

That to reach heaven we must live the right life and pray much.

"I believe God answers prayer,
I am sure God answers prayer,
I have proved God answers prayer.
Glory to his Name."

The Y.M.C.A.

THE forty-fourth annual meeting of the Association at Stafford Rooms, London, W., took place on the 19th inst., at Marylebone Presbyterian Church. Lord Kinnaird presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. H. J. R. Marston, M.A., Dr. J. Lawson Forster, and Dr. George Hanson. The report presented showed a year of interesting work.

The new building and hall of the Woolwich and Plumstead Y.M.C.A. have been opened by Lord Kinnaird. At a public meeting, addresses were given by Rev. A. E. Abel and Mr. J. H. Putterill. The total cost of the building, including furnishing, is £1,400, of which £320 still remains to be raised.

At the fourteenth annual meeting of the Wakefield Association, on the 21st inst., there was a large attendance. Mr. Alfred Haley, president, occupied the chair. The Earl of Aberdeen, who was one of the speakers, testified to the immense amount of good the Y.M.C.A. was doing in Canada, and described the Association as "a first rate investment."

Kennington Association has had a fruitful year's work. Forty Evangelistic meetings have been held monthly, and 150 introductions have been given to neighbouring churches. Revs. Walter Horne, M.A., Archibald Brown, and H. B. Macartney, M.A., were the speakers at the annual meeting.

Under the auspices of the North-East Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, a meeting was held on Thursday last in the reading-room, Ilford, for the purpose of inaugurating a local association in this rapidly increasing suburb. Some 150 young men were present, most of whom expressed their desire to join as members or associates, addresses being delivered by local ministers and friends. At the request of a number of young men, an association is now in course of formation at Leytonstone. A similar effort is also being made to reach the young men of Forest Gate and Upton Park.

The anniversary gatherings of the Bayswater Y.M.C.A. have been held. At the afternoon gathering the Paddington Baths hall was filled with a sympathetic audience. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, supported by Rev. Preb. Webb Peploe, Dr. G. Hanson, and many other friends. Mr. Walter Wild's report bristled with interesting facts, and showed that a sound and extensive work is in progress. At the evening meeting Mr. Samuel Smith presided, and reviewed the advantages of Y.M.C.A. work. Revs. J. G. Train and Henry Dening (rector of St. Werburgh's, Bristol) also spoke, the latter urging his hearers to stand firm by Protestant principles. Mr. Wild is endeavouring to provide a lodging home for young men. For this purpose £2,000 is required. Mr. Wild's address is 172, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W.

Paterson, B.A., Grammar School, Bedford, April 1; Winchester, April 5; St. Jude's, Mildmay, April 6; Hackney Wick, April 11.

Twenty-first Anniversary of the Scripture Union.

The anniversary meetings will be held (D.V.) in Exeter Hall, Strand (Large Hall), on Tuesday, April 3, at 3 p.m. and 6.30 p.m. The Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., vicar of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, will preside at the afternoon meeting, and F. F. Belsey, Esq., J.P., in the evening. Two conferences of local secretaries and assistant secretaries of the Scripture Union will be held in Exeter Lower Hall, Strand, on Monday, April 2, at 3 p.m. and 6.30 p.m. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes will preside at these conferences.

Scripture Union Conferences will be held at Victoria Hall Ealing, April 27, at 7.30; Town Hall, Ipswich, April 29, at 3.30 and 7 p.m.; Central Hall, Bolton, May 1, at 7.30 p.m.; Y.W.C.A., Manchester, May 3, at 3 and 6.30; Y.M.C.A., Sheffield, May 15; Hope Hall, Liverpool, May 17, at 4 and 7.30; Church Institute, Bradford, May 18, at 7.30.

Home Missions.

Midnight on Piccadilly.

"AT the foot of Regent Street," recently remarked Mr. Henry Varley, "is the largest slave market in the world." And none whom circumstances have made familiar with the scenes of midnight riot under the blaze of Piccadilly's electric lamps will feel disposed to dispute the testimony of the evangelist.

Despite private remonstrance and public agitation, the inhuman traffic continues to flourish, and despite the devoted toil of the Christian workers who nightly brave the curses of the male upholders of the system, Piccadilly is a favourite resort of the abandoned and profligate of all countries. It is a standing menace to the morality of the country:—

> How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
> Makes ill deeds done!

Moreover, it is a door through which continental impurities find a lodgment in England. Unhappily, it is not difficult to find reasons for the continuance of this sin in our midst. The vested interests concerned in its maintenance are powerful and extensive. Public-houses, restaurants, and music-halls profit largely by the condition of the neighbourhood; and authority, usually slow to move, and prone to rest easily upon small accomplishments, seems to supervise rather than suppress.

Amid these melancholy scenes God has not been without witnesses. Salvation Army lasses and Sisters of the West London Mission have been enabled to rescue some of the unhappy victims of vice. From eleven o'clock at night until one or two in the morning they thread their way through the giddy crowd, speaking words of warning or consolation to the hardened or repentant women. In this connection Sister Margaret, one of the Mission workers, tells a touching

STORY OF A SNOWDROP.

A friend who had received a large box of spring cut flowers gave some of them to Sister Margaret, one of the workers, who chose some beautiful snowdrop blossoms to take with her to Piccadilly. Near the Circus she handed a posy to a gaily-dressed girl, who started violently at the sight of them, and for some unknown reason appeared to be deeply affected. A brief conversation elicited the fact that the girl had formerly been a member of the Snowdrop Band, a young women's purity society, so that the white bloom came with the force of a divine reminder and appeal. The poor creature's sobs told of her penitence; she was led from that scene of degradation and helped into a situation. To-day she is a humble follower of the Lord, "wearing the white flower of a blameless life."

From that time the Sisters resolved to take flowers with them regularly, and have found in them both a means of introduction and a topic on which to ground spiritual remarks, which otherwise might have fallen on unheeding ears.

"Give us a flower, Sister," was the simultaneous cry from two girls who were crossing one of the bridges into the busy whirl of the midnight west.

Steeped in wickedness, as it appeared, from an early age, their hearts were stirred at the words of a better life which accompanied the floral gift. The girls subsequently turned from evil. Kindness and perseverance had their effect. Later, when one of them was again in circumstances of moral danger, she ran back to the Home, crying, "I will be good." By God's blessing she resisted the tempter. Both these young women are giving evidence of true conversion, and have the praise of their employers.

But interviewing on the streets by no means represents the whole of the efforts put forth. It is well understood in various districts of "Lower London" that there is a standing invitation to take tea with the Sisters; and cards which are distributed read:

> WEST LONDON MISSION.
> 5, Eastbourne Terrace, Paddington.
> If at any time you need a friend or advice, Sisters Margaret and Faith will be pleased to see you at the above address.

The record of the small Home is a satisfactory one. True, out of fifty persons received last year, eleven went back to their wallowing in the mire; but seven of these subsequently returned, penitent. The administration is characterized by sanctified common sense. The primary aim is to point souls to Christ. In the business training, care is properly taken to place a girl in that calling for which her abilities seem to fit her. Some are dressmakers, many have found places in business houses, others have become domestic servants, and from the highest class have been drawn governesses and teachers. The result represents an amount of labour not to be expressed in reports and statistics. The reclamation of each case means an individual battle, won only through sweat of brain and agony of soul. Not easily are creatures of impulse, with intelligences sapped by incessant doses of whisky, transformed into rational beings. They have lived in a topsy-turvy world of false liberty; to them day has been as night, and night as day. It is a marvel if deceit had not become ingrained in their nature. Their existence has been one either of luxurious laziness or sordid wretchedness, with no apparent way out, even if a reversion of feeling has created a desire to escape. Something of the may be seen, however, at the Home on each succeeding Sunday. Girls who have been helped rally, subsequent to attending morning service at St. James's Hall, for dinner and a subsequent afternoon Bible study with the Sisters, in which the building up of character is especially aimed at. The homely character of the surroundings and the spiritual cheer are doubtless a stimulus to many, and the increasing number of rescued ones is an emphatic encouragement to those who fish for pearls in the deep and muddy waters of Piccadilly wickedness.

Communications respecting the work may be addressed to Sister Margaret, or Sister Faith, 5, Eastbourne Terrace, Paddington, W.

The Homes of Hope.

THE useful institutions known as the Homes of Hope have now been established over forty years, and have, by the goodness of God, been greatly blessed in affording timely aid to those who, through youth, inexperience, or misplaced affection, have strayed from the right way.

The Society aims especially to help young mothers. Out of 4,987 women rescued, no less than 2,780 have belonged to the class referred to. The committee in no way wish to excuse their sin, but in helping them at a particularly trying time they seek to lesson the temptation to fall into deeper evil. A case which illustrates this is that of G——, who was taken to the Homes by her married sister. It appears that she was filling the situation of housemaid in a private family, and was only eighteen years of age, and of very simple and trusting nature. There was a large number of servants in the house, and it does not appear that any great amount of control was exercised over them. In the end she was led astray by a fellow-servant who was considerably her senior.

G—— was received, and after a considerable period was deemed fit to fill a situation, where she was placed and is now doing well. Her child is still living, and the married sister helps to support it. Writing to the Homes she says: "I do not know how to thank you enough; but may God reward you."

In reference to this case, it should be remarked, young female servants are often placed in circumstances of moral danger. No family should feel justified in employing men servants unless they place over their kitchens and halls a motherly housekeeper, prepared to exercise the same guardianship of the young female servants that the mistress herself exercises with regard to the protection of her own daughters.

The operations of the Homes are not confined, however, to cases of the kind described above. Any who are in distress are regarded as having a legitimate claim to help. Many are saved just in time, as was L—— R——, a young girl of attractive appearance, who came up to London to visit a young servant of her acquaintance. She stayed the first night with her friend, and the next day they went sight-seeing. Subsequently the friend deserted her as the evening came on, leaving this young country girl homeless and friendless on the streets. Happily, she was found by a kind-hearted policeman, who directed her to the Homes, where she was at once admitted. After communicating with her mother, it was arranged that she should stay for a time to be trained for service.

It should be borne in mind that this class of the fallen are, in the majority of instances, not yet depraved. They shrink from a life of continuous sin; but, having once lost their position in society, they become surrounded with difficulties impossible for them to overcome without aid. In the language of an old writer: "There is surely a great difference between one intentionally going out of the way and continuing there by depravity of will, and a helpless wanderer straying by delusion and desirous of retracing her steps."

The Secretary of the Homes of Hope is Mr. William Hornibrook, 4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Wesleyan Seamen.

EXTENSION is the order of the day in connection with the Wesleyan Mission to Seamen, which works so admirably in the dock districts of East London, among those who "go down to the sea in ships."

At the anniversary meetings held on Wednesday last week, in Limehouse Town Hall, Rev. David Roe, the esteemed Superintendent, gave a breezy account of the work, and outlined, to an interested audience, his proposals for the future.

The cost of the new premises, which are to be erected, was estimated by Mr. Roe at upwards of £10,000. The Mission would obtain for that sum a hall, coffee palace, with sleeping accommodation for every grade of seamen, and sixteen suites of dwellings for their wives and families. The work they would there be enabled to carry on would be international and interdenominational. If the buildings could be opened free of debt, they anticipated an income from them, which would be devoted to Evangelistic work among seamen.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, still physically weak, gave a forcible address, in which he said that the Christian Church had been led, during the last generation, to generalize its work, so as to meet the infinite needs of humanity. One specialized form was a due regard for the spiritual interests of the maritime population, and he rejoiced that, as Wesleyan Methodists, they had undertaken this new development in London.

Subsequently, a number of workers in connection with the Mission gave accounts of their labours, from which it appeared that large numbers of seamen had been reached with the Gospel. Communications for Mr. Roe may be addressed 18, Stainsby Road, Poplar, E.

The Ladies' Protestant League has done a bold thing in starting a monthly organ of their own—the Ladies' League Gazette. Lady Wimborne, as president, writes a valuable article on "The Origin and Need of the League." It is to this, undoubtedly, that most readers will first turn. Designed to circulate amongst the upper ranks of society, the Gazette is tastefully and handsomely printed. This will commend it to the class for whom it is intended. The League, through its numerous adherents, should do a valuable work for Protestantism.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD is moving in the matter of social reform. On Tuesday last week a large and influential meeting was held in the parish room of St. Mary the Virgin, for the purpose of forming an association in Oxford for promoting the better housing of the working classes. It is generally admitted that the housing of the poor in Oxford is very expensive and very defective. It is hardly to be expected that the Council—which always has a large amount of purely routine work to do, and whose members, drawn mainly from the comfortable and well-to-do middle classes, do not feel the pressure of actual need—should face great social problems. Hence the action of the meeting on Tuesday is all the more welcome.

There was a large gathering in the Town Hall on Tuesday week to hear "General" Booth speak on "The lesson of my life drawn from the spiritual and social operations of the Salvation Army." The meeting, as might be expected, was very enthusiastic, and much as the methods of the Army may be criticised, the array of facts marshalled by the "General," proving its power to reach the masses, must forbid harsh judgment and lead all to acknowledge the hand of God in the movement. There must be something vital in a movement which has called into existence 7,000 societies, with more than 14,000 officers, with farm-colonies, labour bureaux, slum-posts, children's homes, and rescue homes.

Speaking of the social side of their work, he said that there were in this boasted Christian land thousands and tens of thousands of men and women who were so bound down and hemmed in by poverty, circumstances, and vicious habits arising in many cases therefrom, that it seemed quite impossible to do anything for their spiritual necessities without doing something for their temporalities. He urged that if Christian workers cared for the souls of the lapsed masses, they must go down on their knees, put their arms round them, and help them in their temporal circumstances.

In a Convocation, held on Tuesday, it was resolved nem. con. to confer the degree of D.D. by diploma upon Rev. Francis James Chavasse, M.A., Bishop designate of Liverpool. Dr. Chavasse, in acknowledging the many letters sent to him, has asked for special prayer that he may be endued with the Holy Spirit for his new work.

Aldersgate Noon Prayer Meeting.

THE gathering at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A., on Monday last, was of an instructive and interesting character. After prayer from Rev. W. Cuff, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch spoke on clearness of spiritual vision, pointing out some of the weaknesses which are entailed upon Christian work, because so many, whose office it is to teach, are uncertain in their experience, seeing the most important truths but dimly, and consequently bearing only a hesitant testimony. Mr. Gooch mentioned a number of foundation facts, such as the Atonement, and assurance of salvation, in which there should be no want of clear view, and went on to demonstrate the plainness of Bible teaching on these matters, as free from anything of a nebulous or doubtful character. Subsequently a number of workers gave words of testimony. Rev. J. Lyall had experienced revival times at Old Ford; Mr. Charles Inglis, at the Edinburgh Castle, E., had seen many seeking the Lord; a recent mission at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, had proved fruitful; and Dr. Harry Guinness spoke of a remarkable Sunday at an East End chapel, the building being crowded, and a large number of penitents entering the inquiry room.

Caution.—Some years ago a society was started, one of the principal objects of which was to persuade men to give up the Christian Sabbath and to return to the Jewish. By the issue of weekly and monthly papers, as well as of books and tracts in attractive forms and at cheap rates, they have spread their teachings and done much harm in many parts. The books and tracts are often on the subject of health, which they seek to circulate at first. Their papers and periodicals nearly always contain one article on this subject. By adopting the name of "The International Tract Society," they keep their peculiar teachings in the background for a time. It seems very important to warn your readers to make inquiry before having anything to do with these propagandists or their publications.

Soldiers and Sailors at Home.

THE various accounts, as detailed in the annual report of the Welcome Soldiers' and Seamen's Homes at Chatham, Sheerness, and Gravesend, illustrate how extensive is the work of these institutions in promoting the welfare of soldiers, marines, and seamen of her Majesty's forces. The men are provided with facilities for recreation, reading, and mental improvement, as well as accommodation for sleeping and refreshment. The report shows that never before was the work more needed, more appreciated, or more successful.

At Chatham there has been an increase on the year of £224 taken at the bar for refreshments, while as many as 360 have been sheltered under the roof in one night.

At Sheerness there has been a loss on the year's working, but it is hoped with concentration of interest and effort, and increased support, that the turning point will soon be reached. Many difficulties have arisen at Gravesend, and the necessary expenditure of refurnishing and renovation, probably accounts for the deficit with which the year closes.

The general secretary is Rev. James Fletcher, the "Welcome," Chatham, from whom further information of the Homes may be obtained, or of any of the resident managers.

London City Mission.

IN connection with the City Mission's Military Home at Woolwich, some thousands of the troops departing for the front were dealt with, and presented with New Testaments, Scripture portions, &c. In one instance, a convert and helper of the Home was, in the absence of a chaplain, appointed to that post on board the transport in which he sailed. He preached the Gospel every Sunday to hundreds of men gathered on the quarter-deck.

Now that the sick and wounded are returning, the hands of the workers are more than full. One writes: "There is the military hospital with twenty-one large wards, and soon there will be sixteen temporary iron huts. Also there will be 1,000 wounded men and invalids, beside the garrison sick, who always number from 300 to 350." The committee are appointing an additional missionary to deal with the sick.

Y.W.C.A.

A BRANCH of the Young Women's Christian Association has existed in Rome for some years, though on a small scale. The number of members has substantially increased, and the requests for further developments are urgent. These facts justify the issue of an appeal, which has been made with the approval of Madame Schalch, of Turin, president of the National Committee, in order to secure a suitable building, in which the work can be more extensively and satisfactorily carried on. For this purpose, it is intended to purchase and furnish a "Home" where art students, and others who have no friends in Rome, can be accommodated. Detailed information of the Association, and any particulars, will be forwarded by Miss Morgan, 10, Vicolo del Bottino, Piazza di Spagna, Rome.

The Evangelistic Lay Preachers' Association, at its annual meeting, held a few days ago, recorded progress in every section of the society's operations. The membership now numbers eighty-three, and during the year sixty-four indoor services have been held, and speakers supplied to numerous churches and mission halls. The secretary is Mr. S. H. Ablett, 16, Beresford Road, Hornsey, N.

The Flower Mission.—Hundreds of girls who are busily employed day after day in the factories and laundries of London, into whose lives but little sunshine finds its way, are happily cheered and helped through the numerous clubs connected with the Factory Helpers' Union. It is not only in these clubs and evening homes that the workers meet the girls, but regular visits are paid to the factory and work-room, where services are held and flowers distributed. These gifts are eagerly looked for by the girls week by week, and often are the means of softening stony hearts and preparing them for the message of the love of God. Spring flowers will soon be plentiful, and doubtless many will respond to the appeal of the workers of this Mission in providing the necessary requirements of this worthy cause. Miss Laura E. Tritton, 68, Cromwell Road, S.W., the secretary, will be pleased to furnish the address of a club or visitor where the flowers may be sent.

Obituary.

MR. GEORGE STIRRAT.

IT was with painful surprise that friends of Mr. George Stirrat, of Coatbridge, heard of his peaceful passing away, after an illness of five months, borne with patience and fortitude. Though not a public man in the strict sense of the term, he was an exemplary and worthy citizen. While in principles a Baptist, he was a servant of all Nonconformist Churches, being particularly interested in evangelistic work, and there were few meeting places in the district where his voice has not been often heard making known the Gospel of the Grace of God.

PRINCIPAL EDWARDS.

Few men have done so much for Welsh Nonconformity as Rev. Dr. Thomas Charles Edwards, Principal of the Theological College, Bala, North Wales, who died on the 22nd inst. He was the eldest son of Dr. Lewis Edwards, co-founder and first Principal of the Calvinistic Methodist College at Bala. He was an original preacher, impressing his congregations not so much by emotion or eloquence as by the force of his individuality. As a writer the contributions which he made to some of the most important series of English Biblical commentaries were distinguished by spiritual insight. His learning and attainments were among the recommendations which led to his appointment, with general approval, as Principal of the University College at Aberystwyth. In 1891, the more lucrative post at Aberystwyth was resigned for Bala. A man of striking personality and enthusiasm, he will be sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends.

Personalia.

Pastor D. J. Findlay, of Glasgow, starts this week for a tour in the East, his health having been occasioning some anxiety of late. We hope the rest and change will reinstate it.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan is slowly recovering from the effects of the serious throat operation which he underwent some weeks ago. He is at present resting at Aberystwyth, recruiting his strength. In the meantime the pulpit of New Court Congregational Chapel, Tollington Park, is being supplied by well-known ministers.

Rev. Isaac F. Row, for many years secretary in India of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, who is now at home on furlough, will be glad to deliver addresses on the present condition of India and its needs. Mr. Row has travelled very widely over the Indian empire, and seen much of both European and native life there. Letters for him may be sent to our care.

The Aldenham Institute.—The year 1899 was one of quiet and steady progress in almost every department of the Institute's work. The religious agencies have been carried forward with assiduity, and at no time in its history have so many young men been actively engaged in the Christian work of the Institute. The healthy tone of the agencies has stimulated the council to more persevering efforts. The members, realizing that the success of the Institute depends upon individual effort, have laboured strenuously to advance the object of the Institute in every possible way. The secretary is Mr. Herbert S. Mingard, Goldington Crescent, Pancras Road, N.W., who will give every information regarding the movement.

Destitute Widows and Orphans are the objects of care of the Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor. To assist in times of sickness and emergency, to supplement the parish dole to the aged and infirm, has been the aim of the Mission; and its sixth annual report records much that has been done in relieving anxiety and destitution from those ill fitted to cope with such burdens. Several cases of aged or afflicted poor, before whom there seemed no prospect but the workhouse, have had secured to them the coveted boon of a little home of their own, where they may end their days in peace and comfort. Life with many of these has been rough; and now, scarred with its battles, exhausted with its toil, broken-hearted with its loneliness, they turn to the ever-ready sympathizers and friends of charitable organizations to supply their simple wants for the short span of life left to them. Copies of last year's report and other information may be obtained from the hon. secretary, Miss Annie F. Perram, 90, Darenth Road, Stamford Hill, London, N.

Letters to the Editor.

Answered Prayer.

Dear Sir,—I have not seen it noticed in The Christian, although it must have struck many, that it was just after the day of intercession in churches and chapels (Septuagesima Sunday) that our successes in South Africa began.

It is the third time that I can recall when God has graciously answered in so manifest a way. The first was after the great gathering for prayer at Belfast, when the Protestant Irish were afraid of being handed over to the mercy of Rome if the Irish Home Rule Bill became law. Almostimmediately afterwards Mr. Parnell was disgraced, and the whole scheme fell through. The second was at the time of the Russian persecution of the Jews, and their chief enemy was on his way to Berlin to endeavour to persuade Prussia to join in his plans against God's chosen people. He died quite suddenly on his journey. In these days of doubt and unbelief, it is strengthening and encouraging to recall such plain cases of God's answer to prayer.—Yours faithfully,

M. G. O. S.

Christ and the Scriptures.

Dear Sir,—Apropos of your warning words in a recent Christian in reference to the "astonishing" views on the Scriptures lately propounded by "a well-known American preacher," I have just finished reading the deeply interesting Memoir of the late Dr. Moody Stuart, of Edinburgh, written by his son Kenneth.

Dr. Stuart took a leading part in the controversy which arose in the Free Church of Scotland on the publication of the views of Professor Robertson Smith in regard to the genuineness and authenticity of the books of Moses, and other portions of the Old Testament. "He studied the whole question," says his son, "with great care, and came to the conclusion that these views were erroneous in fact, and dangerous in their tendency, and should not be allowed to be taught in our theological halls to candidates for the holy ministry."

The theory that these authors merely "personated" Moses in accordance with a supposed literary usage of the time, in order to secure for their writings the highest sanction, Dr. Moody Stuart rightly regarded as utterly "inconsistent with their Divine origin"—and that such a theory of inspiration "covered the use by the inspired writers of expedients of a very questionable moral character." Again, "since the Lord Jesus Christ Himself attributes these writings to Moses, and others to David, which this newer criticism denies to them, it involves a very low view of the Saviour's supreme authority as a Divine Teacher. At the same time these teachers present Christ, as contrasted with the Scriptures, as the object of faith."

"In these days," Dr. Moody Stuart writes in his diary, "many good and able men count it a great discovery, and a grand principle, that the authority on which we are to trust is not the Bible, but Christ, and so they have no scruple in making the Bible one of the least trustworthy of all books. Yet we know nothing of Christ except what we read in the Bible, and when it is discredited men can have no Christ to trust except by their own conception. The authority of both is supreme. We have both, or we have neither."—Faithfully yours,

Frank H. White.

Talbot Tabernacle, Notting Hill.

The East-End Mothers' Home continues its beneficent and valuable mission in the interests of poor married women. During last year seventeen midwifery pupils and twenty-two monthly nurses were trained for attendance on the poor at their homes for a nominal fee. Of the eighteen beds in the Home, the average number occupied daily throughout the year was twelve. Out of 519 cases one maternal death only has occurred. The number of outpatients registered last year was 293. Communications should be addressed to the lady superintendent, Miss S. E. Blomfield, East-end Mothers' Home, 396, Commercial Road, London, E.

About Books.

PURITAN PREACHING.

THE lectures on preaching delivered at Yale University in October last by Dr. John Brown, of Bedford, have been published in a handsome volume, entitled Puritan Preaching in England: A Study of Past and Present. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton). The subject is eminently fitting for our day, and no man has better qualifications than Dr. Brown to conduct the study to profitable ends. After chapters on preaching in the Middle Ages, our author comes quite pleasantly to Reformation and Puritan times. He is thoroughly at home when writing on "John Bunyan as a Life Study for Preachers," and no less in his element when he brings before us "Richard Baxter, the Kidderminster Pastor." The last three chapters are descriptive of "Representative Preachers of Modern Puritanism;" here are sketches of Thomas Binney, C. H. Spurgeon, R. W. Dale and Alexander Maclaren. If this part of the book made the greatest demands upon the discernment of the author, the peculiar interest attaching to the names of the worthies whose character and work are reviewed, fully justified the difficult undertaking. The result is all that could be desired. The volume has much that will assist and stimulate preachers desirous of realizing the Puritan ideal; it will also prove instructive to all thoughtful Christians. History and doctrine—high principles exemplified in life-work—are admirably combined in these pages.

A life-story which cannot but prove singularly attractive to spiritually-minded Christian workers is God My Exceeding Joy: A Sketch of the Trials, Labours, and Triumphs of the late Miss Jean McLean. By her Twin-sister Margaret. (Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster). As a missionary in China, Miss Jean McLean was greatly beloved. Her sister, the author of this book, is widely known for her work in Japan, and latterly among the Japanese in London. The pages which reproduce the journal of the departed lady, are good and stimulating reading. A book so intense will have a message for many earnest souls.

Rev. L. Maclean Watt, M.A., B.D., minister of Turriff, N.B., has issued a series of lectures on the Lord's Prayer. The book is entitled God's Altar Stairs (Aberdeen University Press), and the pages are calculated to prove of service to many readers. The petitions are expounded to excellent purpose, and in a manner which cannot but prove suggestive to preachers or others who would open up the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples. The pages are in no sense commonplace; they are illustrative as well as expository, and not only are the clauses of the Prayer dealt with, but the underlying principles are applied to the complex conditions of modern life.

Two years ago Mr. Robert Ashby gave a series of Bible Readings on the Dispensations at Southampton and Shirley, and at the request of those who heard them he has reproduced and extended his studies in a book, entitled What is Man? The Purposes of God Traced Through the Course of Time. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Many books on prophecy are so burdened with speculative details as to be of little service to Bible students. This work is not of that class. It deals with outlines—facts that impress all schools, questions that cannot be designated trivial, or create prejudice against such investigations. The book may be commended above most as suitable to be placed in the hands of those who are inquiring for help and direction in reading the prophetic Scriptures.

Students and their friends who attended the memorable Conference in January last at Exeter Hall, and all interested in the great missionary cause, will welcome the volume published last week—Students and the Missionary Problem. This handsome book of nearly 600 pages contains the addresses delivered at the Conference—dealing with topics of momentous significance relating to the great principles underlying missionary operations all the world over. The discourses abound in suggestion and information, and are admirably adapted for the nourishment, guidance, and counsel of those who have given themselves to the direct service of God, either in the foreign field or at home. The achievements of the past, the pressing needs of the present, and the prospects and possibilities of the future are represented with conspicuous clearness, and much instruction is given regarding missionary duty enterprise. (6s. Student Volunteer Missionary Union, 22, Warwick Lane, E.C.)

Last week's issue of The Graphic was a double number of exceptional interest, containing numerous photographs and sketches, by special artists and others, of the Siege and Relief of Kimberley.

The Daily News, reviewing the

AUTHORISED

LIFE OF D. L. MOODY,

By his Son, W. R. MOODY,

With Introduction by Rev. F. B. MEYER,

Published by Morgan and Scott, said:—"This popular sketch of the famous American Evangelist will be welcome to a very large circle of readers. Though it is necessarily concise, it furnishes a great deal of interesting information, in a simple and pleasing style."

Many of the great provincial papers have reviewed this

LIFE OF D. L. MOODY.

We can only quote a few extracts:—

The Dundee Advertiser:—"Very well written. . . Its biographical details are extremely interesting, but the sense of personality is more so."

The Yorkshire Herald:—"The book is one the perusal of which will interest and benefit young and old."

The Manchester Guardian:—"An interesting outline of a remarkable career."

The North British Daily Mail:—"Will be eagerly read. . . . The volume is beautifully and profusely illustrated."

From the Notices of the

AUTHORISED

LIFE OF D. L. MOODY,

which have appeared in the Religious Press, we take the following:—

The Christian World says:—"Anticipating the larger and more complete biography which he is preparing, Mr. W. R. Moody has already issued an authorised popular life of his father, which is published by Messrs. Morgan and Scott. It is illustrated with a number of capital portraits of Mr. Moody and his family, and with views of Northfield."

The Christian Leader says:—"This biography of Mr. Moody comes at a time when no name is more on men's lips in the religious world than that of the noted American Evangelist. The facts of his career are familiar to all, and need no repetition here. In this well-written and tastefully got up little volume, we have these facts chronicled in a clear and attractive manner, without any of that baldness which makes of most small biographies a dreary piece of reading. Every page almost is enlivened with anecdotes which, while amusing, are full of half-hidden traits of character. The book is admirably written and has a literary merit of its own, apart altogether from the interest of the theme with which it deals. We commend it to all Christians of whatever school or creed."

THE AUTHORISED LIFE OF D. L. MOODY,

By his Son, W. R. MOODY,

With Introduction by Rev. F. B. MEYER,

Is a first-hand Memoir of Mr. MOODY, embracing much information which is exclusively in the possession of the family. Stories and incidents that have appeared from time to time in garbled form, and with an admixture of fable more or less attractive, are here given in their true light and setting.

THE AUTHORISED LIFE OF D. L. MOODY

Notes & Comments

We begin this week a new course of studies by Rev. F. B. Meyer. The life of John the Baptist yields teaching for all classes and all seasons; and, as preliminary to any proclamation of the grace and truth that came by Jesus Christ, we must needs address the unheeding multitude, as well as thoughtless individuals, in the words of the great forerunner: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." We bespeak for Mr. Meyer's new series the prayerful attention of our readers.

The Queen, who was stated to be in good health, left Windsor on Monday night, accompanied by Princess Christian and Princess Henry of Battenberg, by special train for Holyhead, en route for Dublin. Many prayers attend her Majesty in this visit to the Sister Isle. May God guard our Sovereign Lady, and bless her in all her movements. And may He give peace in Ireland!

The death of Principal T. C. Edwards has deprived Wales of one of her greatest sons. At the funeral of Dr. Edwards last week all business in Aberystwyth was suspended and all the schools closed, as a token of respect to the distinguished theologian. Despite all other changes in Welsh ways, we are delighted to see that the Principality retains its admiration for scholars and its deep respect for religious leaders. Thousands of people attended the funeral service in the cemetery, and the sight was most touching. In every town throughout the Principality the news of Dr. Edwards's death was felt as a great loss to the cause of theology and education. So long as Welshmen pursue with such ardour the study of theology, and retain their admiration for distinguished ministers of the Gospel, we have no fear that Wales will fail to produce famous preachers and theologians.

The death of Dr. St. George Mivart, which occurred suddenly last Sunday, comes as a sad conclusion to the long controversy which he has waged with the dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church. It may be remembered that one of his letters to Cardinal Vaughan contained the statement that he had written it "under a sense of duty, thinking death not far off." Perhaps Dr. Mivart has been, in the classic phrase, "happy in the opportunity of his death," for his last service to humanity has been to reveal the absolute impossibility of a truly thoughtful mind surrendering its personal liberty to the dictates of a hierarchy. Dr. Mivart was a famous zoologist, and he will long be remembered by reason of the unhappy controversy of his later days.

The debate on the proposed Roman Catholic University for Ireland once more proved how perilous a question is here, and how watchful must be the friends of true religious liberty if its enemies are to be finally defeated on this question. The advocates of the movement—including, as they do, the Leader of the House of Commons—seem to be incapable of discouragement at any number of checks in the division-lobby, and come up smiling after every defeat, in the hope of finally wearing down all opposition. In view of this state of things, it should never be forgotten that what they aim at is the endowment of a sectarian University from public funds, thus reviving a principle which has been discarded for three centuries in this country, and in the face of the fact that there is not a single Roman Catholic University endowed by the State in the whole of Europe—not even in such Catholic countries as Spain, Italy, or Bavaria! When fairly put, the case breaks down at once; nevertheless, it will need continual watching.

By the death of General Joubert the Boers have lost the ablest and most high-minded of their leaders in the hour of their greatest need. The respect in which the deceased soldier was held by his recent opponent, Sir George White, as a chivalrous and magnanimous man, has found a striking echo in the comments of the English Press generally since his death. Though politically an enemy of Britain, General Joubert had been from the outset against this war, and had only gone into the field with a heavy heart at the call of his country. The sense of impending defeat probably hastened the breakdown of an overtried constitution. The loss of such men of character and influence is not the least lamentable result of this terrible war, which, by all appearances, is to cost both sides many more precious lives before it can be brought to an end. As the gigantic struggle develops, the need of looking to God for the issue increases day by day.

In praying that the result of the present conflict may be the spread of Christ's Kingdom and the elevation of the African races, do we fully realize that the natives in Natal number over 600,000, occupying nearly forty reservations, in which white settlers are prohibited? We all know something of what has been done in the way of civilization, but do we recognise our national and individual responsibility in regard to carrying the glad tidings of the Gospel to each and all of those who have, by the providence of God, been placed under our rule and given into our keeping?

Affairs in China are engaging the serious attention of the friends of Christian missions. There is not the slightest doubt that the revolutionary spirit is obtaining a strong hold, and its leading feature is antipathy to the British, more especially towards British missionaries. The secret society called the "Boxers" has been very active of late, and, unless the Government make speedy representations to the Chinese Government, one fears that a dangerous outbreak of fanatic hatred will result in attacks on the mission houses. A correspondent from Pekin asks very pertinently why it is left to all the other foreign embassies to get their way in compelling the Chinese Government to act properly. Colonel Hay has lately achieved success in the matter of the "Open Door" where British diplomatists would seem to have failed.

When papers such as the New York Times, The Herald, the Evening Post, and The Tribune begin to lift up their voices unitedly in condemning the present-day theatre in that city on the score of its radical obscenity, two things are pretty clear: (1) that the evil must be unutterably bad, and (2) that there is a tardy sense of justice even in the secular press. Referring by name to three or four plays now on the boards, The Tribune goes so far as to say that—> these various exhibitions of the moral gangrene of Paris and London (!) are made, not because they disseminate an atmosphere of good teaching, but because they allure by their depravity of topic, and gratify by their swinish filth—that the purpose of the whole business is to get money by pandering to the lowest instincts and the worst tastes of the multitude.

If a religious paper had ventured to give utterance to such strong expressions, we can well imagine the charges of narrowness and bigotry that would have been made. Let the "unbiassed judgment," therefore, of the daily papers have its due weight.

Mr. Sheldon's plucky attempt to give an object-lesson of what an ideal Christian newspaper ought to be, has been watched with interest by the whole continent of America. It has not, however, even according to his own showing, been a success. His week's control of a daily which an enterprising editor placed under his charge, brought in a large revenue from the advertisements that were poured in from all quarters; but no class of reader seems to have been satisfied with the literary matter. In fact, a newspaper is more what the readers demand than what the editor would like to make it, and the only hope of a regenerated newspaper is to begin with regenerating the community. The promoters of a paper may have considerable influence indirectly through exclusion of objectionable and inclusion of desirable matter; but, on the whole, the periodical Press is, to a large extent, a mirror, as well as a pioneer, of public opinion, and as such it must be dealt with and considered.

A correspondent suggests that public and private prayer should be offered more frequently that journalists, as guides of public opinion, may be endued with wisdom and a love of righteousness. He says very truly:

> The nation is largely what the Press makes it; and, consequently, journalists have the same claim upon our constant recognition in prayer as our Parliament, ministers of the Gospel, and school teachers receive.

It is good to know of not a few of our leading journalists who are earnest Christians. The editor of a powerful daily newspaper, to our knowledge, is a life-long worker in the Sunday school; another influential editor has laboured for years among the poor of the East End; a third, whose name we recall, has delivered many Gospel addresses to great meetings of men in the provinces. By all means let us pray that God may anoint all writers with special grace to avoid the varied perils of their position, and direct public opinion with that personal sense of responsibility to God which alone will enable them to fulfil their duties aright.

The severe fine imposed upon a Birmingham editor for insulting Mr. Justice Darling for warning the Press of that city against publishing the details of a disgusting case, tried before him, opens up the difficult question how far publicity should be given to undesirable facts in our courts of justice. It cannot be denied that the pressure of social opinion is one of the most subtle deterrents from evil-doing, and one of the most efficient means of punishing crime; and social opinion can only act on information. At the same time, it is easy to do more harm to the innocent, and especially the prurient, by publishing the details of causes célèbres, than can be compensated by any amount of punishment of the guilty by directing upon them the healthy scorn of the community. The better class newspapers, on the whole, strike the line of high-minded common-sense; but there are certain evening papers which pander to a very unhealthy taste in this matter, and a strong warning is at times not unnecessary.

As the efficiency of the Board School system wins its way into public favour, and the bugbear of "unsectarian education" is gradually laid, it is no wonder that the supporters of "Voluntary Schools" steadily drop off. In most cases it is the Clerical party alone who care about keeping up that rival system of popular education, and their zeal in this matter is more denominational than religious. The "dole" to Voluntary Schools has not succeeded in reviving many that were in straits before; indeed, the more the Government contributes, the less inclined are the subscribers to continue their gifts. At Edmonton, for instance, the Rev. L. G. Fry says the great mass of Churchmen are utterly indifferent as to whether Church day schools are continued or not; out of £1,643 needful to run his schools, he can only get £27 out of the parishioners! The increased Government grant is indeed not unlikely to be the ultimate death of denominational schools. In the end the "religious question" will probably be peacefully solved in that way.

It was stated a few days ago, in an application for permission to clear four areas in the metropolis, that the death-rate in one of them was forty-two per thousand as compared with nineteen per thousand for the whole of London; that in none of them was it less than double, and that the infant mortality was fifty-five per thousand. These figures are startling enough. Unfortunately, we have come to look almost with equanimity upon the striking contrast between the death-rates of our large manufacturing centres and those of the southern towns and localities, as being part of the price we have to pay for our comforts and necessaries. Yet much improvement could be effected if only the question were taken up for treatment by a Christian statesman instead of my mere politicians.

For years the Recorder of Liverpool, Mr. Hopwood, Q.C., has been labouring indefatigably in favour of the adoption of short sentences. It is pleasant to find no less an authority than the Chief Justice testifying to the gratifying results in the cases in which mercy has been given a fitting place in the dealings with criminals:—

It has been recognised that prisoners were not complete outcasts, but were still human beings with capabilities and possibilities of improvement.

This element of pity and Christian sympathy has been the basis of the blessing which has followed the labour of the various Prisoners' Aid Societies and Prison-gate Missions; and, although it has taken long to bring about the change, it is gratifying to find the prevention, rather than the vindictive repression, of crime becoming more and more the aim of the judge and the magistrate.

A writer in The Rock gives an excellent object-lesson of the possibilities of voluntaryism in the Church of England, where it is supposed that the principle can never be worked. At the Church of St. Silas, in Liverpool, there is no endowment whatever, and the incumbent has to depend on his congregation for his maintenance, just as Free Church ministers have to do. Not long ago the congregation, in a building that accommodates 1,000 people, had dwindled down to about seventy. A new vicar came who speedily won the hearts of the people by his fervent spirit and his firm evangelical preaching and his assiduous pastoral visitation; and now there is a great congregation at every service, of which men compose a large proportion, and the church is full of spiritual life and energy. This shows what may be done, even in the Church of England, by trusting the people and supplying their spiritual needs.

Those who have travelled much in continental countries are familiar with the wayside crosses and crucifixes that disfigure the landscape with their gruesome realism, and few things are more refreshing on returning to this country than to lose these objects altogether from view. The vicar of Hensall in Yorkshire, however, has made a determined attempt to break against the established order by erecting the first wayside crucifix in England since Puritan times. The Archbishop, who has systematically ingnored glaring illegalities in the way of images in the churches in his diocese, has been roused to take action by this latest innovation of Anglo-Romanism, and the offending vicar has had the courage to follow the dictates of his ecclesiastical conscience, and has resigned his living. If all of his school acted with equal high-mindedness, the crisis in the Church of England would be of short duration, and the present ferment would speedily die down. Small chance, however, of that, we fear.

Religious teachers of the young might well emphasize more frequently the companionship of Jesus as a source of strength to boys and girls in their daily life. Children are endowed with a wonderful sense of imagination which ought to be exerted in spiritual spheres. If they can be made to realize the ever-present personality of Jesus, they will be led by natural steps to trust and love Him. Sunday-school teachers will find it most helpful to their work if they can instil in young hearts the idea that Jesus is the invisible but ever-present Comrade and Elder Brother. Too often the child's sense of the Saviour is of a far-off Power who cannot sympathize with the work and play that are so important to the child. We need to bring the Lord Christ very near to every little child.

"We are not called to succeed, but to work," said an eminent preacher; and the thought may comfort some who, after many a night of toil, have had to confess they had caught nothing. One can easily make too much of success, especially the success which is only measured by statistics, finances, and outward manifestations. Let our utmost ambition be that God's will may be done through us, and He will not fail to reward us. Think what that means. A man may lie on a pauper's bed—destitute, forsaken, dying—and yet be successful! Only the other day one of the sweetest hymn-writers died in such poverty that at the time of his death there was not a shilling in the house. Yet who can doubt that he was much more successful than many a millionaire? His hymns have been sung by tens of thousands, and have brought comfort to multitudes. "We are not called to succeed, but to work."

The (Roman) Catholic Times announces in the most matter of fact way that "miracles by Jeanne d'Arc are being asked for to further the cause of her canonization," and adds:—

The heroine-saint would do well to begin a series of miracles in the moral order. She would do well to drive back as pilgrims to the great shrines of France those English whom, as soldiers, she drove out of that country in the fifteenth century.

One might reasonably laugh at such puerile folly as this were it not for the painful thought that Romanism reduces its followers to the low mental level in which these things are accepted as truths.

Great Missionary Conference.

By Rev. G. C. NEEDHAM, Philadelphia.

CARNEGIE HALL, the largest and best equipped auditorium in New York City, will soon have within its walls the most important gathering ever held in America. Delegates from almost every country under the sun, numbering possibly two thousand, will convene as the representatives of Foreign Missions. How to provide accommodation for home sympathizers additionally will task the ability of the admirable Committee. No doubt neighbouring churches will be called into requisition, but it is unfortunate that there is no room suitable for ten thousand sittings. There never was so much interest in Missions amongst us, and it would be a glorious testimony if delegates and friends could find such accommodation—a testimony to the unity, power, and world-wide scope of the present missionary movement.

London has pioneered in Foreign Mission Ecumenical Conferences, having had one in 1878 and another in 1888. The United States will hold its first of the kind beginning April 21. This great meeting will become historically identified with the dawn of the twentieth century. Notable men, not professionally connected with Missions, will give the Conference countenance. Ex-President Harrison and President McKinley will participate in the proceedings.

Great Britain will tie us with a new link of gold to her better self through her shining representatives. Many men of high social position, of professional and commercial strength, are expected. The list of missionaries, God's famed heroes who wish to be known only as disciples of our Lord, is calculated to stir our blood, and create a fresh outburst of enthusiasm. What a sight awaits us to hear and to see Chamberlain, and Hudson Taylor, and Thoburn, and Jessup, and Ashmore, with hundreds more "of whom the world is not worthy" on the same platform. Weighty subjects relating to the comity of missions, education, evangelization, medical work, and philology will receive careful attention. A missionary exhibit covering 100 years of effort in many lands will be an object-lesson of great value. The moral conditions of pagan nations, and their progress in the useful arts since the Gospel was first preached among them, will hereby create more than passing interest.

Inaugural meetings have already been held, with the special object in view of invoking the presence of the Holy Spirit to preside over the sessions, and through the agency of this Ecumenical Conference to stir the churches to dare and do mightier things than formerly, in sending the message of the Kingdom to every nation, and tribe, and people. We now lay this matter upon the hearts of God's remembrancers, to join with us in constant prayer for his presence and help.

[In due time we hope to furnish reports of the Conference proceedings to the readers of The Christian.—Ed.]

Separation by Elevation.

OF all the continuous difficulties which face the Christian, perhaps one of the greatest is his duty to the command, "Be ye separate." One solution of the problem of how to be in the world, yet not of it, is to be above it. That is the idea represented by our title, "Separation by Elevation."

Life is so complex nowadays; our interests have become so much more varied, and are so often interwoven with the affairs of utterly dissimilar people, that the Christian becomes perplexed and involved, for want of a clear principle.

Yet if there is a sincere determination to follow Christ's rule, out of the noisy uproar will come the unmistakable voice saying, "This is the way; walk ye in it." Across the ages there have been wafted these beautiful words from a saint who answered, in his own life, the Divine call:—"Man, if thou desirest a noble and holy life, and unceasingly prayest to God for it, if thou continue constant in this thy desire, it will be granted unto thee without fail."

What is to be the delimitation of frontier between the world and the Spirit? We fancy it will be made most definitely in the attitude of the mind towards the affairs of this world, rather than in the actual separation between the affairs of the world. We cannot help mingling amid the so-called "common things of life." They surround us, occupy us, and face us at every turn. "The hills of Time," Tennyson once remarked to a friend, "often shut out the mountains of Eternity." Whether we like it or not, however, the hills of time confront us every day. Be it ours to climb to the hill-top, to rise above the sordid cares and toils, by imparting into our daily work the upward glance, which gazes towards Eternity.

An aeronaut can obtain a more comprehensive bird's-eye view, and can discern the hedges which separate various estates with greater accuracy, than can the plodding surveyor below. If we would see clearly where the absolute border-lines lie in Christian conduct, we must rise, and, by elevation, obtain a knowledge of definite separation. It will prove a hard, if not an impossible task, to discriminate between right and wrong, unless we look at both from the serener height of fellowship with Christ. Too often we are tempted to settle our course by excellent reasons of expediency and convention, instead of referring the whole matter, first of all, to Christ.

If we would be truly separate, it can only be as we are wholly consecrated. In gold-refining, the rough quartz is placed under a crushing machine. If there is the smallest speck of sulphur in the quartz, it prevents its being acted upon, except by a very strong acid. If we are not yielding the whole of our will to God, there will be no hope of the gold of our life being refined. This principle of separation by elevation will be understood by all Alpine climbers. The higher one ascends, the easier is it to walk, for the rarefied air makes weariness disappear. The more we walk in the heavenly places, the easier it will be to reject the evil and choose the good. Thus shall we be in the world, but not of it, because we are above it.

"There are ships that never go down in life's tempests. They shall be in no peril when the last hurricane shall sweep earth, and sea, and sky; and, when the fury is overpast, and the light that knows no night breaks forth gloriously, they shall be found on tranquil and crystal waters, resting beautifully upon their shadows. These are they who have been piloted by the Holy Spirit; these are faithful ones, whose inner soul was anchored to Jesus Christ."

The Prevention of Famine.—2.

By ROBERT SCOTT.

It is manifest that the results accruing from canals for irrigation and navigation, in increased produce and cheap transit, would so enrich the peoples of India that, instead of a burden being imposed on the Government, the increase in wealth would be so enormous that India would vie with the most prosperous of our colonies.

A few days ago the mother of a Bengal Commissioner sent me the following extract from a letter of his dated Bankipore, October 7, 1896:—

I have just got back after a fortnight's absence spent in the Gaya district, during which I travelled nearly 300 miles by train, road, and steamer, and saw a great deal of the district. I ended up with a trip which would have delighted the heart of Sir Arthur Cotton—a run of seventy-eight miles in a steam-launch up the Patna and Gaya Canal. Years ago, when I first came to Bengal, they began this great work which starts with a huge Anicut, more than two miles long across the River Sone.

On each side of the river starts a great canal; one irrigating the Gaya and Patna, the other the Shahabad district.

The chief engineer was with me. My business was to learn all I could from him as to the administration of the canals, and to see that they were being worked to the best advantage. I was eminently satisfied in both respects. It was delightful to see the vigour and care thrown into every detail—the careful though simple devices for economising every drop of water, and for using it to the best advantage in the fields; and it was heart-stirring to look from the canal bank across miles of wavy Paddy (growing rice)—a most magnificent crop—representing in this year of scarcity lakhs of rupees and thousands of lives saved.

My steam launch made the run from one end of the canal to the other in one day, doing seventy-eight miles in 14¾ hours, including eight locks.

Another testimony: The Times of Wednesday, April 5 last year, had a telegraphic report of a speech delivered by Lord Curzon (the only Viceroy who has shown a practical interest in this subject) at Allahabad on the previous day, as follows:—

A new Viceroy, on coming to India, learns many interesting lessons and sees many surprising things. Among the most novel and gratifying is the operation of the great system of irrigation, which in England we dimly know has filled up numerous blanks in the map of India, made the wilderness to blossom like the rose, and provided sustenance and a livelihood for millions of human workers.

Four years ago Lyallpur, now a flourishing township and mart for agricultural produce, was a barren, uninhabited jungle. In six years 1,000,000 acres have been brought under cultivation, at a capital outlay of £1,500,000, while the net revenue for the last year was sixteen lakhs of rupees, or a return of nearly 7½ per cent. of the capital expended. It is now estimated that the total value of the crops in a single year equals the capital cost of the entire works. On the land thus reclaimed there has been planted a large and prosperous peasant population of 200,000, where six years ago there were no inhabitants.

Surely the time has come for the Government of India to call for a return of all the canals at present in existence, and a survey to be made to ascertain in what districts either new or additional canals could be formed.

The earliest and most striking testimony of all is that of my friend, Sir Arthur Cotton, admittedly one of India's greatest hydraulic engineers, to whose magnificent works I briefly referred last week.

Some men, in ignorance of this tremendously important aspect of India's affairs, have characterised—or perhaps stigmatised—this great man as a "visionary" and an "enthusiast." If a clear-sighted, far-sighted, and fore-sighted man, fifty to sixty years ahead of his generation, is a visionary, then Sir Arthur was one. If a man of indomitable perseverance, encountering difficulties—not to shirk but to overcome them—be an enthusiast, then he was one indeed.

Had he been listened to, the millions that have had to be spent on famine relief would have gone a long way towards bringing all the great rivers of India under control, to the extinction of famine, and the untold prosperity and loyalty of the peoples of our great dependency.

Christian Life Illustrated.—Joy.

BIRDS.

EVERY living thing in this world has its place, privilege, and purpose; and the end of everything is the glory of the Creator Himself. Birds of all descriptions fill a unique place in God's creation; and their habits, lives, and service in the world are full of suggestive lessons.

In nature they are object-lessons for the eyes. In the Bible they are object-lessons for the heart. Three or four words well express the special features of bird-life: activity, joy, praise, and service. And these particulars should characterize the Christian's life; then the great purpose for which he was saved would be answered, even glory to the Lord.

1. Birds' Humble Nest—The Joy of Rest (Psa. lxxxiv. 3; and Num. xxiv. 21).
2. Birds' Busy Wings—The Joy of Love (Ruth ii. 12; Psa. xvii. 8).
3. Birds' Warm Feathers—The Joy of Protection (Psa. xci. 4).
4. Birds' Soaring Flight—The Joy of Faith (Isa. xl. 31; Isa. lx. 8; Psa. lv. 6).
5. Birds' Trustful Life—The Joy of Peace (Matt. vi. 28 to 34).
6. Birds' Bright Song—The Joy of Gladness (Isa. xl. 3; Eph. v. 19).
7. Birds' Happy Service—The Joy of Service (Psa. c. 2; Luke i. 74 and 75).

Let us build our nest on the rock, and rest in God's power. Seek Divine protection, covered with his feathers; enjoy his love, hide under his wings, mount up by faith into his light. Trust in his providence. Sing all the day long of his goodness, and serve Him all the days of our life. Then will our peace flow as a river, and our joy abound more and more.

Winchester. C. Edwards.

"Is It Peace?"

Hark! the echoes from afar
Of that woeful Afric war!
Hear the furious din and rattle
Of the hot contested battle!
Storms of shrapnel, shot, and shell
Poured as by the powers of hell!
Shrieks of wounded, moans of dying,
Shouts of victors, oaths of flying!
Horror-stricken, if I cry:—
"When will this dread tumult cease?"
Mocking voices hurl reply:—
"What hast thou to do with peace?"

Type of hurricanes that roll
Through the caverns of the soul,
While the powers of darkness wage
War with grim, determined rage;
Inward fear and outward fighting,
Evermore their victims smiting.
Striving, struggling, groans he ever,
With despairing, panting breath:—
"Wretched man! who shall deliver
From the body of this death?"
From that taunt can none release—
"What hast thou to do with peace?"

Peace? Ah, yes; it may be mine
By Omnipotence Divine;
Peace, amid the stress and strife
Of a sore beleaguered life;
Peace, amid the rage and jar
Of interminable war.
O'er the din of arms a voice,
Clear and calm, exclaims: "Rejoice!
Tempted, I have slain temptation;
Fear not then, though storms increase:
In the world is tribulation,
But in Me is perfect peace."

John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The Interest of his Biography.

John, than which man a sadder or a greater
Not till this day has been of woman born;
John, like some iron peak by the Creator,
Fired with the red glow of the rushing morn.

This, when the sun shall rise and overcome it,
Stands in his shining, desolate and bare;
Yet not the less the inexorable summit
Flamed him his signal to the happier air.

F. W. H. Myers.

THE morning star, shining amid the brightening glow of dawn, is the fittest emblem that Nature can supply of the herald who proclaimed the rising of the Sun of Righteousness—answering across the gulf of three hundred years to his brother prophet, Malachi, who had foretold that sunrise, and the healing of its wings.

Every sign attests the unique and singular glory of the Baptist. Not that his career was signalized by the blaze of prodigy and wonder, like the multiplication of the widow's meal or the descent of the fire of heaven to consume the altar and the wood; for it is expressly said that "John did no miracle." Not that he owed anything to the adventitious circumstances of wealth and rank; for he was not a place-loving courtier, "clothed in soft raiment, or found in kings' courts." Not that he was a master of a superb eloquence like that of Isaiah or Ezekiel; for he was content to be only "a cry"—short, thrilling, piercing through the darkness, ringing over the desert plains. Yet, his Master said of him that "among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist;" and in six brief months, as one has noticed, the young prophet of the wilderness had become the centre to which all the land went forth. We see Pharisees and Sadducees, soldiers and publicans, enthralled by his ministry; the Sanhedrim forced to investigate his claims; the petty potentates of Palestine caused to tremble on their thrones; whilst he has left a name and an influence that will NEVER CEASE OUT OF THE WORLD.

But there is a further feature which arrests us in the life and ministry of the Baptist. He was ordained to be "the clasp" of two covenants. In him Judaism reached its highest embodiment, and the Old Testament found its noblest exponent. It is significant, therefore, that through his lips the law and the prophets should announce their transitional purpose, and that he who caught up the torch of Hebrew prophecy with a grasp and spirit unrivalled by any before him, should have it in his power and in his heart to say: "The object of all prophecy, the purpose of the Mosaic law, the end of all sacrifices, the desire of all nations, is at hand." And forthwith turning to the True Shepherd, who stood at the door waiting to be admitted, to Him the porter opened, bowing low as He passed, and crying: "This is He of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, who was for to come."

Few studies can bring out to clearer demonstration the superlative glory of Christ than a thoughtful consideration of the story of the forerunner. They were born at the same time, were surrounded from their birth by similar circumstances, drank in from their earliest days the same patriotic aspirations, the same sacred traditions, the same glowing hopes. But the parallel soon stops. John the Baptist is certainly a grand embodiment of the noblest characteristics of the Jewish people. We see in him a conspicuous example of what could be developed out of eight hundred years of Divine revelation and discipline. But Jesus is the Son of Man: there is a width, a breadth, a universality about Him which cannot be accounted for save on the hypothesis, which John himself suggested, that He who cometh from above is above all.

In each case, life was strenuous and short—an epoch being inaugurated, in the one case in about six months, in the other some three years. In each case, at first, there was abounding enthusiasm, bursting forth around their persons as they announced the Kingdom of God, like the flowers which carpet their own fair land after the rains; but side by side the unconcealed hatred of the religious world of their time. In each case, the brief sunny hours of service were soon succeeded by the rolling up of the thunderous clouds, and these by the murderous tempest of deadly hatred, even unto death: "Their dead bodies lay in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt." In each case, there was a little handful of detached disciples, who bitterly mourned their Master's death, and took up the desecrated corpse to lay it in the tomb; whilst they that dwelt in the earth rejoiced and made merry, and sent gifts to one another, because they had been tormented by their words (Rev. xi. 10).

But there the parallel ends. The life purpose of the one culminated in his death; with the other, it only began. In the case of John, death was a martyrdom, which shines brilliantly amid the murky darkness of his time; in the case of Jesus, which put away the sin of the world. For John there was no immediate resurrection, save that which all good men have of their words and influence; but his Master saw no corruption—it was not possible for Him to be holden by it—and in his resurrection He commenced to wield his widest and furthest supremacy over human hearts and wills. When the axe of Herod's executioner had done its deadly work in the dungeons of Machaerus, the bond which knit the disciples of John was severed also, and they were absorbed in the followers of Christ; but when the Roman soldiers thought their work was done, and the cry "It is finished" had escaped the parted lips of the dying Lord, his disciples held together in the upper room, and continued there for more than forty days, until the descent of the Holy Spirit formed them into one of the strongest organizations that this world has ever beheld.

DEATH WAS A SACRIFICE

JOHN'S INFLUENCE ON THE WORLD

has diminished as men have receded further from his age; but Jesus is King of the ages. He creates, He fashions, He leads them forth; He is with us always to the end of the age. We have not to go back through the centuries to find Him in the cradle or in Mary's arms, in the fishing-boat or on the mountain on the cross or in the grave; He is here, beside us, with us, in us, "all the days."

John was "a burning and shining torch," lifted for a moment in the murky air; but Jesus was That Light. As the star-light—which fails to illumine the page of your book or the dial-plate of your watch—is to the sunlight, as the courier is to the sovereign, as the streamlet is to the ocean—such was John as compared with Him whose shoe-latchet he felt himself unworthy to stoop down to unloose. Greatest born of women he might be; "sent from God" he was: but One came after him who bore upon his front the designation of his Divine origin and mission, behind whom the gates of the past closed as when a king has passed through, and at whose girdle hang the keys of the doors and gates of the Ages.

Those times were by no means favourable to the cultivation of the deepest religious life. Herod was on the throne—crafty, cruel, sensual, imperious, and magnificent. The gorgeous temple which bore his name was the scene of priestly service and sacramental rites. The great national feasts of the Passover, of Tabernacles, and Pentecost, were celebrated with solemn pomp, and attracted vast crowds from all the world. In every part of the land synagogues were maintained with punctilious care, and crowds of scribes were perpetually engaged in a microscopic study of the law, and in the instruction of the people. In revenue, and popular attention, and apparent devoutness, that period had not been excelled in the most palmy days of Solomon or Hezekiah. But beneath this decorous surface, the rankest, foulest,

MOST DESPERATE CORRUPTION THROVE.

To the aged couple in the hill-country of Judæa, as to Mary and Joseph at Nazareth, must have come tidings of the murder of Aristobulus, of the cruel death of Mariamne and her sons, and of the aged Hyrcanus. They must have groaned beneath the grinding oppression by which Herod extorted from the poorer classes the immense revenues which he squandered on his palaces and fortresses and the creation of new cities. That he was introducing everywhere Gentile customs and games; that he had dared to place the Roman eagle on the main entrance of the temple; that he had pillaged David's tomb; that he had set aside the great council of their nation, and blinded the saintly Jochanan; that the religious leaders, men like Caiaphas and Annas, were quite willing to wink at the crimes of the secular power, so long as their prestige and emoluments were secured; that the national independence for which Judas and his brothers had striven, during the Maccabæan wars, was fast being laid at the feet of Rome, which was only too willing to take advantage of the chaos which followed immediately upon Herod's hideous death — such tidings must have come, in to those true hearts who were waiting for the redemption of Israel, with all the more eagerness as it seemed so long delayed, so urgently needed. Still, they made their yearly journeys to Jerusalem, and participated in the great convocations, which, in outward splendour, eclipsed memories of the past; but they realized that the glory had departed, and that the mere husk of externalism remained.

The darkest hour precedes the dawn, and it was just at this point that Old Testament predictions must have been so eagerly scanned by those that watched and waited. That the Messiah was nigh, they could not doubt. The term of years foretold by Daniel had nearly expired. The sceptre had departed from Judah, and the Lawgiver from between his feet. Even the Gentile world was penetrated with the expectation of a King.

And so those loyal and loving hearts that often spake together, whilst the Lord hearkened and heard, must have felt that the advent of their Lord was nigh. "Behold, He shall come," rang in their hearts like a peal of silver bells. At any moment might a voice be heard crying, "Cast up, cast up the highway, gather out the stones, lift up an ensign for the peoples, say ye the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh." Those anticipations were realized in the birth of John the Baptist

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 8. Psa. liv.

IT was very trying for David that the people amongst whom he sheltered, and whom he desired to help, treacherously turned against him, not once, but twice. Men act thus because they do not set God before them. Treachery is breathed into the human soul from the pit of hell. Too often the friend turns against his friend, not because of any malicious purpose, but because in an unguarded moment he is led on from one confidence to another, and what has been said cannot be unsaid.

Let the persecuted turn from man to God. Leave Him to avenge your cause; it is for you to give any explanation or apologies that the case may demand, but not to avenge yourself. Vengeance is God's, He will requite. Remember that you are his priest, that He requires of you priestly service. Be yours the freewill offering of praise and adoration. Still better, be the freewill offering yourself. "I beseech you, by the mercies of God, present your bodies a living sacrifice . . . that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

It is remarkable that in this, as in so many psalms, the petition with which the Psalmist opens becomes a matter of thanksgiving and praise, as though it were already in hand. It is so here (see v. 7): "He hath delivered;" "Mine eye hath seen." Does not this originate in that acceptance of God's gifts by faith, which realizes that if we ask anything according to his will we have the petition? It is consigned to us even though not delivered; it is labelled with our name and only awaits a suitable opportunity to come into our hands. In all the philosophy of prayer, there is no condition more absolutely imperative than Christ's "Believe that ye have received" (Mark xi. 25, R.V.).

MONDAY, April 9. Psa. lv.

It is quite likely that this psalm emanated from that awful crisis in David's life when Absalom headed the revolt, and Ahithophel abetted him. What Ahithophel was to David, Judas was to our Lord. In either case, and in any parallel situation in which we find ourselves, we can very well repeat the moaning to which the psalmist twice refers (vv. 2, 17).

It is of no use to wish for wings like a dove. They could not bear you far away from heart-sorrow. Though outwardly your circumstances might be relieved, yet as long as the heart carried within it the sense of unjustness and unkindness, rest would for ever evade it. Outward circumstances cannot bring anodyne to wounded hearts; that comes only when they have made their flight to the heart of Christ, and have found their hiding-place from the stormy wind and tempest in his bosom. "Come unto Me," He says, "and I will give you rest."

It was a heavy burden that David carried! To know that his familiar friend was his adversary; that the tide of ungodliness had broken through the barrier, and was sweeping over the country; that his own sin had given the enemies of God reason to blaspheme; that many whom he loved were suffering grievously through his fault—these were the burdens which God had permitted to come to him. Here his true religion came out, that he should dare to cast it all back on God. No man can ever do that without at once feeling the sustaining arm beneath him. God will undertake his difficulties, may show a way out of his perplexities, may relieve him of the pressure, or give such a sense of his very present help, that the sufferer will be sustained. Thou mayest have fallen, but if only the intention of thy heart is towards God, He will not suffer thee to be moved.

TUESDAY, April 10. Psa. lvi.

There are times when the air is thick with the fiery darts. We are like the heroic garrison in the besieged Mafeking, on whom tons of shot have fallen. Day and night the beleaguered soul dreads that it will be swallowed up; and as the besieged soldiers make earthworks, and burrow under the ground, and send the defenceless deep down the mines, so does the soul shelter in God. And from out its hiding-place there comes the song of praise; for what can flesh do unto the man who abides in the secret place of the Most High?

It is on this psalm that the Apostle builds the magnificent apostrophe with which Rom. viii. closes. "What can flesh do?" the Psalmist asks (vv. 11, 12.) "Nothing!" is the Apostle's reply. Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities shall be able to hurt the man who has made God his stronghold. As soon as his enemies hear him appealing to God, they know it is useless to prosecute his destruction further, and they turn back disappointed.

The closing verse is extremely beautiful. It may well be a life-prayer. Live as a man on whom God's vows rest. Thank Him that by his agony and bloody sweat, his cross and passion, He has delivered thy soul from death; and ask Him henceforth to deliver thy feet from falling, to keep thee even from stumbling. He has done so much, will He not finish? He has wrought such wonders, is it asking too much that He should put a crown on them? Whenever the temptation seems more than can be endured, breathe the cry, Wilt Thou not deliver my feet from falling, and let the light of thy face cast its unbroken radiance upon my life?

WEDNESDAY, April 11. Psa. lvii.

O shadowing wings of God, how many souls have come within your range! From the days of David until now, the thought of the mother wing beneath which the nestlings gather, has been precious to tried and tempted ones. There is no doubt that our calamities will soon be overpast, but, in the meanwhile, it is well for the soul to be dry and safe and warm.

God performs all things for those that trust Him. Well would it be if we trusted Him to do more. "Blessed is she that believed, for there shall be a performance of those things spoken to her from the Lord." Let God perform all things for thee, that thou mayest be free of anxious care to serve Him, and thou shalt behold his twin-angels, Mercy and Truth, sent forth to minister, even though they must needs find their way into a lion's den, or a ring of fire.

The fixed and stable heart, like the Eddystone Lighthouse amid the tumultuous sea, is only possible when it is welded to the eternal rock. Oh that our hearts may be ever fixed on the glory of God, waking up all that is within us to sing and give praise! What exuberant ecstasy there is here! Can this be the harried soul which a little while ago was crying for the shelter of God's wings? Waking with the dawn, it awakes the sleeping music of psaltery and harp, as when one bird in the spring woodland starts its morning lay and sings until the copse is one great orchestra. The happy soul makes its joy contagious. Sing, O child of sorrow and distress, until the skies are blue again above thee; thou shalt see Mercy and Truth, who had come forth for thy deliverance throned and crowned. (Cf. vv. 3, 10.)

THURSDAY, April 12. Psa. lviii.

The psalmist addresses the godless great ones of his time, perhaps specially Saul and his court. From their childhood bad men go astray, poisoning the peace of those that love them best, and deaf to all reproof. It might seem that the psalmist's words savour of vindictiveness, when he wishes them to melt away and to crackle as the sudden fire of thorns which dies out before the pot can feel the heat. But there is no personal animosity in his desire that wicked men should come to a swift and untimely end. As the last verse indicates, his great desire was to vindicate the righteous government of God, that men might be compelled to say: Verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth.

In those days the arguments which have been elaborated by Butler, Paley, and others, had not as yet been thought out. The evidences on the behalf of a great moral Governor were not formulated as they are to-day; they largely consisted in the results of observation. Hence the anguish with which good men saw the prosperity of the wicked, and the eagerness with which they set themselves to prove that, if the wicked prospered, it was only for a short time; and they fell prematurely pierced through with many sorrows.

In other words, David was chivalrously eager for the glory of God. He wanted His honour vindicated. It was everything to know that men were convinced of God's existence and moral rectitude. All would come right if only God was in his heavens. Truth might be stricken to the ground; but she would rise again, because connected with the very nature of the living Jehovah.

FRIDAY, April 13. Psa. lix.

All round David's house the messengers of Saul prowled like the wild dogs of an Eastern city. He could hear their muttered curses as he lay quiet, like a young lion in its lair when hunters are abroad. They belched out with their mouths; the words on their lips were like swords. Then, as was his wont, he fell back upon God. Notice the R.V. v. 9. "O my Strength, I will wait upon Thee," which is repeated v. 17. There is a difference, however, between the verses: in the first, he professes his intention to wait; in the second, to sing.

Twice over God is described as being the source of that peculiar special mercy which David appropriates as his own, the God of my mercy. Your mercy would not suffice for me, nor mine for you. Our needs are unique. The medicine that heals my disease would not touch yours. The conception of God which ministers comfort to my heart, would be as unintelligible to you as the gnat's shrill trumpet to your ear. Each has his own gift from God. In another psalm we are told that goodness and mercy follow; here we learn that mercy prevents, that is, goes before. As the courier precedes the sovereign, so does mercy prepare our way, strewing it with the soft garment, and cutting down branches from the palm-trees, preceding and following with songs of "Hosanna in the Highest." O happy soul, in the heart of such a procession! Mercy before, behind, around, and over thee; thou mayest well sing aloud of God's mercy, as the morning breaks, and the enemies who had environed the house of life slink unsatisfied away.

SATURDAY, April 14. Psa. lx.

The first stanza tells of disaster: cast-off and broken-down, the land trembling and rent, the people learning hard lessons, and reeling in the weakness of drunken men. The measure to which it was set is said in the margin to mean "Lily of Testimony," whilst the object is described in the inscription, "Michtam of David to teach." It is good to hold up the mirror, to ascertain what and where we are. The time spent in diagnosing the disease is far from being lost. Let us learn what we are, that we magnify the grace that has raised us from our low estate, and made us to sit with princes. But through it all God yearns over his beloved, and waits to save with his right hand.

No sooner is the prayer uttered than the answer is at hand. God speaks in his holiness, and forthwith Shechem and Succoth, Gilead and Manasseh open before him like a map. They fall absolutely into his power, whilst the surrounding enemies, who had resisted, are reduced to abject submission. And as the strong city of Petra, rock girded, laughs the invader to scorn, the psalmist is filled with the comfortable assurance that that too must open her gates to his arms.

Ah, soul! it is well for thee when thou art verily assured that the help of man is vain, when in thine abject helplessness thou fallest at the feet of the Son of God, and leavest it with Him to tread down thine enemies beneath Him. He has delivered, and will deliver; He has conquered, and will conquer. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; neither earthly nor hellish power shall prevail.

The Decrease of Crime.

THE question as to whether serious crime is or is not decreasing in our land continues to be debated from time to time; and while willing to hear all sides, we have been accustomed to look facts boldly in the face. The most trustworthy data upon which to build can be found in the annual reports of the Commissioners of Prisons; and these officials, who deal with facts coming to them at first hand, have for years insisted that serious crime is on the decline. We have also closely interviewed Mr. William Wheatley, of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, on the same subject, and his testimony agrees with that of the Commissioners. In point of fact, the officials, as well as Christian workers and social reformers, are directly encouraged in their service by what they see taking place before their eyes.

The outlook is specially encouraging because of the work carried on for the reclamation of youthful offenders. It is on this very account that so high a value is set on Mr. Wheatley's work by members of the bench, police officials, and the commissioners of prisons. "If the prison population becomes more and more limited to recidivists," it is remarked in a recent Blue Book, "and the total prison population continues to decrease as at present, it is a proof that fewer recruits are entering the army of crime." It is then significantly added, "One of the most satisfactory signs of the times is that the number of young offenders under twenty-one

SHOWS A TENDENCY TO DECREASE,

We believe we see here the practical result of that admirable and increasing activity of philanthropic effort to save children and young persons from evil homes and surroundings. It is a commonplace, which cannot be too often repeated, that the real safeguard against national crime consists in prevention." Half a century ago the rapid increase in the number of juvenile criminals inspired considerable alarm even among people who were not disposed to take pessimistic views of the situation. The conviction of lads under sixteen are over nine hundred a year less than they were only seven years ago, while the proportionate falling off is even still greater in the case of girls.

What has to be kept well in mind, however, is the fact that, while a number of boys who may have been exposed to criminal courses are a veritable band of hope, if attention is given to them in time, as well as more difficult to reclaim, with every year that is added to their age. Mr. Wheatley would readily admit that the experience of the St. Giles's Christian Mission has confirmed this over and over again. Out of some 500 lads who are annually received into the homes for training, few indeed disappoint those who befriend them; but there is always more uncertainty and consequent anxiety concerning those who get entangled in criminal courses after they have turned twenty years of age. It is not only more difficult successfully to bring good influences to bear upon them; it is far harder to find the employment for them which is always urgently needed.

THEY BECOME MORE DANGEROUS,

It would be difficult to over-estimate the direct and indirect gain to society which comes in the reclamation or saving of those to whom the commissioners refer as including a proportion of "dangerous young criminals who, in the insolence of youth, have made up their minds to defy the law, and to obtain their living by other than honest means." But if we take into account their having had all things against them in childhood and youth, we find that the boys who are trained for honest industry by the St. Giles' Mission merit our sympathy quite as much as our blame. Thus, we find that out of over 1,200 who got into trouble during last year, nearly half had received little or no education; a large proportion were orphans, while nearly 400 either had bad homes or no homes at all. In other words, there is so much of good human material running to waste which is capable of being utilized for the best of purposes.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE need of organized effort to reach, by means of open-air preaching, those who treat religious matters in general and places of worship in particular with neglect or distain has of recent years received a renewal of attention. Amongst other societies, the Open-Air Mission, with its regular organization and well-sustained agencies, has done much to demonstrate how readily the masses may be brought under the influence of Gospel truth.

The annual gatherings of the Mission were held on Thursday last at the Lower Exeter Hall. There were large attendances both afternoon and evening, and the utmost heartiness prevailed. At the evening meeting, Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, gave a racy address, dwelling on the value of enthusiasm "in these degenerate days of a distorted Gospel," and expressing his sense of the importance of such work as the Mission undertook in going to the common people with the foundation truths of the Gospel.

Mr. Frank Cockrem, the secretary, in reviewing the past year's work, had an agreeable task to perform, for the report was full of good tidings. Meetings had been held at races, athletic sports, fairs, wakes, markets, regattas, feasts, and cattle shows. Advantage had also been taken of holiday times in preaching and singing the Gospel at popular resorts, and unexpected descents had been made on places frequented by Sabbath desecrators.

Mr. Cockrem's recital included references to the campaigns on Epsom Racecourse and at "royal Ascot," and at the sea-side, followed by a brief description of the troopship work recently undertaken in connection with the

for the front. When the khaki-clad troops have embarked, and the boom of the siren is heard as the vessel is about to cast off, and a thousand hearts beat high at the thought of loved ones left behind, and the last glimpse of the old homeland, a wonderful opportunity is afforded for words of kindly counsel and gospel invitation. Evangelists from the society have the permission of the authorities to labour regularly on board the troopships leaving the Royal Albert Dock, Tilbury Dock, and Liverpool. A happy addition to the gospel preaching has been the supply of postcards for home, running, "I arrived safe on board here just now. We are going to sail at once. I hope, please God, we shall have a safe passage and a victorious return. God bless you all. Pray for me. Farewell." These cards are addressed and signed by the soldiers and duly posted by the evangelist. Many men have received spiritual encouragement, and the outcome has been an increase of testimony and other service, both during the voyage and on the field of active operations in Africa.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, in some hearty words, remarked that the Open-air Mission should command the support of all Evangelical denominations, for its direct aim was to lead sinners to Christ; and it stimulated the spiritual life of the churches. Moreover it was economical. He could recall no organization in which work was done for a relatively smaller outlay. Lady Hope expressed the satisfaction which must be felt that the Mission stood by the Gospel in its pristine simplicity, and followed so literally the example and methods of Christ with regard to open-air preaching. The speaker went on to draw from her unfailing store of Gospel reminiscence a telling history of a lady friend who was converted at Llandudno through catching the words of an open-air speaker preaching in the distance to a crowd, as he quoted, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Lady Hope added a touching account of some little fellows at Belfast, who, converted and desiring to work for the Lord, set out to invite children in the street to attend Gospel meetings, and yield to the Saviour.

Revs. J. Stuart, of Watford, E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, and other friends, subsequently took part, speaking in high terms of the Mission, and advocating further extension. Copies of the annual report may be had from Mr. Cockrem, at 11, Adam Street, Strand.

Mildmay Medical Mission.

THROUGH the operations of this beneficent agency, thousands of the sick poor of Bethnal Green and other districts have been provided with means of relief and restoration to health. Food is supplied to the needy, as well as other invalid necessaries and comforts. To all the Gospel is preached—either by addresses in public, or the quiet talks at the bedside in the hospital wards, or the homes of the patients.

The wards for men and women are usually well filled. According to the annual report, 519 patients were treated during the year 1899; while the total number of visits of out-patients amounted to 23,557. The results of treatment have been most satisfactory, while the opportunities afforded for pointing sinners to the Saviour have been embraced with prayerful and patient earnestness.

The majority of the nursing staff and missionary workers are ladies from the Mildmay Deaconess' House. Many are the encouragements given by those who come for bodily help. Very wild spirits get tamed through kindness and the Scriptural truths which they hear, and many a desire is awakened in them for better and higher things in life.

Numerous instances are recorded of the usefulness and far-reaching influence of the institution. A young married woman was dying of consumption in a tiny back-room. After the doctor's visit one day, a Sister followed with necessaries for making the patient comfortable. She sat down on the only chair, dirty and broken, and talked with her of Christ as our Substitute, and of the forgiving love of God. The woman saw it clearly, but would not then forgive her husband, whom she had left six months before on account of his ill-treatment. Eventually she overcame her feeling, and prayed earnestly, "Forgive us as we are forgiven." This spirit she manifested until she passed away.

The Ossulston Convalescent Home, High Barnet, has during the year received 623 patients—men, women, and children—from the Mildmay Mission and its Hospitals. It is gratifying to learn that nearly all received benefit to their bodily health, and were led to seek the Great Physician, to find healing for their souls. The hearts of the workers are constantly cheered by the grateful testimony of patients recognising how much they owe to the institution.

Communications respecting any of the organizations may be sent to the Treasurer, Colonel J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N.

Spurgeon's Colporteurs.

THE Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association, founded by the late C. H. Spurgeon more than thirty-three years ago, is unobtrusively carrying on its good work in more than fifty districts of England, with continuous indications of spiritual results both from the sales of Christian literature, the house-to-house visitation, and the direct evangelistic labour of the colporteurs. Its work is unsectarian, and earnest endeavours are made to secure the highest possible standard with regard to the books disseminated.

The agents make some quarter-of-a-million visits each year, pursuing their rounds among the cottages and homes of their extensive districts, and as preachers of the Word, some six or seven thousand services are conducted by them in chapels and mission buildings connected with all sorts of evangelical denominations during the same period. Some of the colporteurs have maintained their position in the same district for more than a quarter of a century, and quite a number have exceeded twenty years of faithful and useful service.

The influence for good exercised by these brethren in localities where, but for them, there would be scarcely any means of grace, cannot be over-estimated. New districts are about to be opened, and the Association is seeking aid on behalf of its general fund, which greatly needs augmenting. The secretary is Mr. S. Wigney, Pastors' College, Temple Street, S.E.

Women's Holiday Fund.

A NUMEROUSLY attended drawing-room meeting, in support of the Women's Holiday Fund, was held, through the kindness of the Hon. W. F. D. Smith, at 3, Grosvenor Place, on March 21. The Bishop of Stepney, who presided, drew a pathetic picture of the drudgery and monotony of the lives of poor working London women, and dwelt upon the need of rest and change to avert what, in many cases, would otherwise be an inevitable breakdown in health.

The Hon. Maude Lawrence, in an interesting speech, dwelt on the satisfactory progress of the Fund, which in the first year of its existence, in 1895, sent away only forty-four women, and had now increased the number to 300. She referred to the beneficial action of the Society in encouraging thrift, by requiring every woman sent away to bear a share of the cost of her holiday; and mentioned the fact that the average contribution of the women had risen from 2s. in 1898, to 9s. last year. The fund was entirely undenominational, questions of religious belief never being raised.

Mr. John Murray warmly advocated the claims of the Society, and emphasized the fact that, owing to its admirable organization, excellent results were obtained by a small expenditure of money—the cost to the Fund of the 300 women sent away last year having been only £250, the remainder, £127, having been defrayed by the women themselves. He added that the donor of £1 might feel sure that, by that sum, he would secure for some deserving poor women the benefit of a three weeks' holiday at the seaside or in the country.

The hon. treasurer, Mr. A. S. Daniell, of Fairchildes, Warlingham, Surrey, made a short financial statement, and added that the Fund was greatly in want of more regular subscribers, in order that the Committee might be able to reckon upon a more settled income.

Postal and Telegraph Christian Association.

ON Tuesday and Wednesday last week the annual conference of the senior section was held in the Lower Hall of the City Temple, Holborn. One who was present says: "The sense of the presence of God was great, and souls could not but be blessed." Another testified: "We have never before had more reality and unity."

Rev. E. L. Hamilton (Bath) and Dr. White (Portsmouth) led the general meetings. In the meetings connected with the foreign and colonial work, Miss K. Tristram (C.M.S.) spoke for Japan, Mr. Evans for Spanish America, and Mr. Craig for South Africa. Brief accounts were also given by secretaries of the P.T.C.A. (Senior) work in India, and the Scattered and Colonial Branches.

On Wednesday morning there was a helpful Conference on the work in post-offices at home. "I have long been on the look-out for some such Christian Association," lately wrote a Scotch official who has joined as a scattered member; and we are touched at receiving, in this time of trial in South Africa, names with applications to join as scattered members from the post-offices in Van der Byl's Kraal, another in Vredenburg, and another in Clarkebury, Tembuland.

We ask the help of the Lord's people in this work. Will you help us by prayer for the post offices at home and abroad? As He leads will you give us your time to take meetings and classes, or to write and send "Quarterly Mails" to those far away? Will you help us by contributions, however small?

Persons wishing to join the prayer union, or to give their lives, or other help, may communicate with the secretary, P.T.C.A. Series, The Institute, 4, Goswell Road, E.C. E. E. E.

Railway Men.—A Gospel mission is being commenced for the benefit of a number of the Midland Railway Company's employés at Cricklewood, who find it difficult, on account of the secluded position of their cottage dwellings, to attend a religious service. It is hoped to erect a small hall, and various friends have promised to help in the furnishing. The hon. sec. is Mr. F. L. Grosvenor, 22, Lichfield Road, Cricklewood.

Mrs. Meredith's Work.

"GOD buries his workers, but carries on his work." The sainted Elizabeth Fry, whose memory must ever be cherished for her devoted labours among women prisoners, passed to her rest, but one of the young associates and followers of her later days, Mrs. Meredith, realizing the neglected condition of the criminal population, felt called of God to devote herself entirely to the maintenance of such work. Since the initial days, many developments have come, until, at the present time, most of the prisons of Great Britain are represented in the large family employed at Mrs. Meredith's well-known mission for female ex-prisoners in the South of London. A visit to the institutions in question is an education in reformatory principles. Mrs. Meredith's methods are, in some respects, unique, but their fruitful character bear testimony to their soundness.

The large laundry, which, it may be remembered, has its habitation in a spacious building formerly used as a skating rink, is the chief means of employment for the women, the interior of which presents an interesting and picturesque sight. Amid the whirr of many wheels and the plash of water, one discerns a spirit of eager industry manifested on every hand. There is evident anxiety, not merely to do the work but to do it well, a fact which appears highly satisfactory when we remember that many of the women have been familiar with every means of gaining a livelihood without working for it. No case is refused, and so, in this line of industry, there are found widely differing natures, and the success of the mission may well be set down as a triumph of the Gospel, since Christianity is the motive force and pervading spirit of the whole.

Each day there are morning prayers; and, later in the day, a Bible reading. Evangelistic services are also held frequently; but there is nothing that could suggest coercion into a religious profession. The women appreciate the many spiritual efforts put forth on their behalf, and it is satisfactory to find that there is much fruit. Many of them walk humbly with God, conscious that their sins, which were indeed many, are forgiven. Some of the transformations are remarkable. Lovelace's famous lyric, referring to a prison, says that

> Minds innocent and quiet take
> That for a hermitage.

These minds, however, were anything but innocent and quiet. Rather, they were filled with passion and turbulence; but a process of Christian administration has changed all that, and the matron is able to instance many cases in which those who have gone out to situations have become trusted and honoured in various households.

The laundrying, one is able to testify from personal inspection, is admirably done. The management aims to make the institutions self-supporting, and it is a pity that such praiseworthy efforts are hindered for want of an additional calender machine for mangling, ironing, and finishing. If this were obtained, a much larger quantity of work could be turned out; and this is the more desirable, as offers of important contracts have at present to be declined. The cost of such a machine is estimated at £175.

Communications respecting the work may be addressed to Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 8.

"CHRIST our Missionary Model" (John iv. 5-15). The tired Son of Man gives rest. The thirsty gives the living water. The Jew overleaps the barrier of nationality, and fills a Samaritan village with joy. And what are the methods He pursues?

Firstly. There is the touch of nature. Weariness, thirst, need, appeal to the woman's heart. They make a common meeting-ground. It is so important to establish a link of connection between yourself and those whom you address, whether at home or abroad. Few things have done more for the cause of God in a district on the Congo, that I know, than the birth of a little babe in a missionary's home. Here, at least, was a fact that bound the missionary and native with the tie of a common feeling. Hence the great necessity, in India and elsewhere, to break down, as far as possible, the barriers between race and race by the mingling of a common life.

Secondly. Our Lord rose naturally from the outward to the inward; the material to the spiritual. It is in the highest degree unwise, in most cases at least, to intrude too hastily and precipitately on the sanctities of the soul. Some men have been honoured of God in the carrying of souls by the rush of a bayonet charge, but most are won by the gradual closing in of the lines of attack. In McCheyne's life we are told that one morning when out riding he stopped at a blacksmith's forge, and alighting, entered the smithy, and, after some lighter remarks, asked the smith what the fire made him think of—a question which led to his conversion.

Thirdly. Our Lord appeals to her experience of the futility of the best this world can give to slake the thirst of the soul. When he says, "shall thirst again," he appealed to the innate consciousness of the woman's soul. She knew that she needed to come again and again to draw, not only from that well, but from the wells of human love. Her repeated marriage had not satisfied her heart's cravings. She acknowledged it when she said, "Give me that which will save me coming all the way hither to draw." You must convict people of the vanity and unutterable emptiness of life apart from God. For the most part it will not be difficult to do it; if only the soul is true to itself, it will answer to your appeal.

Fourthly. In contrast to the unsatisfactory nature of her experiences, Christ cites the advantages which He waits to give. What a picture it is! Against the dull pit of which she speaks, He puts the sparkling spring, always rising as a fountain day and night. Against the inability of the water she drew to remove thirst, He places his promise of giving water of which we drink never to thirst. Against the necessity of seeking water outside the home by the tedious journey to the well, He puts the inwardness of true religion. It rises up within. Against the quibbling as to whether God were to be found here or there, He puts the truth that the heart of man is his shrine, and that those who worship must worship the Father there.

Fifthly. Our Lord sets Himself to win one soul. Men are fond of inventing schemes for the salvation of the heathen. They will civilize, educate, teach them the arts of life, introduce the manners and customs of the West. It is not thus that the only work which shall last can be effected. Men must be born again. Not first the new state, but first the new heart. And if you want to win a tribe, a race, or continent, you will do it best by concentrating your thought upon individuals—one here and one there—who will be for the rest what this woman was. There was hardly need for Jesus to visit her native village. She herself became its apostle (vv. 29, 39, 42).

C.E. NOTES.

The general subject for the World's Convention, July 13-29, is to be "The Old Power for the New Age." Topic for Monday meetings, "Twentieth Century Endeavourers on the King's Service." Topic for Tuesday, "Ye are his Witnesses." Topic for Wednesday, "Thy Kingdom Come."

Special meetings for Bible study, conducted by Mr. Robert Speer; and conferences conducted by Rev. C. M. Sheldon will be arranged if possible.

On the Sunday there will be Endeavour sermons preached in many churches and chapels, whilst the chief feature of the day will be the quiet hour or devotional meeting held at the close of the evening services.

Mrs. Clark received the following letter from China before starting thither:—"The ladies of the Church Missionary Society are very friendly to Christian Endeavour, and your coming would help very largely to strengthen C.E. work in that Mission. . . The people are praying to have you come."

A Succourer of Many.

THE LATE MRS. MARSHMAN.

MRS. MARSHMAN, whose portrait accompanies these lines, devoted her long life to the good of others. The daughter of Mr. John Eddowes Sparrowe, she was born in 1816 at Ipswich, where her family, who own the well-known "Ancient House," had been settled for 400 years. She went to India in 1840, and often recalled the text of the first sermon she heard on Indian soil: "Blessed be the Lord, for He hath shewed me his marvellous kindness" in a strange city. She was full of religious zeal, and received a warm welcome from those who were already working there in the Master's service.

In 1846 she married Mr. John Clark Marshman, the son of Dr. Marshman, of Serampore, and editor of the Friend of India. She thus became connected with the work of the devoted missionaries, Carey, Marshman, and Ward. They had passed from their labours; but Hannah Marshman, the aged widow of Dr. Marshman, still survived, and gave her an affectionate welcome.

When, in the following year, Hannah Marshman was called to her rest, Mrs. John Clark Marshman took charge of the school for native girls which had been founded by her mother-in-law, and she carried it on with great success. At first she tried speaking to the girls through an interpreter; but soon, realizing her failure to make the desired impression through the medium of a third person, she determined, in spite of her own imperfect knowledge of the native language, to address the girls herself.

What brought her to this decision was the inadequate way in which her interpreter was describing the love of Jesus. She interrupted her, and dipping her finger in a glass of water addressed the girls thus: "Do you see this drop of water at the point of my finger? That represents our love for Jesus. Do you see yonder," pointing to the window, "your beautiful flowing Ganges? That represents Jesus' love for you."

Mrs. Marshman soon became a fluent speaker in the native language, and took the greatest delight in her class. She used metaphor very largely in her Bible teaching, because, she used to say, Christ taught in that way, and she took Him as her example in this as in all things.

At this time she studied homœopathy, that she might, under God's blessing, be able to alleviate the pain and sickness around her. There was no doctor near who would attend the poor natives gratuitously, and scarcely a day passed that she was not called upon to visit some fever or cholera patients; but no amount of heat or other discomfort caused her to flinch from these errands of mercy. She was much encouraged by a success which she attributed to God's blessing on her prayerful efforts. She used to note down the cases treated, and in one month prescribed for 101 cholera and fever cases, all but two of whom recovered.

This work, which gave her great happiness, was continued for seven years, when she returned to England. In 1855, Mr. and Mrs. Marshman settled in London, where she at once resumed her life of benevolent activity. Her presence on the Zenana Committee was gladly welcomed, as she brought much personal experience to the work. But she felt there was yet more for her to do in the Master's vineyard. The trials and difficulties of young needlewomen and shop-girls, who found themselves stranded in London without a home, appealed very much to her sympathy; and in their interest she founded in Bayswater the second Young Women's Christian Association, the first having been organized by the late Lady Kinnaird in Pall Mall. From these have sprung numbers of similar institutions all over the country, and through them the lot of these young girls has been considerably ameliorated, not only directly, but through influence brought to bear upon their employers, who undertook to give more care and thought to the needs of their working hands.

In this direction Mrs. Marshman's efforts led to a further development. She found so many weak and weary girls needing rest and change at the end of the busy London season, that she determined to extend similar benefits to them. Thereupon she formed the project of establishing a Convalescent Home at Dover. She commenced with very inadequate funds, but nothing daunted her. She received kind encouragement from the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company; who, in answer to her request, placed the Old Ship Hotel, Dover, at her disposal, granting reduced fares to and from London for her invalids. Five years later, when there was a question of the Company selling the house, she brought to their notice the fact that she was paying them £500 a year in the railway fares they had so generously reduced for her, and she was permitted to remain in possession. For seven years she carried on this most useful and successful work; then she was reluctantly compelled to transfer her "Home" to Brighton. Here, also, the Lord blessed her, and likewise the work which she was enabled to carry on with increasing success for twenty-seven years. She received during that time 54,000 invalids, by whom her name is loved and revered.

On first transferring her work to Brighton, Mrs. Marshman rented Crescent House, which has since been a haven of rest and a scene of restored health to many thousands of invalids. But after a short time the proprietors determined to sell the property. Mrs. Marshman prayed earnestly that God would not allow her poor invalids to be turned out. The house was put up to auction, but not a single bid was received. Thereupon Mrs. Marshman asked God's help to enable her to raise money for the purchase of it. Her favourite expression when in any difficulty was, "I will take it to the Throne of Grace," and at such times she often quoted the words, "My God shall supply all your need." Her experience on this, as on many other occasions, was to receive a rich "recompense of reward." Within one year, without an appeal to the public or the Press, she raised amongst her sympathizing friends the sum of £4,500, and Crescent House, with its garden and beautiful trees, thus became in perpetuity a Home of rest and comfort to many weary toilers.

At first she controlled the Home from London, seeing each invalid, and personall investigating every case she sent down. She paid a visit to Brighton every Thursday, and addressed all the inmates, remaining to hold the Sunday afternoon Bible class. This she carried on for many years, till the weekly journeys began to tell upon her health. Whenever remonstrated with for overworking herself, she would say with a bright smile, "It is better to wear out than to rust out." But after a time she decided to live in Brighton, and in 1892 she left London for good, taking a house near the Convalescent Home, which she delighted so much to visit. Here she continued her Thursday and Sunday Bible classes, as she loved to feel in touch with her large family at Crescent House. In summer time they would all gather round her under the trees, while she spoke to them of the Saviour's love, her whole face lighting up when discoursing on this her favourite theme.

Her life was one of continual happiness and joy in the Lord. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," she would often say. Many a time was she urged not to try her voice in the open air; and after she had reached the great age of fourscore years, her daughters and her doctor, being most anxious about her health, tried to persuade her to give up the weekly addresses. But all realized that, though the continued effort might be fatal to her, she could not live without her loved work; and Sunday after Sunday her beautiful face and sweet voice gladdened many a sad heart. She was full of energy to the last, and only the day before she died (February 12, 1899) sent a message that she feared she could not take the class next day. How little did those watching round her think that, at the very hour of her Bible class, her gentle spirit would pass away!

Mrs. Marshman had the pen of a ready writer, and, at the request of one of her daughters, she wrote two small volumes of Bible stories in verse for her grandchildren. These were published in two parts, called "Bible Narratives" and "Gospel Narratives." She also wrote several other short poems; and two years ago, at the urgent request of many who had profited by her teaching, she published "Outlines for Bible Classes," a remarkable effort for an octogenarian.

The Gospel in Spain.

EVANGELIZATION in Spain is carried on under circumstances of increasing difficulty. It is gratifying to learn that efforts in this direction are being attended with singular success. Mr. Armstrong, of the Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain, writes:—"In our own humble work, in and around Barcelona, we are carrying on, weekly three simple prayer meetings of a few Christians in their houses. The results have surprised us, so quickly have come the answers to prayer.

"One of these meetings is held in a large building, where live in rooms, it is said, nearly 150 souls. The only known Christians are a woman whom we have known for years, and a young deformed girl. From the provinces of Valencia some favourable accounts are received. Mr. Nisbet can speak well for the work in the capital and several villages of Castile, and in Corunna and Marin."

The testimony of Mrs. Armstrong is similarly gratifying. "It is cheering to see how these very poor people listen to the simple Gospel, related or sung, and how the presence of our Almighty Saviour impresses them, one after another crying for mercy." Mr. Simpson, of Aguilas, who has sustained a terrible trial in the loss of his wife, journeys through the provinces in company with the Spanish Bible Colporteurs, not only preaching the Gospel, but confirming and strengthening the faith of Christians living alone in country districts. The secretary is, Mr. S. Southall, 51, Cliff Road, Leeds.

Palestine in London.

LIFE AND WORK OF REV. JAMES NEIL, M.A.

As a writer and platform teacher, Rev. James Neil has long been before the Christian public. His books number well nigh a score, and the topics upon which he has lectured are as numerous. Therefore, he stands in little or no need of introduction. He is generally admitted to be a premier authority on Holy Land Life as it throws light on the Bible. In view of his great undertaking in connection with the "Palestine in London" demonstration, we embrace the present opportunity of outlining the story of the man and his work.

Mr. Neil was born in 1843, at 13, Brunswick Terrace, Brighton. His father came of a Scottish family long settled in Galloway; his mother, Hannah Phillips, belonged to a well-known Jewish family. Passing some years of youth at St. John's Wood, London, Mr. Neil was privileged to come under the influence of that eloquent preacher, Rev. George Fiske. Being weak in health, he was sent to school in Yorkshire. In order to enter the legal profession, he was in due course articled to a firm of London solicitors, and after passing the prescribed examination, in 1866, was enrolled a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery.

From the Law, Mr. Neil passed to the Gospel; and for thirty-five years, righteousness and truth have been the warp and woof of his life and ministry. He has never regretted his legal training. On the contrary, he has advocated so-called "secular" professions as offering important preliminary experience for clergymen and ministers. It was during his legal studies that Mr. Neil was savingly converted to God. He was brought out of a life of ungodliness into the light and peace of the Gospel. This was at the age of twenty; and he at once became a Sunday-school teacher under that godly minister, Mr. Widdrington, at St. Mark's, Hamilton Terrace, N.W.

Deeply impressed with a desire to enter the ministry, Mr. Neil went to Oxford, in 1866, for a course of reading. This brought him into contact with Rev. A. M. W. Christopher (now Canon) and other earnest men. Having been ordained by the Bishop of Worcester, he began parochial work in Birmingham under Canon Wilkinson. He was at once brought face to face with the problem of reaching the masses; and he solved it by going after them.

For a year and a half he laboured in that way; then, giving up his curacy, he went into residence at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, as a fellow-commoner. Still he combined active work with preparatory study. During the early part of his University life he toiled in the parish of Barnwell; subsequently he had charge of St. Luke's, Chesterton. He was careful to secure simplicity in the form of service; and the church was soon crowded with people who had previously been alienated by sacerdotal innovations. Cottage meetings and open-air gatherings were carried on by lay helpers, and the devoted clergyman became the head centre of a round of agencies for good. Notwithstanding the many interests that engaged his attention, Mr. Neil took an excellent degree, being bracketed first in the first class in the Theological Special in 1870.

Soon after this came the turning point in Mr. Neil's life. He had married Miss Shenton, of Rotherham, who heartily threw herself into parochial work; and, among other responsibilities, had become deputation preacher for the C.M.S., and University, Town, and County secretary for the London Jews' Society. To this latter well-known organization he now offered his services as a missionary to the Jews, and was appointed incumbent of Christ Church, Jerusalem. He spent several years in the Holy Land, and during that time acted as private and examining chaplain to Bishop Gobat. He enjoyed unique opportunities of studying the people and their life, also their peculiar manners and customs. His powers of observation and keen interest in everything Palestinian led him along paths of investigation that were singularly fruitful of information.

Returning to England in 1874, Mr. Neil resolved upon placing before the public the results of his researches; and after a spring trip to Egypt and a tour of Palestine, in 1875, he devoted himself to extensive literary labours. In the meantime, he held for a time the incumbency of Berwick, near Shrewsbury, and gave ministerial help in many English parishes. In 1887 he came to London for the education of his sons.

His first book, "Palestine Re-peopled," appeared in 1875, and it has gone through over twenty editions. Three years later came "Palestine Explored" (now in its eighth edition), the pages of which throw light on many difficult passages of the Old Testament. Smaller works followed in swift succession, all of them attractive from the antiquarian point of view. Then, in 1893, came "Pictured Palestine," a valuable contribution to the same important class of literature. These works are all expository in substance, and designed to confirm and illustrate Holy Scripture. Some of them have been circulated to the number of 120,000.

That which Mr. Neil aimed to do by his books he has in more recent years endeavoured to achieve in other popular ways. The power of pictures—the influence of appeals to eye-gate—needs no apology. So, eight years ago, Mr. Neil designed a Holy Land and Oriental Exhibition, which was open for some months, first at Brighton and afterwards at Brixton. He has since gone further, and, as already intimated, opened "Palestine in London," in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, Belgravia. Week by week he is lecturing every Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday afternoon, and on the evenings of the first and last-named days; and is showing (under a high light) his exquisite life-sized oil paintings, by Mr. James Clark and other artists. These paintings cover, for the first time, with minute and perfect realism, all the main features of Eastern life as they throw light on the Bible. Different lectures and pictures are delivered each week, and to some extent there is variety each day. Admission is free, and there are a few reserved seats.

As a lecturer, Mr. Neil enjoys a well-deserved popularity. There is the fibre of the Puritan in his attitude toward Divine things; there is a spice of humour (and assuredly the subject gives many an opportunity) in his description of things Oriental. His magazine articles, and papers read before learned societies, show the breadth of his knowledge; and church dignitaries combine with ministers of all denominations in testifying to the practical utility of his illustrated lectures. The general subject last week was "Nazareth; or, Village Life," which was delineated with much power, and shown to illuminate many portions of Scripture, including the Gospel narrative. This week the subject is "Jerusalem; or, Town Life." Next week the scene will change once more, and the lecturer will dwell on "the Wilderness of Judæa; or, Desert Life."

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who presided at the opening meeting, spoke with enthusiasm of the lecture he had heard, and rightly acknowledged the herculean undertaking of Mr. Neil. Rev. H. B. Macartney, who presided in the evening of the same day, was equally warm in his encomium, and said he should attend as often as he could during the course. The truthfulness of the pictures, and the impressiveness of the lectures, was attested by both these speakers, who did not hesitate to acknowledge that they had been learning while they listened. Doubtless their hearty approval will secure the attendance of many who otherwise would not be attracted to the meetings. Lord Radstock, also, at another lecture, said that all present owed a deep debt to Mr. Neil for his important life-work. Personally, he had learned many things, and hoped to attend other lectures.

With the method of the lawyer, the purpose of the theologian, and the vigour of the traveller and expert, Mr. Neil developes facts that have a wide human interest, and applies principles that play an important part in the building of Christian character. We join most cordially in the commendations expressed by Preb. Webb-Peploe and Lord Radstock, and sincerely hope that many ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and others, will avail themselves of this opportunity of gaining instruction on topics of surpassing importance to all Bible students.

The Protestant Alliance is pursuing a vigorous campaign, with the object of enlightening the public concerning the grave issues which are bound up with the maintenance of the Protestant religion. Lectures have recently been given at Surbiton, Norwood, Brentford, Gunnersbury, and other suburbs and parts of London; also at a number of provincial centres. Protestant educational classes and meetings for debate have been sustained in several districts throughout the winter.

Other Lands.

A Peep at Cuba.

AFTER 400 years of Spanish bondage, fair Cuba is said to have been rediscovered to freedom and its benefits.

As the Olivette enters the picturesque harbour of Havana early in the morning of March 3, we are shown the wrecked Maine, a pathetic memento of the sudden and cruel death of 266 brave men on February 15, 1898.

Havana was founded about half a century previous to any settlement in the States, and presents a curious picture with its low, vividly painted houses, its (for the most part) narrow streets, and almost imaginary pavements. As we roam about the city we emerge into a fine square; and, led by the gestures and signs of a fine-looking, half-clad brown boy, we enter the place where Columbus is said to have attended the first Mass in the Western Hemisphere.

The number of natives existing in Cuba in 1511 is variously estimated at from 200,000 to 1,000,000. Twenty years later only 5,000 of them remained. Bad treatment and heavy labours drove many to suicide. By this means the indigenous population was so diminished in 1523 that negroes began to be imported. Slavery thus established lasted until 1886.

The subsequent history of Cuba, up to the time when thousands of reconcentrados were literally starved to death, is the continuation of one tale of cruelty and oppression—corrupted governors on the one side, fanatic clergy on the other.

On our way here, we were told repeatedly to be on our guard against being taken in, there being no fixed prices anywhere. The stranger is sized up, according to the value which he represents in the estimation of the Cuban; and so made to pay for his purchases. So far as our own experience goes, we did not find this feature in an abnormal degree; but, if we had, we should not wonder. Just as the child unconsciously reflects the mother, so the tendency of a nation is to follow the example of those in high places. It is stated that, during centuries, Governor after Governor was sent to this country with the object of redressing the wrongs of his predecessor, and that each returned to Spain a rich man, sometimes a millionaire.

The clergy have been tools in the hands of the Government, and consequently have not conserved much authority over the people. Havana has more theatres than churches. Before going to a Protestant place of worship we saw High Mass at the Cathedral, and found but a small congregation present, most of the men being lookers-on, like ourselves. Among those attending the conventional Mass in the morning, and masked balls in the evening, there are some devoted souls, reaching in the dark after God, if haply they may find Him. Our hearts bleed at the sight of men and women, as we meet them at the different altars offering up their prayers before lighted candles.

Here is a well-dressed woman upon her knees, counting the beads of her rosary, her eyes fixed upon the image of the Virgin, as if in a trance; there another one, ragged, destitute, with traces of small-pox upon her swarthy face, makes a pilgrimage round the altars, and finally reaches the door, begging for an alms as we are leaving.

Wherever we look it is Mary—Mary with the Babe in her arms, Mary crushing the serpent's head, Mary the Queen of Heaven, Mary the Merciful, Mary in velvet, Mary in silk; but for the most part Mary in the gorgeous apparel of the sixteenth century with ear-rings and necklaces. There are, in every form of heathenism, some remains of primeval truth; but Popery has deliberately and increasingly made the Virgin Mother superior to the Son of God.

If, as it has been said, the influences of our childhood never entirely lose their hold upon us, how is it then, that the writer, who was brought up under Romanism and taught to confess, and to worship the Virgin, can lift up her heart with jubilant gratitude to Him who in his infinite mercy has delivered her from the devil's snare and led her into marvellous light?

Many a good Protestant, especially if he never lived in a predominantly Catholic country, has been heard to say: "There is something good in every religion." Of course there is. But the Romish Church, where she dares, does not extend the same tolerant view to any form of Protestantism. In her girlhood, the writer was told that entering a Protestant Church or touching a Protestant's garments was pollution to her soul, and ought to be confessed and repented of. To smile with approbation at the Church of Rome because there is some good in it, is like failing to urge the opening of doors and windows because there is still some oxygen in the poisoned air of a room.

One engaged in Christian work said to us, "I used to have some regard for the priest, but not since I came to live here." Yes, you must live in a Catholic country in order to know the degrading influence of Romanism. One striking feature of it is the desecration of the Lord's Day. To unaccustomed eyes it seems like Sodom and Gomorrah; yet Havana is hardly worse than Vienna or Paris, only that, owing to the climate, the vice is more public here than in the colder countries.

Whatever sport, whatever amusement, there may be, it is considered fit to be done on a Sunday. Ball-rooms and theatres are crowded, and the promenade and thoroughfares are thronged with people of all ages and colours, from the matron to the tiny child, from the white beauty to the negro belle, all eager to be pleased, and in their chase after pleasure forgetful of God and his commandments.

We visited the Penitentiary. Of 225 prisoners some have been awaiting their trial for the last six months. We saw a poor Spanish policeman, who, having shot a man by mistake, had been condemned to seventeen years imprisonment. Here we were shown the garrotte, an essentially Spanish instrument by which thousands of Spanish victims have been executed. There is a seat fixed to a post, in the front of which is an iron cravat and a screwing mechanism at the back of it. When the condemned man is seated, the cravat is closed and pinned around his neck. A quick turn of the screw causes the cravat to press against and break the spine, and death follows. It is stated, we were informed, that during the first half of the Cuban Civil War (from 1868-1873) 4,672 prisoners were killed either by shooting or by garrotting.

In passing the chapel, we asked whether any services were held there. "No," replied our guide, "The priest wants 45dols a month, and that nobody else should be allowed to preach. So we do without him." In showing us the spot where the prisoners used to confess, he added with contempt: "He never shakes hands with one of them." Seizing the opportunity, our friends, who accompanied us, Revs. L. C. McPherson and—Menzies, offered to hold Sunday services gratuitously, and were gladly accepted.

There is much scope for Christian work to be done in this island, and we hope to be able to say something about it in the next letter.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

THE communications we are receiving from workers in various parts of the affected districts afford striking testimony as to the terrible character of the visitation.

Writing from Basim Berar, Mrs. L. W. Moore says:—"One of the chief needs in the relief camps is clothing for the destitute women and children, and for the aged. Water is growing more and more scarce. What we are to do the next three months I cannot imagine. By the kindness of readers of The Christian we have been enabled to clothe at least some of the naked, and to give greatly needed help to some of the feeble and aged native Christians. Famine babies have also been received, and we have bought grain to feed the children in our orphanage."

Rev. P. B. Keshkar, of Sholapur, writes under date March 9:—"Most of the people are pictures of famine. Yesterday afternoon a woman asked me whether I could buy one of her five beautiful sons. She does not expect to live, and desires to place her children in places of safety. I undertook to take them all if her husband agreed to the step. The missionary ladies here are taking babies and children daily as they are brought to them—our boys' school is full—and yet many parents and the friends of the children, are anxious for their children to be in the Mission Boarding School. We have opened a poor-house for those who are unable to work. One of the men is a leper, and we have a lame and a blind woman, while others are very weak and old. We have many opportunities for doing good."

Rev. D. O. Fox, of Poona, who is in charge of Mrs Bruere's work in that important centre, says: The distress is terrible all about us, and it is steadily increasing. The Government authorities are doing all they can, but they cannot reach all the needy. We have relief work in the city especially for the poor women and children. At the same time the Gospel is preached to them. They listen attentively. Many of them are families who belong to our schools. They have nothing to live on. We thank your readers most heartily for the help received."

From Muttra, N.W. Provinces, Rev. J. E. Scott (Methodist Episcopal Church) writes: "The famine in Rajputana, India, is so severe and so long-continued that thousands are starving, and among these are hundreds of our native Christians who were poor before the famine came, and who now have absolutely nothing. We have arranged to take children into our schools, and to feed the poorest of their parents."

Rev. E. J. Jones writes from Nasih: "I am anxious to open a grain shop at Yeola, near Ahmednugar, where the famine is very bad, but especially to rescue the children. Girls and boys are being sold, and many are left orphans. Two were being sold to bad women at Yeola a few days ago, when a passing Brahman advised the parent to bring them to the Christians, who would bring them up well. Shall we not prove that this confidence is not reposed in vain?"

A German Centenary.—The Quarterly Report of the German Baptist Mission gives an account of the centenary celebrations, held in January last in Hamburg, in connection with the 100th anniversary of the birth of the late Pastor Oncken. Not only had the four other churches in Hamburg-Altona co-operated in a hearty manner in all the various arrangements, but there were also present many friends from a distance, and the union of the German Baptist Churches had sent three of their leading men as representatives. A memorial tablet was placed on the grave of Pastor Oncken, bearing the following inscription (translated):—"In memory of their never-to-be-forgotten First Pastor, Johann Gerhard Oncken, the Founder of Churches of immersed Believers in Germany, this Memorial Tablet was erected on his 100th Birthday, January 26, 1900, by the grateful First Baptist Church in Hamburg.—'Remember your teachers who have spoken unto you the Word of God, considering their end, whose faith follow.' —(Heb. viii. 7.) (Luther's version)." In the course of addresses on the history of Evangelical Nonconformity in Germany, interesting contrasts were suggested.

"Regions Beyond" Missionary Union.

THE two-fold work of the "Regions Beyond" Missionary Union has never failed to commend itself to the sympathy and support of Christians of all evangelical denominations. The training of young men and women as missionaries for foreign lands, and the maintenance of workers in new and otherwise unoccupied fields in the "regions beyond" have combined to realize results full of encouragement and promise.

By these agencies a thousand young men and women have been trained for service; while over a hundred are resident in the various colleges at the present time. It was only fitting that the meetings of the Union in Exeter Hall, held on Tuesday last week, should be marked by the unabated interest of those who realize how vast is the work, and how numerous are the difficulties and obstructions which intercept, thwart, and hamper the advance of missionary toilers.

In the afternoon the Lower Hall was crowded to overflowing, and the meeting was pervaded by a spirit of earnest supplication and praise. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, introduced to notice the countries to be considered—Central and South America and India. Christians, he said, are sick at heart when they remember how much is being spent in the destruction of men's bodies, while so little is being expended for the salvation of their souls. South America, he thought, had been neglected chiefly because England has but little territory in that country.

Dr. Harry Guinness gave a résumé of last year's efforts, and outlined the proposed operations for the present year. He recalled his personal experiences in Peru, and spoke of the arduous tasks the missionaries have to face. By they are gaining the confidence of the heathens. Mr. Peters has a studio, and while the natives refuse to hear the missionary, all are anxious to be photographed, and those who have their portraits taken also have the Gospel preached to them. Of the Argentine Republic Dr. Guinness had a gratifying report to give, as well as Costa Rica and Guatemala. The urgent needs of India, with her millions without the Word of God, were emphasized, particularly the dangerous district of Behar.

Rev. James Fanstone had much to say of the Republic of Brazil, where he has laboured for twenty years. He strongly urged young men to go out to teach the English language, by which means they could earn their living, and help the missionary cause. There is much persecution and opposition, but the work goes on steadily and surely. There are hundreds of towns in Brazil without one single voice being raised in defence of the Gospel. Mr. Fanstone's appeal moved many hearts.

Rev. E. Palgrave Davy has been for some time at Behar, where, he stated, there are still 12,000,000 untouched. In India there were only 2,000 missionaries and 8,000 native workers, while in the British Isles there were 38,000 ministers. Mr. Davy spoke hopefully of the results of the translation of the Scriptures into native languages, which was proving the best means of disseminating Gospel truth.

A few words of parting testimony were spoken by Mdlle. Elise Dufey, who has spent three years at Doric Lodge, and is now shortly leaving for Costa Rica; and Miss Clarke, who returns to the Congo, and whose labours at Ikau and the surrounding villages have been attended with so much fruit.

The meeting in the evening, over which Mr. T. A. Denny presided, in the large hall, was indeed a time of spiritual refreshing. The large assembly, drawn together in warm sympathy with the noble purposes of the Union, and thrilled by the reports presented at the afternoon gathering, was enthusiastic in its reception of those who spoke on Central Africa.

A few remarks were made by the Chairman, after which Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt, vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Tunbridge Wells, commented upon Phil. iii. 2 and other passages. Earnestly the speaker dwelt upon the power of Christ as alone being able to subdue the heart. Did they realize what this subduing meant? If the love of Christ reigned in their hearts, they would come out and take their stand for him. No single copper was given in vain—no prayer offered which was not a step in the march of the God of armies, going forth to the accomplishment of his purpose. "Christ all strengthening" is COMFORT FOR THE MISSIONARY.

They had an enemy to fight, and there was only One in whose strength they could overcome. "Christ all satisfying" brought consolation. When we have Christ for our portion we are satisfied, for He is "all in all." Christ was all sufficient. There was no need He could not supply. Did they realise all Christ had done for them? "When they nailed his hands to the cross they brought your hands to labour for Him."

Rev. Henry Richards told how the natives on the Congo, on the profession of their faith, have often to leave home and suffer persecution. He cited some touching instances of how boldly these men and women defended their religion when once they had been led to accept it.

The description of Mr. J. R. Ellery's pioneer journeyings on the Maringa revealed many trying and dangerous experiences. On one occasion, having been warned of the threatenings of the natives, they continued their journey and found 500 people waiting for them and their message.

Mr. G. H. Harber gave an encouraging account of the new station which is being opened on the Juapa.

Dr. Harry Guinness, having announced that the £4,000 required for the new ship on the Congo had been subscribed, and many magnificent promises had been made that evening, proceeded to give his report, representing ten years progress on the Congo. This was illustrated by means of limelight views; and the contrasts which the slides presented bore remarkable testimony to the changes which followed the labours of the evangelists in that dark and neglected region.

Soldiers at the Front.

THE CAMP HOMES.

IN the advanced camp which we are just leaving, there have been many tokens of the Holy Spirit's presence and power. Night after night men have sought salvation; others have confessed they gave their hearts to Christ "in the meeting." The marquee, which is about the size of the former overflow tent at Keswick, has been crowded every night. One Sunday, after the address, the Christians were asked to stand, then those who desired salvation. After two or three had risen, a voice was heard from the further end of the tent saying, "I will stand for Christ;" another stood and repeated the words. Then three stood up in the front rank; and one who did not rise, our own orderly, yielded to Christ. Speaking of this afterwards, he said, "I felt I dared not leave the tent without accepting that invitation."

Just now, with troops moving in and out and through the camps, the resources of the Soldiers' Homes are being taxed to the utmost in providing free meals. A few days ago 350 men of the Royal Scots, after a long, heavy day at Dordrecht, marched into camp at sunset; darkness followed almost immediately. They had had no food since 6 a.m., and on the previous day hard fighting and hard work, with little to eat. Whilst they pitched their tents, Mr. Howe hurried to the village to persuade the bakers to sell all their bread. Passing through the dark camp, he heard men inquiring of their comrades, "Which is the way to the Soldiers' Home?" "Is it true there is free grub there to-night?"

Our hearts were moved as we saw the throng of hungry, exhausted men come in with pinched and haggard faces, and heard their expressions of gratitude. To-night saw a similar scene, only we had nearly 1,000 men. The greater number enjoyed their coffee outside the marquee, seated on the veldt, and lingered on until the moon shone upon them, and God's messages of love and mercy sounded out and fell upon their ears.

SOUTH AFRICA GENERAL MISSION.

Through the kindness of Lord Methuen, Mr. Percy Huskisson and Mr. Darroll have been attached to the Highland Brigade Bearer Company. As the little Home at Modder River had to be turned into a hospital, Lord Roberts kindly supplied tents in its place. Our two workers have been again under fire, at Paardeberg, and over and over again it has been very evident that "the shadow of the Almighty," as Lord Methuen put it, had been over them.

On that terrible Sunday, February 18, Mr. Percy Huskisson and Mr. Darroll went backwards and forwards under fire helping the wounded. While helping one wounded man, Mr. Huskisson heard his name called, and on looking round he saw one of the men who had been converted at our Soldiers' Home at Wynberg some years ago. Going up to the lad, he said, "Are you wounded?" "Yes," was the reply; "but praise God it is not in my head." The bullet had gone right through the back of his neck, and though he was bleeding profusely, he was humming a chorus to himself. Later on the major came up, and said of the lad: "He is the most cheerful case that has been in the dressing-room to-day; he was brought in singing a hymn." An unconverted man was heard to say later on: "A chap coming in like that to the dressing-room does more good than anything, as he keeps the fellows' spirits up."

Details of the work can be obtained in the booklet, "The Surrounding of Cronje."

FROM THE WINCHESTER HOME.

Friends of our mission who assisted us in our tents at the autumn manœuvres last year will be very glad to know we are continually receiving letters from soldiers at the front who gave their hearts to the Saviour during the special efforts on Salisbury Plain. Many of the men were stirred to work for the Master, and have since done noble missionary work amongst their comrades, and also among the natives. Very many have fallen on the battlefield, but not before cheering our hearts with the message that, should they fall, they would be safe on the other side.

The following is an extract from a letter received from a young soldier in General Gatacre's division. He was impressed in our tent at Bulford, but did not decide. When embarking for the front we saw him on board, and again had an earnest word with him:—

"Thank you for your letter, which did me much good; and, praise the Lord, I can now say I am his. I gave myself to Him on the boat, and two more with me. I find the Lord a never failing Friend. Will you be so kind as to send me a small pocket Bible, as I have none, and am anxious to get one, so as to read his Word daily. I will forward the price. If it be his will that I should come back again, I will come and see you. The Lord knows whether I shall or not. My all is in his hand."

A. K——.

In the death-list of March 19 we read:—"Private A. K——, of enteric fever, at Kimberley, March 14." Also one of the comrades, of the same disease, at Wynberg, March 13.

We praise God for letting us receive the news of the conversion of these two men. We are preparing to reach more soldiers with the Gospel this year.

Miss Orlebar's Work in India is young, and as yet not widely known in England. By its agency the Scriptures are sold in Hyderabad City, Deccan; there are homes of rest for missionaries in South India; also a school for the children of missionaries in Coonoor and soldiers' homes in Calcutta and Darjeeling. Suitable workers for the soldiers' part of the work are especially needed. Particulars may be had from Miss Raby Clark, c/o 41a, Pyrland Road, Mildmay Park, N.

Notes from Victoria.

LOYALTY to the Empire, which has been so signally manifest in these Colonies, is proving a costly thing. Already several Victorians have fallen in the war with the Boers. The intelligence has caused universal sorrow, and will probably do something towards restraining the Jingo spirit which has prevailed. In this direction there is still something to be done.

Sunday, February 11, was observed throughout the Colony as a day of humiliation and prayer. The success of Lord Roberts' tactics for relieving Kimberley was reported a few days afterwards. Was there any connection between the two?

One evil result of declaring as true the doubtful conclusions of Higher Criticism appeared in a sermon preached on Sunday last by Cardinal Moran, of Sydney. The occasion was the opening of a new Roman Catholic Church in West Melbourne; the theme was "The Heritage of Blessings in the Catholic Church." The second of these blessings was the spiritual authority which Christ vested in his Church; and, in speaking upon this, the Cardinal made numerous quotations from Protestant authorities. He quoted from one who described the Bible as "a rope of sand!" from another, who declared that "the Scriptures abound in myths and fables," and who compared the Bible to the City of Jerusalem, which "was buried beneath the rubbish of more than eighteen centuries. The work of historical criticism was to dig through this mass of rubbish!"

There seems to be no way of escaping the Cardinal's conclusion, which he gave in a quotation from one of the English magazines:—"The original Protestant position set forth by divines like Hooker, who denounced as one of the fundamental errors of Rome, the doctrine that 'Scripture was insufficient without tradition,' is by the Protestantism of to-day being itself denounced and repudiated, and a doctrine which, in some respects at all events, resembles that of Rome is more or less explicitly being set up by them in its place. This is the doctrine that as a guide to truth, or as a proof of it, Scripture is altogether insufficient unless it is guaranteed and interpreted by some authority external to itself." Are we not forced to such a conclusion? And since Criticism is so contradictory and changeful, to what authority other than that of Rome can doubting souls appeal?

God forbid that they should do this, for they would have to receive upon Rome's authority not only the inspiration of the Bible and much that is true besides, but all the heresies and idolatries which Rome has added to Scripture teaching. But the peril is great. Souls tossed with doubt hear two voices. One that of Protestant professors, who say "the Bible is a mixture of truth and fable;" the other, that of Rome, which says "the Church is the infallible expositor of Scripture, and the Divinely-appointed guide of souls."

A Newspaper Pulpit.

THE Sheldon newspaper experiment has moved the New York Journal to place a page of its evening issue under the editorial control of Dr. R. S. MacArthur, pastor of one of the most prominent Baptist churches in the city. The Journal's announcement is that the Doctor will conduct "a daily pulpit of the news," "as a representative clergyman thinks it ought to be," without attempting to judge of the Saviour's possible or probable attitude on the matter. The page on March 11 was certainly both interesting and instructive. Three articles—"Wide-open New York," "A Far-reaching Pulpit," and "Enterprising Journalism"—were signed by the Doctor. The first of a series of articles on the subject announced that "the Churches" are not losing ground in the country, but that their membership is increasing faster than the population. A number of figures are given in support of this encouraging announcement, which will surprise a good many people. Among other items of news are: the combination of twenty-six Brooklyn churches to fight one of our liquor laws, and the baptism on a recent Sunday of 184 men, women, and children at Mount Olivet Baptist Church (coloured). Among the candidates was a woman who had for several years been a cook in the family of the late Colonel Ingersoll.

"Goodbye" to England.

FEW more interesting or impressive sights can be imagined than that presented on Friday evening last in the little chapel of Dr. Barnardo's Home, Stepney. On the following morning 254 youngsters, selected from the great family of 5,373 boys and girls, in the various Homes of the "National Incorporated Waifs' Association," as the well-known Institutions are now called, were to sail for Canada in the s.s. Cambroman (Dominion Line), and here all the young voyageurs were assembled for their last religious service in the old land, and for the last words of fatherly wisdom and affectionate farewell from him who had, to many of them, been the only father and friend they had ever known.

Of course, there was hearty singing by the fresh young voices, and short, earnest prayers offered by one or two friends, and a brief and suggestive address by Dr. Barnardo. But what must have impressed the onlookers most was the unknown and uncountable potentialities of such a group of well-trained British boys going from under godly and prayerful influence, and evidently having before them ideals of life not often shared by lads of their condition.

Many of these dear fellows were well-known in their several homes as Christian lads of approved character. The breathless interest with which all, even the youngest, followed the address, and the rapidity and accuracy with which answers were given aloud to the questions now and then put by the speaker, showed how keen had been the attention and comprehension of the hearers, and how excellently all had been trained. Nor must we forget to chronicle the fact that the whole group of 254 lads, of their own will and choice, knelt to utter aloud the words of a pledge, common in the Homes, against the use of intoxicants, and followed by this brief prayer, uttered clause by clause: "O God, help me, by thy grace, to keep this solemn pledge, while life shall last, for Jesu's sake, Amen."

When the final moment came, and all reverently knelt in silence to invoke the Divine blessing, we felt that no more impressive "send-off" could have been designed; and then, as they quickly filed out, Dr. Barnardo and Mr. Finney went down the line, shaking hands with each boy, and often adding a brief word of personal and affectionate interest. The glistening eyes and fervent handgrasp, especially of the older youths, told its own tale of a friendship esteemed and reciprocated. We left the little house of prayer, breathing from our hearts the words of the patriarch of old: "The angel which redeemed me from all evil, BLESS THE LADS!" J. R.

On the following morning, the boys, 254 in number, left Euston for Liverpool, in charge of Mr. Owen. By this they are well on the way to the new lands of the West.

A Lesson from Ladysmith.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

"As a Besieged City" (Isa. i. 8).

THE besieged cities of which we have been recently hearing illustrate the condition of every unsaved sinner.

"My heart," said a sailor, "was for years like Ladysmith—shut up; but the Lord brought deliverance."

Two forces are seeking to enter every besieged heart: Enemies—as the world, the flesh, and the devil; friends—Christ, the Holy Spirit, and all heavenly powers. They have different and opposite purposes: to destroy, and to deliver.

Man is by nature cut off from God and surrounded by sin; but the object of Satan is to obtain entire possession. In Ladysmith—

The railway was cut. The Scriptures are God's line of communication, by which heaven's bounties enter the soul. This the enemy will stop, if possible.

The water supply was stopped. The means of grace are channels for supplying the water of life. This supply the foe will intercept.

The telegraph wires were sundered; and in our case prayer is the telegraph, which Satan will sever if he can.

Where the heart is thus shut up there will still be an occasional pigeon post; messages from heaven that reach the soul, and appeals from the soul that reach heaven.

Want was in the besieged cities; and a heart isolated from God will soon be in a starving condition.

Disease and death were there; 8,000 men passing through the Ladysmith hospital during the four months of the siege. How the disease of sin develops when the spirit is cut off from God! There were also deaths from shot and shell in Ladysmith; the deaths amounted to thirty officers and 575 men. Oh the good desires, good resolutions, &c., that die in a spiritual siege!

No rest night or day had the beleaguered; and no rest have they who are beleaguered by Satan. During the 118 days, 12,000 shells fell in the city at the rate of three tons per day. What rest could be had under such circumstances?

Then there were actual attacks by the Boer forces. What special attacks Satan makes upon a weakened soul!

Beside this, there were fears that, putting on khaki, the enemy might draw near as friends—yea, as the relieving army itself. Satan can thus pretend to be "an angel of light."

Sorties were made, it is true; and they were partially successful; some troublesome guns were silenced; but the foe remained. Strong, determined, resolute action may conquer some prominent evils; but the siege of man's soul is not raised. Our relief can only come from a power outside ourselves.

It came to besieged Kimberley and Ladysmith, and it comes to us. Let us not despair and yield. A cyclist, who in the South African city circulated reports "calculated to cause despondency," was sentenced to twelve months' hard labour. Besieged one, guard against such! Every day the besieged armies were getting weaker: and so are we. To delay the relief may mean that we fall into the power of the enemy, from which there will be no deliverance.

One evening Lord Dundonald and his men rode into the British lines.

"Who goes there?" was the challenge.

"Ladysmith's relieving army," was the glad answer. Relief had come! Now the foe scattered, and for isolation and danger there was communication and security. Want gave place to plenty, and captivity was exchanged for liberty. Such is the relief Jesus brings, and no foe can stay his on-coming. Shall we postpone it?

And what did the relief cost? In bringing relief to Ladysmith 5,000 were killed and wounded. When Christ enters a soul, it is "not without blood"—his own precious blood.

"London gone mad with joy!" Such was the state of affairs when, next morning, the news reached us: "Ladysmith is relieved!" When a soul is delivered from the power of the enemy, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God.

For what are we relieved—merely that our lives may be spared? Nay, that we may be strengthened, and then fight against our foes, under Him who has been our Deliverer. Until delivered, we are useless.

Backslider, have you been separated from the main army? You are not forsaken and forgotten. Our God is able to deliver thee.

In one sense the Church is still "as a city besieged"—sin is on every hand; but our Deliverer is coming with his angel army.

"Hold the Fort, for I am coming,"
Jesus signals still;
Wave the answer back to heaven,
"By thy grace we will."

Mother.

YOUNG people, look in those eyes, listen to that dear voice, and notice the feeling of even a touch that is bestowed upon you by that gentle hand. Make much of it while yet you have the most precious of all good gifts—a loving mother.

Read the unfathomable love of those eyes, the kind anxiety of that tone and look, however slight your pain. In after life you may have friends, fond, dear friends; but never will you have again the inexpressible love and tenderness lavished upon you which none but a mother bestows.

Often do I sigh in my struggles with the hard, uncaring world for the deep, sweet security I felt when of an evening, resting in her bosom, I listened to some quiet tale, suitable to my age, read in her tender, untiring voice. Never can I forget her sweet glances cast upon me when I appeared asleep; never her kiss of peace at night.

Years have passed away since we laid her beside my father in the cold churchyard, yet still her voice whispers from the grave, and her eye watches over me as I visit spots long since hallowed by her memory.—Lord Macaulay.

"The Christian" Bible-Searcher.

NEW QUARTER.—RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after midday Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly competitors; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Quarterly Competition.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Professor W. W. White.

AT length Professor W. W. White, D.D., Ph.D., from Mr. Moody's Bible Institute, Chicago, is with us once more. We have not forgotten the service he rendered last year by his course of Bible lectures. Many are ready to welcome him, and avail themselves of his School for Bible Study.

Mr. J. H. Tritton writes to us: "Professor White will visit Glasgow and Edinburgh during April, and in May will resume his courses of Bible Study in London. Particulars will be announced in due course. Meanwhile, any communications addressed to Miss L. Meager, secretary, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W., will be acknowledged. The committee trust that prayer may be widely and continuously offered for blessing on this great undertaking."

The Glasgow Campaign.

THE CLOSING WEEK.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE closing week of the meetings was fittingly opened by the monthly conference of the Christian Workers' Union, when a great gathering crowded the large hall of the Waterloo Rooms, under the presidency of Mr. A. B. Munro. The speakers for the day were three prominent Campaign workers — Mr. J. W. Van de Venter, Mr. Alexander Mackeith, and Mr. Hugh Paton. Particularly by Mr. Mackeith the subject—"Christlikeness"—was urged as of the utmost importance in daily life; the keynote of the gathering being that the greatest force for good which Christians can exert is by living the Christ life before their relatives and intimates.

GOOD-BYE TO THE CHILDREN.

During this closing week four evangelists were at work among the children. Mr. Thomas M. Pratt continued in Pollok Street United Presbyterian Church, Rev. William Baird moved to Bethany Congregational Church (adjacent to the well-known Bethany Hall), and Mr. William Thomson, jun., changed to another church in Kirkintilloch.

On a cold, wet night we found Mr. John Stewart with an audience of boys and girls which filled the United Presbyterian Church of Polmadie (Rev. Mr. Taylor). In this district and the neighbouring one of Govanhill difficulty has been experienced in controlling the juvenile audiences, but firm dealing reduced everything to good order, and the results of the work have been very cheering. The pastor and his co-worker, Mr. Robert Rodger, zealously supported the evangelist.

The numbers who waited to the after-meetings were too large for anything of the nature of personal dealing; but there, and in the preliminary prayer-meetings, there was evidence of that simple acceptance of the Saviour and trust in Him which have moved the hearts of many workers to their very depths during the winter.

THE EASTERN DIVISION.

The changes in the East-End arrangements included the removal of Mr. Hugh Paton to Dalmarnock Parish Church, Mr. ROWLAND D. EDWARDS taking up the second week of meetings in Wardlaw Congregational Church. As the outcome of what had gone before, there were signs on the Sabbath evening that the Spirit of God had been working among all classes in the congregation. One worker of long experience, speaking for more than himself, expressed the conviction that the hearts of many had been awakened to a sense of the great need, and that they were ready now to receive the truth. The testimony of the pastor (Rev. W. N. Challice) was that he was conscious in his young people's Bible-class of a spirit of awakening and inquiry. During this second week the work has been growing, and there is good ground for believing that the fruit gathered in during the present effort will prove to be but the earnest of much that is yet to follow, through the new spirit infused into the workers.

In his new sphere Mr. Paton is finding the meetings small, but there again the Lord set his seal on the Word. A much larger number heard the Gospel proclaimed through the open-air meetings than within doors. As at a number of other centres, Mr. Robert Logan and a band of devoted fellow-workers from Bethany Hall gave vigorous and valued help in this department. Among the soloists of the mission were Mr. James Gillespie, Miss Kerr, and Mr. J. R. D. McAusland.

GAELIC ADDRESSES.

On visiting Tradeston Free Church last Monday, we found a considerable increase in the attendance over the previous week. It is to be noted, too, that at this centre there are two meetings each evening, Rev. JOHN MACKAY'S co-worker, Rev. Mr. CAMERON, addressing a meeting in Gaelic—the only use of that language in connection with the Campaign that has come under our notice—at an earlier hour. We found Mr. D. McColl (of the Glasgow Highland Mission) giving a stirring address in the open air. Referring to manifest tokens of a process of sifting going on among the people, Mr. Mackay said he generally found people who came out on Monday evening to be those who really wished "to do business with the Lord;" and, accommodating himself to the circumstances, he conducted the service on the lines of guiding inquirers. "I feel," he said, "that some of you have come here to say 'yes,' and to say it out;" while after experience proved that he had formed a right estimate of his audience. Few left at the close of the first meeting, and we have seldom seen workers find reaping so ready to their hand.

Reading Heb. x. 11-22, the Blood of the Redeemer was insisted on as the only ground of reconciliation. From 2 Tim. i. 12, it was show that the apostle expected all who knew him to understand how completely his mind was occupied with spiritual things, because (1) he does not define "that day," (2) "that" which he had "committed," or (3) the One to "whom" he had committed it.

On Tuesday Messrs. Grant and Maclellan gave some account of the Lord's doings during a work of grace in which they were engaged in Inverness last year, along with Mr. Alexander Fraser. Mr. J. R. D. McAusland and other solo-singers helped at the meetings.

MR. M'NEILL'S IMPRESSIONS.

During these closing weeks Mr. McNeill has been preaching in Newton Place United Presbyterian Church, Partick; and on Friday evening he brought his Campaign work to a close with a meeting crowding the building in every part. Referring to the work of the six months, he said he had been asked, "Do you think the Campaign has done any good?" His reply was, "Yes. It has done the highest good to thousands of men and women, and to tens of thousands of young people." Deprecating the idea that such work can be fully tested by figures, he yet thanked God that the workers have figures of which they can speak. "But above and beyond all," he said, "we cannot total and reckon up God's work through preaching. Not only have people been converted, but backsliders have been restored, Christians have had their lives brightened, and in many congregations the temperature has been raised. Who can estimate the outcome of all this?"

Speaking of the fact that those who have been at the heart of every evangelistic movement in the city for forty years have been engaged in this effort, Mr. McNeill declared their united opinion to be that Glasgow had never experienced such "a turning over" with the Gospel as during the present winter. There have been small meetings, he admitted, but never a night without results; and this work can only be done with each man and each woman "apart," one individual at a time. Through it all his heart had been gladdened by the fact that "Glasgow's old connection with the Gospel had been re-established and strengthened."

His mind seemed to dwell with deepest satisfaction on the juvenile meetings, and repeatedly he reverted to the subject. He believed God was safeguarding the situation ten or twenty years hence by what He has been doing among the boys and girls during these months. "He is, as it were, lying in ambush, and in some day of great need these will start up suddenly to turn the tide in favour of God and his Church."

Mr. McNeill hopes, after a period of rest, to resume work among the masses of Glasgow, making use of the City Hall and other great structures; and earnestly asks for the continued prayers of God's people, as well as a concentration of effort when these services are commenced.

Y.W.C.A. Spring Conference. — The Conference arranged for April 5-7, at the Morley Hall, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, includes some fixtures of special importance. The subjects are:—Thursday, April 5, 11.30, "Work in the Country," chair, Mrs. Bevan; 3.0, "How we help the Barmaid, Blind, &c.," chair, Lady Hope; 6.0, "Quiet Hour," Mrs. Penn-Lewis; 8.30, "Bible Study," Rev. G. Soltau. Friday, April 6, 11.0, "Work in Towns," chair, Mrs. C. E. Tritton; 3.0, "How we help Girls"; 8.30, closing meeting, Mrs. Penn-Lewis. Saturday, April 7, members' conference at 3.0 and 6.30.

Scottish Notes.

PROFESSOR SPENCE has just brought to a close his classes in Edinburgh and Glasgow in connection with the Protestant Institute. In each city the first part of the course was devoted to the consideration of the dogmas of "Papal Supremacy and Infallibility tested by Scripture and History," and in the remaining weeks the "Historical Argument of the Papal Claims" was examined.

The Glasgow Samaritan Hospital for Women reports 1,224 cases treated during twelve months—325 indoor and 899 outdoor.

The Dundee United Presbyterian Town Mission has now attained its jubilee, it being now fifty years since the first agent was appointed to work among a population of the most careless and Godless. Spiritual results have not been lacking; and, through the blessing of God on the efforts of the agent and willing helpers, the committee are assured that much will yet be accomplished.

Speaking last week at the annual meeting of the Glasgow Houses of Shelter for Females, Colonel Macaulay (governor of the prison) said that last year 37,602 persons had been arrested in the city for being drunk and incapable, or for those breaches of the peace which are closely allied; while in Liverpool the total was only 7,000. He referred to the case of a woman who spent fifty-four days in the Shelter last year and 234 in gaol (having been arrested thirty-four times). She also spent forty-five nights in police cells, so that she was only free during thirty-two days out of the 365 days.

Rev. A. A. Milne has resigned the pastorate of Cambuslang Baptist Church, in order to take up the appointment of travelling evangelist for the Scottish Baptist Total Abstinence Society.

The report of the Scottish Women's Protestant Union speaks of a successful year's work, chiefly by means of the distribution of literature and the delivery of lectures on Romanism and Ritualism; and alludes with great satisfaction to the supplying of Dr. Walsh's book and the Union's own booklets to the students of the four theological colleges in Edinburgh.

Lord Overtoun has bought a property in the High Street of Dumbarton, known locally as Walker's Close, and bearing a somewhat unenviable reputation. We understand that it is his intention to tear down the old buildings, and to erect in room of them mission premises for the use of the Free High Church congregation.

Under the auspices of the Scottish Sabbath School Union a special conference was held in Glasgow on Friday last, on "The Pastoral Work of the Sabbath-school Teacher, with special reference to the Evangelistic Campaign." The subject was introduced by Mr. James Maclay, M.A., LL.B.

Speaking on the demoralizing influence of the public-house on the young, Professor Murdoch Cameron called attention last week to the fact that the Helensburgh magistrates have refused to renew a licence because the holder was in the habit of giving sweets and other articles to children.

British Methodism "Farthest North."—Writing from Unst, Shetland, Rev. W. T. Haydon says:—"For over seventy years we have had a chapel at Burravoe, in the south of the island of Yell, where the Gospel has been proclaimed to the salvation of many, some of whom are in heaven, others are across the seas, while a few remain to tell of the days gone by. During the flight of years the old chapel has become quite unsuitable for our needs. It is dark and damp, while its situation is a mile from the nearest road, with a dangerous by-path along an unprotected sea-cliff as the only means of access. We are now about to build a new chapel on a more central site. The people are chiefly crofters and fishermen, and can give but little. They are, however, doing nobly, but the house of prayer cannot be provided without help from the South. We want in all £340 to build a chapel and schoolroom, and towards this sum I have in hand £140. It is most important that we begin to build as soon as our spring weather allows." Mr. Haydon's address is Haroldswick, Unst, Shetland Isles.

Obituary.

MRS. TRESTRAIL.

THE Baptist Magazine announces the death of Mrs. Trestrail, widow of Rev. Dr. Trestrail, in her eighty-seventh year. A daughter of Mr. John Dent, of Milton, she was an accomplished linguist, and a diligent student of history and science. Her biography of Dr. Trestrail, "The Short Story of a Long Life," is a charmingly-written volume, as is also the short memoir of Mrs. Sale, the pioneer of the Zenana movement in India, which appeared last year. Mrs. Trestrail was, like her husband, one of the founders of the girls' school at Stewart Town, Jamaica, and in every respect a true friend of missions.

REV. G. H. KADARI.

By the death of Rev. George Harding Kadari, the Wesleyan Methodist Hyderabad Mission has lost one of its most gifted and effective workers. For sixteen years he laboured with much effectiveness as a minister of the Gospel and a pioneer missionary. He was a most acceptable preacher and pastor to our town congregations, and gave new impetus to the work in the Siddipet circuit, but it was in Medak that he toiled most fruitfully. He was the pioneer in those parts. He bore all the brunt of the early days of struggle and trial, when without influence or favour we planted the standard of the Cross amidst scoffing enemies, and proclaimed the evangel to a heedless people. Times have changed, and our lamented brother lived to see the Gospel triumphing everywhere, the name of Jesus a praise in the land, the preaching-shed give place to a noble sanctuary, and the little one become a thousand. Hundreds attended the funeral, Christians, Hindus, and Mussulmans, for our brother was esteemed by all.

CHARLES W. POSNETT.

MRS. DAVID APPERLY.

This lady passed to the bright home above on March 22. She was the mother of the Apperlys of Stroud and Reigate, and the widow of Mr. David Apperly, who was one of the three brothers known years ago in Stroud for their bold and earnest witness to the truths of the New Testament. These have long since passed into the presence of the Lord, but their widows have remained till this winter, when, having attained to over four-score years, within a few weeks of each other, they, too, have heard the home-call.

Mrs. David Apperly, the last called away, was a woman of rare and beautiful character. It was truly a gift from God, ripened and sustained by Divine grace. It may truly be said of her that no harsh or unkind word ever escaped her lips. To be with her was to be in an atmosphere of love. Debarred from an active work for the Lord by deafness, caused by a railway accident, she served Him in the quiet seclusion of her home, witnessing to all around how He gives grace to bear a most severe affliction. She uttered no murmuring word, and though forced to sit in silence while others were engaged in happy discourse, she never exhibited any sign of impatience. It was the will of God, and that was enough for her.

So she was laid to rest in the graveyard of Rodborough Tabernacle with those she had loved best on earth by her sorrowing children and grandchildren, without leaving behind her one painful remembrance. Truly we may say, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them." A. E.

Mount Hermon Girls' Orphan Homes.—In a recent circular letter Mrs. M. A. Parry writes: "I am very desirous to get a cottage or small house by the sea for the summer months. There are always some children among the orphans constitutionally delicate, who really need a change from London in the summer. I think it probable that some kind friends, when planning a seaside holiday for their own little ones, may be led to remember this need of delicate orphans." Mrs. Parry's address is 55, Cambridge Avenue, Kilburn, N.W.

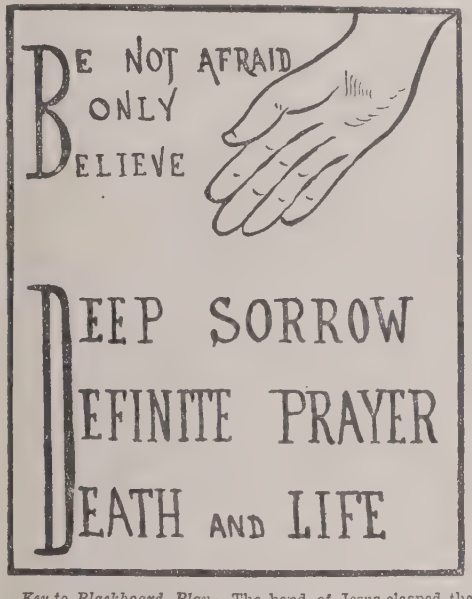
JAIRUS'S DAUGHTER RAISED (Mark v. 22-24, 35-43).

GOLDEN TEXT—"Be not afraid, only believe" (Mark v. 36).

INTRODUCTION.

IT is as well to read the story in Matthew ix. and Luke viii. Let us now turn to the various people mentioned: Jesus Christ, the Great Physician, full of sympathy and kindness. The ruler, his name Jairus, an elder of good position. Little girl, only child of Jairus, twelve years old, ill and dying. Peter, James, John, the three who on other occasions went alone with Jesus (Matt. xxvi. 37; Mark ix. 2). The mourners, those who were hired to cry and wail ("making a noise"—Matt.) because of death—paid to do it; not real sorrow, only sham mockery.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The hand of Jesus clasped the child's, and his touch brought life. "His touch has still its ancient power." Believe, be not afraid, and He will touch your dead soul and give you life.

The lesson divides itself into the three divisions:—1. Deep sorrow. 2. Definite prayer. 3. Death and life.

1. DEEP SORROW.

Jairus loved his little daughter with a true, tender love; he would do anything to save her from dying. What should he do? He would take his great sorrow to the Christ he had heard of and tell Him all about it; he felt sure Jesus would listen to him (23), and found it was just as he thought—Jesus at once went with him (24).

There is another kind of "deep sorrow" that Jesus is always ready to listen to and to relieve; but it must be as genuine and real as Jairus sorrowing for his sick child. It is sorrow for sin. When a soul discovers that sin brings death, he also discovers he needs some one to lift off that burden, and he knows that no one can help him but Jesus. (See what sorrow for sin means in Ps. li. 17; Is. lxvi. 2.)

2. DEFINITE PRAYER.

Jarius was very definite; he had a great need, so he did and said that which was definite: he fell at the feet of Jesus (Luke viii. 41) and worshipped Him (Matt. ix. 18) and prayed (23). "She is dying; come, Lord, lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live." That was all, so little and yet so much.

How Christ encourages such definite prayer (36), and how He answers too (Luke viii. 50), "She shall."

Looking at the other side of this subject, we see that deep sorrow for sin brings definite prayer. "God be merciful to me a sinner" was the definite prayer of a soul that felt its need. Let us be as definite. (Mark ix. 24; Acts xvi. 30; Heb. xii. 2).

3. DEATH AND LIFE.

"She is not dead, but sleepeth" (39). Beautiful symbol of dreaded death.

"Jesus took her by the hand" (41). The touch of the Great Life-Giver brings life; and remember, "His touch hath still its ancient power."

"And she arose!" (43). Alive? Yes, proof of it—"did eat."

Death and Life, the two subjects of greatest importance to every being born into this world. Consider also the deeper meaning. Multitudes are dead while they live—viz., they are alive in the body, but their souls are dead. They need the Great Life-Giver's touch to give them life. (Eph. ii. 1; John v. 40): "Ye will not." (Matt. xxiii. 37): "I would," "Ye would not."

"They laughed Him to scorn" (40). How many are doing the same to-day? With never-dying souls, they neglect, reject, ignore, and even laugh to scorn the Mighty Saviour, who gave his life that they might live. (Matt. xxvi. 67, xxvii. 31, 39; Zech. xiii. 6; Heb. vi. 6.)

The lessons we learn can be put into a few questions:—

1. Have you ever felt deep sorrow for sin?
2. Have you ever come to God in definite prayer for forgiveness?
3. Have you been touched with the life-giving touch of the Lamb of God?
4. Are you treating the Lord Christ with scorn and neglect?

The Y.M.C.A.

THE annual social meeting in connection with Omagh Association was held on the 27th inst. in the Royal Assembly Hall. The building was filled to overflowing. Mr. G. G. Porter, who presided, was able to report that the work had made considerable progress; and Mr. R. McCann gave an address full of sound spiritual advice.

The Bristol Y.M.C.A. conducts a model junior department, for which the services of a separate general secretary are retained. A large number of lads connected with this section, and the report of their various meetings, clubs, &c., presented at the recent anniversary, showed that the work of the past year has been fruitful.

There is every prospect that the Lewisham branch will shortly have to consider the question of acquiring additional premises for their work. During the year the membership has more than doubled, while the spiritual needs of the district have exercised the minds of the members. Four meetings are held every Sunday (in the winter months in the Lecture Room, and in the summer months in the open air). These services continue to be maintained with vigour, while the social agencies are also in a flourishing condition.

The members and friends of the Association at Brompton Road, S.W., had a refreshing time at the annual meeting on the 26th ult. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided, and hearty addresses were given. This branch is a small one, but it has been used to the blessing of many. Spiritual affairs are kept in the foreground. Good work is being done by its members in Bible class and mission work.

In connection with Hackney Y.M.C.A. there is an Open-Air Cycle Mission Band, which runs every Saturday afternoon to some place a little way out of London, where, after tea, a bright Gospel service is held. Any Christian young men would be welcomed. The secretary is Mr. G. W. Simmons, 275, Mare Street, Hackney, N.E.

The Y.W.C.A. at Fulham.

THE thirteenth annual meeting of the Fulham Branch was held in the Town Hall on the 22nd ult. The hall was filled. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, congratulated the members upon the purchase, during the past year, of the premises, 1, Barclay Road, which had been rented for some years by the Association for the purpose of carrying on the classes, and also as a home for young women. Helpful addresses were given by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe and Rev. H. J. Shirley (Congregational Church, Dawes Road). The meeting must have given great encouragement to those engaged in the work. The report showed that the work among both the senior and junior members had made good progress.

Personalia.

We regret to hear that the condition of Mr. GEORGE HOLLAND, of the George Yard Mission, shows no sign of improvement. The esteemed worker is in a very weak state.

REV. GEO. C. NEEDHAM has had very large union meetings in Grove City, Pa., and other places this winter. He makes a specialty of Bible teaching, and, finding the people everywhere hungry for the bread of the Word, deals it in large measure.

REV. ROBERT and Mrs. WALLACE, of Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario, sailed for Canada on Thursday with a party of boys from the Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester. They would value the prayers of readers for wisdom in placing out their young charges.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Josiah Nix at Louth.

THE mission recently conducted at Louth, Lincs., will be long remembered. A special feature was—an open-air service in the market for the country people, when Mr. Nix spoke to an immense crowd, practically stopping all business for half-an-hour. On the early closing day an "At Home" for shop assistants was given. The school-room was carpeted and made into a drawing-room. The mission proved of spiritual benefit to many.

Great Assembly Hall.

During the month of March, Mr. T. W. Canning, of the Evangelization Society, attracted large audiences at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, while the sweet singing of Master Percy Kahn was appreciated. Large gatherings of men and women listened to the truth proclaimed in speech and song. Mr. Canning gave a clear presentation of the fundamental truths of the Gospel. The matter contained in his addresses is nothing if not practical, and no one can listen to him without being convinced of his desire to win souls. The careless were warned and awakened, and believers edified. The mission proved most fruitful in blessing.

Mr. Henry Thorne at Bideford.

Under the auspices of the Council of the Free Churches of Bideford, a Gospel Mission has been held for ten days by Mr. Henry Thorne. The many earnest Christian workers in the town welcomed the mission with enthusiasm. The afternoon Bible readings were largely attended day by day, and the Gospel addresses were powerful. Many thank God for the hour their feet were led into the various chapels, where evening by evening the Saviour was held forth "mighty to save." The ministers were full of practical sympathy and help, and many of the leading business men of the town gave time to the work. The Free Churches are to be congratulated on so helpful a mission.

Mr. C. Inglis at the Edinburgh Castle.

For nearly thirty years, with but few exceptions, Mr. Charles Inglis has visited the Castle annually for a month at a time. Last Sunday brought another of these periodical visits to a close, one crowned with loving-kindness and abundant blessing to all classes throughout the month. It was manifestly evident that the Word preached reached the consciences of many who sought and found the Saviour in the inquiry rooms. Great has been the joy of the Lord's people at what they have seen of his power being displayed among the unsaved through his servant. Mr. Inglis leaves us with the earnest prayers of God's people that his present mission in connection with the Rotherhithe Free Church may prove a mighty blessing.

W. N.

Mr. Varley at Bradford.

The Inter-denominational Mission recently conducted at Bradford by Mr. Henry Varley, terminated on March 29. Bible readings have been given every afternoon in the Mechanics' Institute, and each evening and on the two Sundays services have been conducted in different places of worship throughout the city. Great blessing has been received at the hands of God during the mission. The ministers and churches have been brought into closer fellowship, and some hundreds of persons have confessed Christ in the course of the meetings. At the closing gathering in the Mechanics' Institute, a resolution was passed expressing indebtedness to Mr. Varley for the many and valuable Bible lessons he had given, and high appreciation of his services. It is gratifying to know that Mr. Varley is as vigorous and forceful as ever. Bradford wishes him God-speed in his world-wide labours of love.

Arthur J. Harding.

Dr. Munhall at Des Moines.

Deep interest has been aroused at Des Moines, U.S.A., by revival services conducted by Dr. Munhall. At an afternoon meeting for young men fully 2,500 were present in the auditorium. The Des Moines Daily News says "that in the course of the sermon the evangelist dwelt upon the moral sins and temptations that beset the pathway of young men, and by his illustrations and admonitions, coupled with the plain teachings of the Bible, he wrought upon the hearts of his audience. Over 400 rose for prayer, and many of these surrendered to Christ. It was in the eyes of Dr. Munhall the meeting of the day, though not in point of attendance. The evening service was the occasion of the greatest assemblage of people ever seen in one building in the city of Des Moines, when every seat was filled, every inch of standing room was utilized, and although fully 1,000 people took seats and standing room on the stage, the doors had to be closed against many people who were unable to obtain admittance. Many persons sought the Saviour.

Rev. W. H. Aitken in the Isle of Man.

A very interesting mission has just been conducted by Rev. W. Hay Aitken at Malew and Castletown, in the Isle of Man. The mission has excited no small stir in the neighbourhood, and the congregations have continued to increase day by day, and the interest to deepen; and, best of all, souls are seeking after Christ, and, it is believed, are finding too. The last Sunday of the mission will long be remembered as a time of wonderful blessing. The old church was nearly filled in the afternoon with a congregation of men only, who listened with rapt attention to the vigorous appeal of the preacher as he called on them to take the side of God and the right against the sins that threaten ruin to the country. In the evening the church was crammed as, perhaps, never before in its history, and large numbers had to go away unable to obtain admission. Many who were present must have felt that the mission preacher was right, in affirming, in the words of his text, that Jesus of Nazareth was passing by. A goodly number met him in the gallery as anxious inquirers, and "there was much joy in that church that night." Mr. Aitken purposes conducting Holy Week Services, preaching from Palm Sunday to Easter Day at Christ Church, Claughton, Birkenhead, where he held a mission some years ago. On April 29 he has arranged to begin a mission at Carlton, near Worksop.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Stockton.

We have just concluded a ten-days' united mission with Mr. W. R. Lane, for which we thank God. Some of the more striking features of the mission were—the prominence given to the Word of God, insistence upon old-fashioned, foundation truths, and the absence of any attempt to force men and women into the inquiry-room. In spite of bitterly cold and stormy weather, the attendance was on the whole good, and there was shown an earnest spirit of hearing. Limits of space forbid my attempting to give anything like a full account of the services, but I would like to mention the meetings of the last three days.

On the Saturday Mr. Lane lectured on "Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress" to a large audience. The lecture was beautifully illustrated by fifty slides, being full of Gospel truth. On the last Sunday afternoon a meeting for "men only" was held. For this some 15,000 invitations were distributed at all the iron-works, foundries, ship-yards, engineering works, &c., and this resulted in the gathering together of probably the largest meeting of men ever held in Stockton. Mr. Lane's address was powerful, dealing with the question of purity from a physical, moral, and spiritual standpoint, and considering it in its bearing upon the personal, social, and national life of those present. The enthusiasm of the meeting was stirred, although the speaker did not in any sense "speak to the gallery," but steadily kept the main thing well to the front, closing a remarkable address with an earnest appeal for personal surrender to Christ. It is impossible to estimate the good likely to flow out of such a meeting, but we cannot doubt that the whole town will feel the effects of it in after days, and that the moral tone of the community will be sensibly raised as a result.

On Monday evening, at the closing gathering of the mission, Mr. Lane told the story of his conversion while serving in the Coldstream Guards, to the largest audience of all. The simplicity and "humanness" of this experience must have found an echo in every heart, and many a one present lived over again the experience of their own conversion, as they listened to the recital of the tender mercy of our God in his gracious leading of a poor lost soul "from the gambling table to the mercy seat!" Many will gratefully remember, with thanksgiving to God, our brother's visit to this district.

William Lawrence Tweedie,
Hon. Sec., Stockton and Thornaby Free Church Council.

Mr. Oatts in Calcutta and Ceylon.

Mr. W. M. Oatts writes from Colombo: "Mrs. Oatts and I have spent ten days in Calcutta, and now ten days in Ceylon. The meetings in Calcutta were principally for Bengalese students, of whom there are 10,000, all speaking the English language. In the Christian colleges, half an hour each day is set apart for religious instruction, and the students are expected to attend this session. It was my privilege to give several addresses in different colleges. The meetings in the College Y.M.C.A. were attended by over 100 men each evening. They gave an attentive hearing to the simple story of deliverance from sin by the atoning work of Jesus Christ. At the close of almost all the meetings there were inquiries. One night, when dealing with temptation, sixty men raised their hands for prayer, and I got near to many of them thereafter. Ceylon is the garden of the earth, 'every prospect pleases.' We have here seen some of the interesting work of the C.M.S. and other missionary societies, and we have had meetings two and three times daily."

In a mission recently held at Paignton by Mr. Wycliffe Pascoe, of the Evangelization Society, members of the various churches took part. A choir led the singing, and visitors and laymen of the denominations supported the missioner on the platform. Blessing was given both to Christians and sinners. The former were stirred to greater effort and enthusiasm, while many of the latter were led to personal decision for Christ.

Banff Parish Church had a Parochial Mission from March 18 to 30, conducted by Rev. Gordon B. Watt, of Kilmarnock. Great interest was manifested in the mission, and large numbers attended without respect to denomination. A brotherly spirit was exhibited and stimulus given to all Christian work. The addresses on the Christian life at the afternoon meetings were particularly helpful, and could not fail to strengthen faith and upbuild Christian character. The tide of interest continued rising till the very close, and a goodly number remained to the after-meetings, where some very definite work was done. The mission had been well prepared for, and the soil was ready for the seed. The blessing still continues, because the Blesser abides. B.

A fruitful mission has been conducted at Bow Baths Hall, E., by Rev. J. Lyall. At the concluding evening service the large building was filled, and many sought Christ.—Mr. John Harris, of the Evangelization Society, has visited Hull Bridge Mission, Essex; the meetings were well attended, and many received blessing.—Mr. Richard Spragg's fortnight's mission at Preston was full of stimulus; Mr. J. Wallbank writes: "We have indeed had a blessed time. God's love was richly manifested in bringing poor sinners out of darkness into his marvellous light."

At services conducted at Castle Street Mission Hall, Kingsland, N., by Mr. W. J. Moys, the Word was powerfully proclaimed, and a number of persons, chiefly young men and women, yielded to Christ.—A season of blessing is reported in connection with the Free Church, Auldearn, Nairn, by Rev. J. McNeill, minister. Some of the unconverted have been "plucked as brands from the burning," and many of God's people have been spiritually quickened. — Good tidings come from Rev. A. Shepherd, of Chryston Free Church, Glasgow. A three weeks' mission has been held there by Mr. Samuel MacKenzie, and his daughter. "About sixty professed to find Christ as their Saviour. The Sabbath School, Boys' Brigade, and Bible Class especially shared in the blessing; and many of the congregation experienced a time of refreshment. The minister and session of the church rejoice in the outpouring of God's spirit among them."

Notes & Comments

IT is a happy coincidence that Easter-tide comes in the season of awakening life on the earth. To the devout the spontaneous charm and glory of the spring is thus hallowed by the spiritual suggestions that come from the awakening songs and bursting buds that greet us on all hands. After the long and trying winter season come soft winds and broadening sunshine, and the joy of life bursting through its prison-house. So rose the Lord of Life out of the grasp of death and the grave, because "it was not possible that He should be holden of it." He died that we might live, and He lives that we may have perfect assurance that they that are in Him "shall never die." These thoughts should make the brightness of this season, with its promise of abundance in the months to come, sacred and full of comfort to all believers.

We publish on page 17 an especially interesting interview with Rev. Robert Howie, of Glasgow, regarding the recent Gospel Campaign in that city. Among other important points brought out are the following, which, with the entire article, are worthy of the earnest and prayerful consideration of all church members and workers. Mr. Howie says of inter-denominational effort:—

> Even when ministers were enthusiastic about co-operation, they did not always find their congregations willing to give up their own work to help another church . . .
> We have found that what we gained in extension we lost in intensity.

The last-named experience would seem to be but the natural outcome of the foregoing cause. It was very different when James and John "beckoned unto their partners in the other ship." The ready response of the latter did not lack intensity in its reward.

Mr. Howie emphasizes the necessity of following up a mission:—

> Unless the churches set themselves carefully to gather up the fruits . . . we shall not reap the benefit.

This is where so many fail. Too often a church resumes its customary weekly routine immediately a mission closes, instead of instituting instruction classes to strengthen the belief and faith of those who have professed conversion, and to help others to decision. We remember an instance of a London church at which, on the concluding Sunday evening of a mission, it was announced: "To-morrow the Literary Society will meet, when the volume under discussion will be 'Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush—'" which seemed effectually to stick prickles into the impressions made during the mission!

Concerning the work among children, Mr. Howie speaks encouragingly:—

> If even a mere fraction of those who have made profession turn out to be genuine converts, and we are assured that very many of them are, there has been a very great work of grace...[But here again] its value will depend very much on how it is followed up.

Two other important points are emphasized which will bear extended application:—

> 1. The quickening of Christians is, perhaps, the most important matter. That attained, there would be a passion for souls.
> 2. It was a noted feature of the Wynd Mission that the whole district was permeated by small meetings in the homes of the people; and these, more than anything else, will reach a class not touched by the largest placards or the best-known evangelists.

The Queen's visit to Ireland is destined to be remembered for a great outburst of loyal feeling on the part of her Irish subjects. Her courage, tact, and self-possession in entrusting herself to the hospitality of the people have thus borne immediate fruit, and it is to be hoped that the Royal stay in Dublin will help to remove the last trace of disaffection between the population of the two islands. The reverence in which the presence of Royalty has ever been held in both, could be turned to no better use than to remove the last traces of historic disaffection, and to bring still closer the ties of common interest and brotherhood that should bind the two races. Happily the Queen has given abundant proof that she lives for her people, and that it is the dearest wish of her heart that all who own allegiance to her may dwell together in peace and affection. May she live to see this good work completed.

The remarkable, providential escape of the Prince of Wales from assassination on his way to the Court of the King of Denmark has called forth a chorus of profound regrets from all the European Governments and almost the whole of the Continental press. Strong attempts have been made to show that it was the act of an irresponsible madman, without political or racial significance. This is on the face of the evidence unlikely. The untoward incident is at least indirectly due to the unrestrained ravings of the press of the Continent during the past months, in which the most unbridled charges and innuendoes have been indulged in respecting this country, and especially our Royal Family. The Governments that have permitted these bitter and disgraceful attacks are, therefore, to some extent, accountable for the result. They will now probably keep a firmer hand on the unprincipled journalists who have fomented the spirit of Anarchism, of which this outrage was the unfortunate but logical outcome.

But it is not simply of such a peril as that which surrounds any prominent personage that we are reminded. There are moral, as well as the physical, dangers which beset those of high estate. Their life is pictured frequently only on its public side, when all seems pleasant and gracious. But Royalties have their trials, troubles, and temptations like the rest of mankind, and these are of a peculiarly perilous nature. They are subjected to the temptation to be selfish, haughty, disregardful of anything except their pleasure and dignity. They are tempted by flatterers and toadies to imagine that their power can almost stay the advance of the waves. They are importuned by all the voices of worldliness, luxury, and vice; and have from their high position all manner of pleasant dangers within their reach. The wearisome monotony of public functions, the mockery of smiles when hearts are sad, the glitter of pageant when private griefs call for retirement—all these constitute some of the perils of position. "Here at the top one loses sight of God" has been only too true of some monarchs. Yet surely no one needs more the comfortable assurance that "all is well because God is all" than those in high positions of power and influence.

It is sometimes a good thing to have the real principles of Anarchism and other schemes for the destruction of society put into unmistakable words, for, as a rule, it masquerades under all manner of specious philanthropic disguises. Here is the statement, as given to a correspondent of the Daily News by an avowed Anarchist expounding his "doctrine":—

> "Yea! kill a few thousand idlers that millions of toilers may live! Inflict torture that regeneration may ensue! Bleed bloated society that it may recover health and vigour! Wage war that peace may reign! Hate with our whole heart, strike with all our might, destroy foes, annihilate every one of those who unconcernedly listlessly loll through existence while fellow-beings mourn and suffer; teach men that there is no after life, and that they must be happy now or never; teach them Atheism, teach them Rationalism, kindle such a fire that all idols be burned and humanity should, like a phœnix, rise from the pile radiant with universal love; such is our aim, such the doctrine we preach, and will make to triumph (or to ensure its victory), and many besides me are willing, are ready, are anxious to die."

This is a strange jumble of religious mania and diabolical misanthropy, and there is no reason to doubt that it represents the creed of thousands of misguided men on the Continent, and of a few in this country. It is the direct negation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, with which it wages a deadly war.

The account given in the above article of the condition of Anarchism in this country is startling. There are, it appears, about 6,000 Anarchists in this country, chiefly divided between two sections—first, the "idealists," whose aim is attained by endeavouring to educate the people in the principles of wholesale levelling; and, secondly, the "militants," who advocate the use of the bomb and the dagger, and seize every opportunity to put their ideas into "practice." These people are "governed" by an international committee, controlled by an inner circle of arch conspirators composed of thirty members of various nationalities, and these in turn by an inner circle of five persons who have the power of life and death over all their accomplices. The further description of their methods reveals a marvellously close-knit and seemingly efficient organization. The wonder is that such explosive social forces do so little practical harm. The more than counter-balancing forces of progress and co-operation make Anarchism a more or less futile thing. Like the pent-up fires of the earth, they break out only here and there, and over all rules the guiding Providence of God.

Two eminent Christian workers of diverse gifts celebrated notable birthdays this week. Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, was seventy on April 9, and General Booth was seventy-one on April 10. Both men have retained exceptional vigour with which to serve their day and generation, and both men seem now in the meridian of their power and influence. General Booth and Dr. Parker have both passed through the same valley of the shadow in the loss of their beloved partners, and for each of them the world and its busy scenes must now have very little attraction except as the sphere of spiritual labours.

It is stated that in announcing the death of her husband, Mrs. Jacob Bright had notices sent out on pure white paper headed with a laurel wreath and a rising sun, "a prophecy of the life to come," with the words "Entered the land of light, November 7, 1899, aged seventy-eight years." It is so frequently the case that all the trappings of woe take away the thoughts from the blessedness of the believer entering into the joy of his Lord that it is pleasant to find an instance in which the simplicity of faith and trust is made prominent.

A great desire exists in the Baptist denomination that Dr. Alexander Maclaren, one of the greatest of living preachers, should be President of the Baptist Union in 1901, in succession to Pastor William Cuff. Dr. Maclaren is over seventy-four years of age, but lately he has seemed to renew his youth. Doubtless our Baptist friends would spare the eminent preacher all fatigue as far as possible if he would consent to be again President. His message from the Chair would be of no uncertain note.

The mid-day services in St. Paul's Cathedral, which are held annually in the Lenten season, suggest that such services might be extended over most of the year. The Cathedral has held many thousands of interested men and women, drawn mainly from City warehouses and offices, during the last few weeks. They have stolen a brief interval from their busy work to listen to well-known preachers. We believe that if the Cathedral authorities selected suitable preachers for other seasons of the year, there might be almost daily services in the Cathedral at mid-day.

We hope that in the centenary celebrations of William Cowper's genius due regard will be paid to the poet as a hymn-writer. It has been suggested that on the Sunday before the centenary day (April 25) some of Cowper's exquisite hymns should be sung in our churches. This would be an admirable way of recalling his remarkable work, which will do more to perpetuate his fame than poems like "The Task," delightful as many of his poems are. Who can ignore hymns so immortal as "God moves in a mysterious way," "Oh! for a closer walk with God," "Jesus, where'er thy people meet," and others of the Olney collection? By all means let us recollect Cowper's great services to the Church universal as one who voiced the needs and hopes of countless multitudes.

Dr. Farquharson, M.P., again calls attention to the increase of pauper children, and the lack of sensible system in dealing with them. In the Metropolitan area alone there are 1,716 children under the care of the Local Government Board in workhouses, gaining, we fear, little chance of improvement in such environment. The Marquis of Lorne, as an ex-Governor-General of Canada, writes in the Nineteenth Century urging more emigration of these children. Dr. Barnardo and various emigration societies testify the marked and rapid improvement — physical, moral, and spiritual—which attends careful emigration. We hope that pauper children will soon cease to be retained in our workhouses, being sent either to cottage homes or to our Colonies.

The Bill for the better protection of the lives of railway employés is at last in a fair way of becoming law. It will be remembered that last year a similar attempt was defeated by the pressure of railway "interests," as the automatic couplings, which will, it is hoped, soon become compulsory, will necessitate a large expenditure of money, which unfortunately is still often held more precious than life. The call for such a measure is seen in the fact that shunters are pratically "wiped out" every ten years by more or less preventable accidents. In America the humanitarian movement has long since triumphed over vested interests in this matter, and it is found in the end that economy of life is accompanied by economy of expenditure. There can be no further excuse for the postponement of this beneficent measure, which is long overdue, and which will result in the saving of many lives every year.

Under the title, "Prince Hohenlohe's Idea," The Spectator recently contained an article on the value of modern progress which some of our chief optimists would do well to weigh well in their estimate of the value of our civilization. The Prince, who is one of the best-informed and most observant men of the time, declares that though he has been in favour of progress all his life, he has come to doubt whether it has not beeen arrested, for the present, at any rate, by the "too severe struggle for existence," and the desire of all men for a larger share of physical comfort and well-being. This raises a fundamental question. Poverty is a comparative term, and is really to be measured by the "excess of our wants above our means." Thus if the better average distribution of wealth, which is unquestionably going on, is to issue in greater social happiness, there must not be a corresponding increase in "wants." Unfortunately the contrary is usually the case; every enlargement of income being accompanied by a still larger call for luxuries. Poverty may, therefore, increase pari passu with wealth. This is a paradox, but it is, nevertheless, a profound truth.

The lesson of all this is clear. The Christian virtue that needs most to be preached and taught and mastered just now is that of contentment. "Be content with such things as ye have" was the golden advice of the Apostle to the earliest members of the Church of Christ, in another age of extravagance and luxury and Mammon-worship; and it is advice that needs re-emphasizing to-day, after 2,000 years of Christian progress. Half the sorrow and anxiety of modern life lies in neglect of this principle. While we are longing for what we have not, we cannot properly enjoy what we have; and, till we count our blessings more carefully and thankfully, we shall never be able to value them at their worth. Truly, "Godliness with contentment is great gain!"

It is said, on the authority of travellers who have seen the world pretty thoroughly, that there is more undisguised profane swearing in London than in any civilised city. It is a disgrace to our manners and an insult to our religion that expressions should be tolerated in the streets of our capital that would bring speedy rebuke on the culprits in any American or Colonial city. It would be well, therefore, if the "Anti-Profanity League," which is being started in the States, should open a vigorous branch in our own capital. At least, a determined "set" should be made by those who have any social influence, against this pernicious and degrading habit. The fact that so many indulge in loose and ribald language more from thoughtlessness than depravity is only a stronger argument for its suppression, for it shows that many who do so only need their conscience awakened and their moral taste purified to make an honest and manly campaign against swearing more or less successful.

We have already called attention to the Sunday Closing question in relation to the Paris Exposition. At previous English and American Exhibitions the various departments were closed on the Lord's Day, and the representatives of these two countries have strongly urged that they may be permitted to close their exhibits on one day in seven. The British Commission has, on the contrary, issued a regulation that all exhibits must be open on every day on which the Exhibition is open; promising only that such Exhibitors' attendants as do not wish to work on Sunday can have substitutes provided for them on payment of certain sums. Even in Continental exhibitions it has hitherto been allowable for those who desire to do so to close their special exhibits on Sunday. This drastic rule is greatly resented by many intending to take part in the Exposition, and the attention of Parliament is being directed to it. We hope this will not be done in vain.

The Countess of Meath, in a paper in the current number of the Leisure Hour, calls attention to a grave defect in workhouse administration, in both Great Britain and Ireland, under which the terrible abuse arises of housing sufferers from the painful disease of epilepsy with the lunatics. Lady Meath very properly designates this shameful treatment of a helpless and much to be pitied class as barbarism, and especially as it is already open to the Guardians to take a more Christian course, and to send the unfortunate creatures to institutions at which they receive proper care. No doubt a vigorous expression of local opinion on the part of Christian ratepayers would go far to hasten the time when, as the writer of the paper says, people will look back with surprise that such cruelties were possible.

There are few texts more often quoted in an erroneous sense than 2 Cor. iii. 6: "The letter killeth, but the spirit maketh alive." The "letter" is supposed to mean the language of Scripture, the "spirit" its inner meaning and general tenour; and to use the former is said to be killing, while the latter alone is life-giving. It is clear from the context, however, that by the "letter" St. Paul means the Old Covenant—the law given on Sinai; by the "spirit" the New Covenant, of which he was minister—even the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. The one killeth because it is a ministry of condemnation, the other maketh alive because it is a ministry of righteousness unto life from Him who is the quickening Spirit.

The first publication of the Catholic Truth Society of Ireland has seen the light, and in it the Roman Catholic Bishop of Limerick states that the educational condition of that country is deplorable, and behind that of every country of Europe, and a century behind civilization. Naturally the Bishop finds the reason of this in the alleged incapacity of the Imperial Parliament to deal with educational questions in Ireland, but finds it convenient to ignore any comparison between South and North America, Belgium and Holland, France and Germany, the Catholic with the Protestant Cantons in Switzerland, or the South with the North of Ireland. A closed Bible is the real cause, and as Rev. Dr. Horton has said, "a blight has fallen wherever the Papacy has triumphed, and the world has moved forward in light and liberty and joy wherever that fatal claim has been repudiated and made void."

Fellowship with Christ's Sufferings.

(A MEDITATION FOR GOOD FRIDAY.)

"That I may know . . . the fellowship of his sufferings" (Phil. iii. 10).

A SANE aspiration after suffering is a rare and unique thing in the world. In verse, men have, with poetic exaggeration glorified it; but in the strict prose of life, they shrink from it; and when it becomes inevitable, they employ every means to mitigate its horrors. Such a desire as that of Paul is rare amongst Christians, but we are about to see that it ought to be common amongst us, that in proportion as this aspiration is ours we are like Christ, and, per contra, in proportion as it is not ours we are unlike Him.

Our redeemed life is the direct outcome of suffering.—Saved by the suffering of JESUS, the Christian is called upon in turn to suffer on behalf of his Lord. He must, because he is saved, submit to an inner violence upon his sin and bad habit, and upon all else within him which contradicts the purpose of our Lord's Atonement. Crucified representatively with Christ, he must be crucified actually in his own life. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" (Gal. v. 24). More than this, the Christian in contact with a world hostile to his Divine Master, is warned that suffering awaits him from that source. Reproaches, distresses, unkindnesses, and even death—these are the things which our Lord bids us expect at the hands of the world (see John xvi. 2, Matthew x. 21-22, John xv. 20). When we suffer thus for Him, we are to account it a matter for rejoicing. "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, blessed are ye" (1 Peter iv. 13-14). So there is a suffering which is ESSENTIAL TO THE TRUE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

But the aspiration of the Apostle rises far higher than this ordinary suffering. He wants a partnership with Christ's sufferings. It is not suffering for Christ that he is here thinking about, but a suffering with Christ. He desires to enter into the mystery of our Lord's sorrow, and in some way to become a partner with it. Elsewhere he expresses the same idea (see 2 Cor. i. 5; and Col. i. 24, R.V.).

Now what are these sufferings in which he desires to have a share? Many limit them to those dolorous and dreadful hours in Gethsemane and upon Calvary. Without doubt, that terrible baptism of torment exceeds the utmost limit of human imagination. The scourging, the crown of thorns, the cruel nails, the thirst, the fever, the agony of crucifixion, and, worst of all, the forsaking by the Father—ah! who can sound this depth of woe? But Jesus suffered long before the Passion came. His whole human life was a life of suffering from the same cause which eventually took Him to Calvary. The sin of men pressing upon his sacred soul, was to Him a continual source of pain. Jesus also suffered long before He entered our world in his incarnate life. From everlasting He was God—the second member of the Holy Trinity. When He became incarnate He had no new feelings towards the human race; but He represented visibly to men the feelings which had, ever since man's fall, been in his heart, and in the heart of the Father. The love, pity, pardon, and sorrow which men beheld in Him had all been exercised up in heaven long before earth witnessed them. In life He was a Man of sorrows, because God was a God of sorrows. "In all their affliction He was afflicted" (Isaiah lxiii. 9).

Infidelity wickedly represents a suffering world and a callous God; the truth is that the world is callous and God suffers. Christ is the great Sufferer. He suffered before Bethlehem, He suffered between Bethlehem and Calvary, He suffered on Calvary, and He suffers still, since He remains our Priest and Mediator.

IN WHAT WAY DOES CHRIST SUFFER?

Try to picture the qualities of sin, its quantities, and its aggravations. Sin goes on day and night in every quarter of the globe; it has gone on for many generations, and in spite of every kind of warning. And yet He bears with it! But the bearing of it is a positive pain to his heart. It attacks his holiness and his Love; it destroys his masterpiece, man, and it breeds disorder in his universe.

Within ourselves we have a feeble image of his suffering. In proportion to the perfection of any of our faculties, we suffer pain when we encounter imperfection in similar faculties possessed by others. The ear of the musician suffers when an instrumentalist produces discords; the taste of the artist suffers at the spectacle of a wretched painting; the soul of a good person suffers in the presence of wickedness. These are poor images of that supreme suffering which Christ, the All Pure, endures on account of sin.

And He suffers, not because He must, but because He wills. He could crush men, banish them, and cleanse his world. He elects to suffer—why? One answer only can be given—because He is LOVE. Love always suffers when its object is being harmed; and the more perfect the love, the more terrible the suffering. It was his LOVE that led to the supreme suffering of the cross. Would GOD, that on this Good Friday men would think of all this. Men do not know that God suffers on account of their sin; or, if they do, many of them seem

NOT TO CARE THAT HE DOES.

It was a partnership with this suffering that Paul aspired after. He wanted to enter into our LORD'S feeling for men. JESUS wants all his people to rise to this aspiration. He suffered to make us happy, but He wants us to suffer in union with Him until all the world is happy. The Church is his body, his agent, and He would have the body feel with the head. He wants the world to look upon his Church, and see in her what He is. He wept over cities; He wants us to weep over them. But let me be quick to add that these sufferings are not on our part meritorious. It is not to win Him that we are thus called, but because we have been won by Him that He wants us to be partners with his sorrow.

But where is this partnership with his sorrow? Do the majority desire it? Has that easy-going religion which contents itself with a comfortable pew in church, a two hours' attendance at church per week, an occasional alms, a careful avoidance of unpleasant people, a general satisfaction with "maintaining the cause free from debt," and a deliberate ignoring of the great commission—has this cheap religion, I ask, any sort of resemblance to a "partnership with his sufferings"?

Christians! the vast majority of human kind are still "without Christ." Their sin makes Him sorry. Shall we seek a partnership with that sorrow? Such a partnership will lead to action, and action perchance to success. And when better can we begin than upon the anniversary of the day when he shed his precious blood for the redemption of mankind?

Thoughts for the Week.

Forsaken.

"My God, my God! why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

O JESUS, Saviour of mankind,
What wondrous love was thine!
To bear my sin on Calvary's cross,
Thyself to death resign.

As on thy bleeding form I gaze,
My heart with love o'erflows
To think that Thou shouldst so endure,
Didst feel such bitter woes.

I hear thy supplicating cry,
Which seems thy heart to break:
"My God, my God! in this dark hour,
O why dost Thou forsake!"

But sin was on thy sacred head,
For us vile sinners laid:
By suffering there, thy sacrifice
Hath full atonement made.

My Saviour, to thy cross I come,
To view by faith the sight;
O take my heart, my life, my all,
Now claim thy purchased right.

Glory in the Cross.

"God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

WE cannot praise Thee, Lord, enough
For sacrifice so great,
That Thou didst on that cross of shame
Redeem our lost estate.

The blood now pleads within the veil
Where Thou dost live for me;
With boldness I may enter in—
Thou wilt my Surety be.

But, Saviour, I would tread the road,
The pathway of the Cross;
Now daily bear it after Thee,
Esteem earth's gain but loss.

My heart shall be by Thee possessed
Lord, claim me as thine own;
Thy child, redeemed from Satan's thrall,
I'll follow Thee alone.

RESURRECTION THOUGHTS.

Luke xxiii. 27; Gal. ii. 20; 1 Cor. xv. 55-57.

WE wept beside thy sacred cross
For sins which drew Thee down from Heaven,
And counted all things else as loss,
Because such price for us was given.
We died with Thee, O thorn-crowned King,
And lo! all death had lost its sting.

John xx. 11; Rom. vi. 4.

We wept beside thine empty tomb,
And feared that Thou wert lost to sight;
But morning dawned upon our gloom,
And with it came the Light of Light.
Buried with Thee, we rose again,
And sang our Easter's glad refrain.

Acts i. 9, 10; Colossians iii. 1-3.

We wept, and strained our weeping eyes
To follow up the cloud-paved way
Which Thou didst take to reach the skies,
And longed in vain that Thou wouldst stay.
We found the wings of Faith and Love;
They raised our hearts to "things above."

Psa. cxxvi. 6; Matthew xxviii., 19, 20.

We wept, and took thy precious seed
To scatter with a patient hand;
And stony seemed our path indeed,
And hard at first thy last command.
Too heavy was the load we bore,
Till Thou didst whisper, "Weep no more."

Ephesians ii. 6; Romans viii. 25.

We may not pierce the veil between,
Nor gaze with mortal eyes on Thee;
But where Thou wert we too have been,
And where Thou art we soon shall be.
Come, Life! for "nothing can divide."
Come, Death! and raise us to his side.

John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The House of Zacharias.

Luke i.

There are in this loud stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of th' everlasting chime. —Keble.

TO the Evangelist Luke we are indebted for details of those antecedent circumstances that ushered John the Baptist into the world. He tells us that he had "traced the course of all things accurately from the first." And in those final words, "from the first," he suggests that he had deliberately sought to examine into those striking events from which, as from a wide-spreading root, the great growth of Christianity had originated. As a physician, accustomed by his training to accurate research and experiment, he went back to scenes and events anterior to any which his brother evangelists recorded. He compensated for the authority of an eye-witness by thoroughness and care as an investigator.

What were the sources from which the Third Evangelist drew his information? We cannot be sure, but may hazard a suggestion, which is supported by the archaic simplicity, the indescribable grace, the almost idyllic beauty of his two opening chapters. Critics have repeatedly drawn attention to their unique character, and insisted that they are due to some other hand than that which has given us the rest of the story of "the Son of Man." And why should we not attribute them to "the Mother" herself? It has been truly said that mothers are the natural historians of their children's early days —never tired of observing them, they never tire of recounting their prodigies; and, in an especial manner, Mary had kept all things, pondering in her heart those wonderful circumstances which had left on her life

SO INDELIBLE AN IMPRESSION.

The story of John the Baptist was so clearly part of that of Jesus, that Mary could hardly recall the one without the other. And, besides, Elisabeth, as the angel said, was her kinswoman, perhaps her cousin, to whom she naturally turned in the hour of her maidenly astonishment and rapture. Though much younger, Mary was united to her relative by a close and tender tie, and it was only natural that what had happened to her should have impressed her almost as deeply as her own memorable experiences. So it is possible that from the lips of the mother of our Lord we obtain these details of the House of Zacharias.

I. The Quiet in the Land. God has always had his hidden ones; and, whilst the world has been rent by faction and war, ravaged by fire and sword, and drenched with the blood of her sons, these have heard his call to enter into the doors, and shut themselves in until the storm had spent its fury. It was so during the days of Ahab, when the eye of Omniscience beheld at least seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. It was so in the awful days of the Civil War, when Puritan and Royalist faced each other at Marston Moor and Naseby, and the land seemed swept in a blinding storm. Groups of ardent souls gathered to spend their time in worship and acts of mercy—like those at Little Gidding, in Huntingdonshire, under the direction of Mr. Nicholas Ferrar. It was so when the thirty years' war desolated Germany, and "the quiet in the land" withdrew themselves from the agitated scene of human affairs to wait on God.

It was eminently so in the days of which we write. Darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the people. Herod's infamous cruelties, impurity, and bloodshed were at their height. The country questioned with fear what new direction his crimes might take. The priesthood was obsequious to his whim, the bonds of society seemed dissolved. Theudas and Judas of Galilee, mentioned by Gamaliel, were but specimens of the bandit leaders who broke into revolt and harried the country districts for the maintenance of their followers. Greed, peculation, and lawless violence, had ample and undisputed opportunity to despoil the national glory and corrupt the heart of the national life.

Is it to be wondered that the godly remnant would meet in little groups and secluded hiding-places to comfort themselves in God? We are told, for instance, that Anna spake of the Babe, whom she had probably embraced in her aged trembling arms, "to all them that were looking for the redemption of Jerusalem" (Luke ii. 38, R.V.).

THE GLOOM OF THEIR TIMES

only led them more eagerly to con the predictions of their Hebrew prophets, and desire their accomplishment; and when they met, the burden of conversation, which flowed under vine or fig-tree, by the way side or in humble homes, would be of their cherished hope. So as they beheld the hapless condition of their fatherland, the cry must often have been extorted: "How long, O Lord, holy and true, will it be ere He shall come whose right it is, who shall sit on the throne of his father David, and of whose kingdom there shall be no end?"

We are not drawing on our imagination in describing these true-hearted watchers for the rising of the Day-star. They are fully indicated in the Gospel story. There was Simeon, righteous and devout, unto whom it had been revealed by the Holy Spirit that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ; and Anna, the prophetess, who departed not from the temple, worshipping with fastings and supplications night and day; and the guileless Nathanael, an Israelite indeed, who had perhaps already commenced to sit at the foot of the ladder which bound his fig-tree to the highest heaven; and the peasant maiden, Mary, the descendant of a noble house, though with fallen fortunes, who, like some vestal virgin, clad in snowy white, watched through the dark hours and last, but not least, Zacharias and his wife Elisabeth, "who were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless."

For us, too, the times are dark. It is as though the shadows were being thrown far across the fields, and the light were becoming dim. Let the children of God draw together, to encourage each other in their holy faith, and to speak of their great hopes; for He who appeared once to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself shall appear a second time without sin unto salvation.

But this attitude of spirit, which dwells in the unseen and eternal, is the temper of mind out of which the greatest deeds are wrought for the cause of God on the earth. The Marys who sit at Christ's feet arise to anoint Him for his burying. Take for instance, the Moravian Church, born and cradled amid the pietism of which Spener of Berlin and Franke of Halle were the acknowledged leaders; and it has given to the world a larger number of missionaries in proportion to its membership than any Church of the age. Or take the followers of George Fox, who have maintained through unparalleled suffering their testimony for spirituality of worship; and it is undeniable that some of the greatest reforms which have characterized the receding century have found their foremost advocates and apologists from their somewhat meagre ranks. Those who wait on God renew their strength. The world ignores them, scorning to reckon their tears and toils amid its renovating energies; but they refuse to abate their endeavours and sacrifices on its behalf. They repay its neglect by more assiduous exertions, its ingratitude by more exhausting sacrifices: content if, from out their ranks, there presently steps one who, like John the Baptist, opens a new chapter in the history of the race, and accelerates the Advent of the Christ.

II. The Parentage of the Forerunner.—As the traveller emerges from the dreary wilderness that lies between Sinai and the southern frontier of Palestine—a scorching desert, in which Elijah was glad to find shelter from the sword-like rays in the shade of the retem-shrub—he sees before him a long line of hills, which is the beginning "of the hill country of Judæa." Here and there are the crumbled ruins which mark the site of ancient towns and villages tenanted now by the jackal or the wandering Arab. Amongst these, a modern traveller has identified the site of Juttah, the village home of the priest Zacharias and his wife Elisabeth.

To judge by their names, we may infer that their parents years before had been godly people. Zacharias meant God's remembrance; as though he were to be to his fellows of what God had promised, and to God of what they were expecting from his hand. Elisabeth meant God's oath; as though her people were continually appealing to those covenant promises in which, since He could swear by no greater, God had sworn by Himself that He would never leave nor forsake, and that ere the sceptre departed from Judah and the law-giver from between his feet, Shiloh should come.

Zacharias was a priest, "of the course of Abijah," and twice a year he journeyed to Jerusalem to fulfil his office, for a week of six days and two Sabbaths. There were, Josephus tells us, somewhat more than 20,000 priests settled in Judæa at this time; and very many of them were like those whom Malachi denounced for degrading and depreciating the Temple services. The general character of the priesthood was deeply tainted by the corruption of the times, and as a class they were blind leaders of the blind. Not a few, however, were evidently deeply religious men, for we find that "a great number of the priests," after the crucifixion, believed on Christ and joined his followers. In this class we must therefore place Zacharias, who, with his wife, herself of the daughters of Aaron, is described as being "righteous before God."

The phrases are evidently selected with care. Many are righteous before men, but these were righteous before God. Their daily life and walk were regulated by a careful observance of the ordinances of the ceremonial and the commandments of the moral law. It is evident from the apt and plentiful quotations from Scripture, with which the song of Zacharias is replete, that the Scriptures were deeply pondered and reverenced in that highland home, and we have the angel's testimony to the prayers that ascended day and night. In all these things they were blameless; not faultless, as judged by God's infinite standard of rectitude, but blameless, because they lived up to the fullest limit of their knowledge of the will of God.

But they lived under the shadow of a great sorrow. "They had no child, because Elisabeth was barren, and they both were now well stricken in years." But had it not been for this sorrow they might never have been qualified to receive the first tidings of the near approach of the Messiah. Sorrow opens our eyes, and bids us see visions within the veil, which cannot be descried by those who have not wept. All natural hope may have become dead, and the soul be plunged in hopeless despair. "Yet the Lord will command his loving kindness in the morning;" and it will be seen that the dull autumn sowings of tears and loneliness and pain were the necessary preliminary for that heavenly messenger who, standing "on the right side of the altar of incense," shall assure us that our prayer is heard.

III. The Angel's Announcement.—One memorable autumn, when the land was full of the grape-harvest, Zacharias left his home, in the cradle of the hills, some 3,000ft. above the Mediterranean, for his priestly service. Reaching the temple he would lodge in the cloisters, and spend his days in the innermost court, which none might enter, save priests in their sacred garments. Among the various priestly duties, none was held in such high esteem as the offering of incense, which was presented morning and evening, on a special golden altar, in the Holy Place at the time of prayer. "The whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense." So honourable was this office that it was fixed by lot, and none was allowed to perform it twice. Only once in a priest's life was he permitted to sprinkle the incense on the burning coals, which an assistant had already brought from the altar of burnt-sacrifice, and spread on the altar of incense before the veil.

The silver trumpets had sounded. The smoke of the evening sacrifice was ascending. The worshippers that thronged the different courts, rising tier on tier, were engaged in silent prayer. The assistant priest had retired; and Zacharias, for the first and only time in his life, stood alone in the holy shrine, whilst the incense which he had strewn on the glowing embers arose in fragrant clouds, enveloping and veiling the objects around, whilst it symbolized the ascent of prayers and intercessions not only from his own heart, but from the hearts of his people, into the presence of God. "And their prayer came up to his holy habitation, even unto heaven."

"And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense." The people would have ceased to marvel at the long suspense could they have known the cause of the delay. Presently he came out, but when he essayed to pronounce the customary blessing his lips were dumb. Dumb, because he believed not the Archangel's words! Dumb, that he might learn in silence and solitude the full purposes of God to set them presently to song. Dumb, that the tidings might not spread as yet. Dumb, as the representative of that wonderful system, which for so long had spoken to mankind with comparatively little result, but was now to be superseded by the Word of God.

With the light of that glory on his face, and those sweet notes of "Fear not" ringing in his heart, Zacharias continued to fulfil the duties of his ministration, and, when his work was fulfilled, departed unto his house. But that day was long remembered by the people, prelude as it was to the time when their blessings would no longer come from Ebal or Gerizim, but from Calvary; and when the great High Priest would utter from heaven the ancient words:

The Lord bless thee and keep thee.
The Lord cause his face to shine upon thee and be gracious to thee.
The Lord lift upon thee the light of his countenance and give thee peace.

Weighted.

I AM not rich in houses of glass, nor in fruitful vines; so, though I dearly love grapes when they fall in my way, I know little about their culture, and the other day I was filled with perplexity at the appearance of the vines in a friend's hot-house. It was not that they were leafless—I was prepared for that; but the great brown unsightly stems were all detached from their usual symmetrical positions in the roof, and with weights and cords, and fetters of various kinds, were pinioned earthwards, looking about as grotesque and uncomfortable as vegetation in any of its stages and processes could possibly do.

Of course I questioned the gardener—a woman is nothing if not inquisitive—and he, with the delight in his work that is so characteristic of the profession, gave me full explanation. I was told that the sap mounts very quickly in the branches of the vine, and bursts in leaf, and subsequently in cluster, at the highest point, leaving the lower part of the stem bare; and so all this trammelling and thwarting of its natural instincts and impulses are resorted to that the life-giving principle may be trained to be faithful first in that which is least and lowest.

And now imagination was stirred. I began to picture the vine as a sentient thing, conscious of all these apparently inimical processes, and greatly disturbed by them. One could almost hear its plaintive voice murmuring remonstrance. "What does it all mean? I was hard at work propelling the sap to the topmost branches, and soon there would have been a goodly show of beauty; and now everything is checked and impeded!—a complete topsy-turvydom of all my aims brought about by that interfering, ignorant gardener. And what is the result? Instead of verdure, barrenness; and what hurts my feelings most of all is to see my poor brown branches looking so weird and unsightly in their inverted condition." Poor vine!

And then in a few days I went to look again, and lo! at every joint of the lower stem were out-bubblings of greenness, and so—the old adage being attended to, "Doe ye nexte thinge"—the time had nearly come for the upraising to their normal position of

THE HUMILIATED BRANCHES.

One of Nature's wonderful parables—new to me at least if not to my readers. At any rate I am constrained to tell it out to some discouraged ones, and ask them if, assured as they are on the highest authority of being branches of the true Vine, they cannot trust the Divine Husbandman to know what He is doing in His training of them.

Looking at the interested and gladly-expectant face of the gardener in my friend's vinery, it would have been foolish as well as unjust to think that those weights were placed there with no purpose but the indulgence of a capricious fancy; and yet we—with those parting words of the Saviour's ringing in our ears, "My Father is the Husbandman"; "every branch that beareth fruit He purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit"—are tempted to charge Him foolishly whenever He comes into His garden and uses His pruning-knife or trains the branches; and are the veriest pagans in our non-recognition of any agent in our trial but either a blind fate or a vindictive Nemesis.

Let us determine to come into happier relations with the Divine Vine-Dresser; the Holy Spirit can establish as perfect harmony between Him and the plants of his right-hand planting as exists between an earthly gardener and his charge; and if, by the power of this Gracious Spirit we were set free from an attitude of distrust and resistance to His will, we should see that what we have murmuringly called trials and "mysterious providences" are just a blessed constraint towards fruitfulness and beauty.

These weights that so trouble and perplex us—the crippling and thwarting circumstances of our daily life, domestic anxiety and friction and disappointments, physical disabilities, mental and spiritual clouds, and whatever other form of distress is so oppressing us that we are not able to look up—shall they not cause us to inquire very carefully for the "need be?" Has there been activity in outside work, perhaps specially congenial to our taste, whilst homelier and nearer duties have been neglected; committees and public organizations, it may be, attended to whilst there has been comparative disregard of the highest welfare of the children and servants; or acts of benevolence and courtesy to strangers performed, but the beautiful amenities of home life ignored or practised grudgingly; or, on the other hand, selfish absorption in our own and our family interests with no going forth of practical sympathy to the outside radius? In other words, to revert to our parable, there has been efflorescence at the summit of the branches, but many a bare and barren space below. Shall we not be thankful for any process, however humbling, that binds self down, and lets the vitalizing power of grace have free course?

There is great comfort, if we will but take it, in the thought that in the spiritual, as in the natural world there is no arbitrary use of energy without an equivalent benefit. Just as Christ learned obedience by the things that He suffered, so may we. Who are the loveliest, and kindest, and most sympathetic souls we know? Are they not those who have been most frequently under the gardener's hands for culture and pruning? Is not the same lesson taught in the present aspect of our national affairs? Terrible disasters and loss of costly life; but how much heart-searching and turning to Him who has had to use the pruning-knife so sharply!

And what new and mighty chains of loyalty bind English hearts to-day to the Gracious Queen who has made her people's sorrows so entirely her own, and has shown such motherly love and gratitude to her brave soldiers? But Who gave us such a Queen, and Who has heard a nation's agony of intercession and given us victory? Let us praise and trust Him evermore.

Conversion of a Ritualist.

THE April number of the Evangelical Alliance Quarterly (1d. Morgan & Scott) relates how a converted Ritualist clergyman, after working for some time in the parish of a devoted cleric in London, he was led to prepare for the ministry. He proceeded through one of the High Church Theological Colleges, and associated himself with one who called himself a "Prayer Book Churchman." After this, nothing but ultra-Ritualism would satisfy him, and he settled in a parish where every phase of Romish illegalities were practised.

The question of the position of Nonconformists eventually came prominently before him, through lodging at the house of two earnest members of what was then Mr. Archibald Brown's church in the East End. "I could not," says the clergyman "harmonize the earnestness of these brethren and their holy lives with the doctrines of my so-called Catholic friends. I became a sincere seeker after the truth. My understanding gradually cleared, and I was able in time to express with my lips what my heart had always felt from the time of my conversion. He who has the power to forgive sin has power also to keep day by day those whose trust is in Him. It is a strange road along which I have travelled—from the Salvation Army, through moderate High-churchmanship, back again to the simple Gospel faith, and clear knowledge from the Word of God of the truth as it is in Jesus."

Liverpool Strangers' Rest.—At the twenty-third anniversary gathering of the friends and supporters of the Strangers' Rest, Park Lane, Liverpool, a very acceptable report of the year's work was presented by Mr. T. A. Leigh, treasurer. Over 860 meetings have been conducted in various languages, and 126 sailors' bags have been filled with books. Mr. G. Oliver Jones, Secretary of the Liverpool Seamen Friend Society, announced that Mr. R. M. Brocklebank had presented to the Society a steam yacht for the use of the mission.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 15. Psa. lxi.

THE overwhelmed heart sometimes thinks that it has reached the end of the earth. It has come to the end of all human help; it is desolate and sorrowful. All around the deluge of trouble pours its weltering waters, but in the distance the rock emerges from above the floods which promises safe resting-place. How often we have read the story of fugitives before the swiftly incoming tide, before whom a rock has reared its black, gaunt surface. They have hurried to it, climbed to stand above the level of the highest reach of full tide. Sometimes the younger children have been helped by a brother's strong hand to stand secure and happy on a rock they could not reach for themselves. So we ask God to lead us and lift us up to the rock that is higher than ourselves.

In the hour of trouble we go back on the past to what God has been—the Refuge and Tower from the enemy—and this encourages us to resolve to dwell and take refuge in Him. Ah, what a heritage is ours! We are blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ. The mischief is that we avail ourselves too little of our abounding wealth.

In the closing stanza David turns to plead the great promise of 2 Sam. vii. 12-16. This is the true attitude for prayer. With the Rock of Ages beneath our feet, the heritage of the saints at our disposal, and a definite promise in our hand, we may move the arm that moves the world. God waits for us to plead the promises. Faith is the necessary condition of blessing, and those that have learnt to deal at first hand with God have acquired the secret of perennial praise, and daily perform their vows.

It is a little thing to say: "My soul waiteth only upon God;" but only the discipline of life can quiet the many voices that clamour within, and reduce the soul to that humble attitude in which God becomes all in all, and his words roll in music through its innermost depths. In our early Christian life we run hither and thither to help ourselves. We rely on our resolutions, the new habits we intend to form, the assistance of new circumstances. It is long before our self-reliance dies down, and we abjure all creature confidence, looking for our salvation from no earthly quarter, but looking upward for its descent from heaven.

Look up, O soul, from the assaults of men. Be silent unto God (see marg.). Wait for Him. Trust in Him at all times. Pour out your heart before Him. There is nothing which helps us so much as to empty out into his ear the full tale of foreboding and trouble. Then from the "not greatly moved" of the second verse, we shall come to "not be moved" of the sixth verse.

Two things belong to God, power and mercy, and each of these is exercised in harmony with justice. It remains therefore for us to rest upon God's unfailing help. In the earlier part of the psalm the sweet singer repeats the word "my" some dozen times; in the closing verses he turns to address the people. Our experiences of God enable us to pass on comfort and help to others; and amongst the sacred legacies that we have received from the tried and tempted saints of the past is the exhortation to trust God at all times, in times of doubt and darkness, as well as of the clear shining of an assured faith, when He slays as when He heals. Every time is a time for trust. "The times that go over us" should bear us to higher reaches in the life of faith.

TUESDAY, April 17. Psa. lxiii.

My soul thirsts. In the morning of my life I come to Thee, my God. Ere the business of the world fills my soul with clamour, I will betake myself to the footstool of thy merciful help. I want not thy help alone, but Thyself. The land is dry and weary around me, creature comforts have failed, love and friends stand far away. There is no water here; but Thou, who hast nothing to draw with, art able to create springs of living water, of which, if I drink, I need never thirst. Let me see thy power and thy glory; let me tasts of thy love. Life itself can bring no richer boon than opportunities of knowing and loving and praising Thee.

My soul shall be satisfied. To desire Thee is to have Thee. To long for Thee is to feel the cool stream passing over my parched lips. To desire to praise Thee is to make my lips move joyfully. To remember Thee upon my bed rests me as does balmy sleep. To meditate on Thee in the night watches makes the darkness even as the light. The shadow of thy wings is better than the most brilliant day that ever broke over the world. Life itself has no meaning apart from Thee, as the grey morning waits for sunrise.

My soul followeth hard after Thee. Like Caleb, it follows Thee fully, like Jonathan's armour-bearer, when he climbed the steep upon the footsteps of the young prince. Always Thou art before me, not far away, but a step or two; and it is because I see the gleam of thy presence that I leave the valleys swathed in mist, and my companions with their merry laughter, to climb the steeps. Those that seek my soul to destroy it are in the lower parts of the earth; they cannot reach me here, but I am able to stand upon these high places because thy right hand upholds me. For me, there is fulness of joy.

WEDNESDAY, April 18. Psa. lxiv.

The presence of Saul and his emissaries supplied so much material for David's psalms that our minds are constantly brought back to their malignant hate. Yet we feel that this great lesson stands out amid all others, that we should take the troubles and difficulties of our life into the presence of God, laying them before Him. Probably, if we realized all the hatred with which we are regarded by our spiritual foes, if we understood how eager they are for our overthrow, we should be more prepared to avail ourselves of these petitions, and apply them to our inner experiences.

The one lesson we learn is to be sure that we give as little opportunity as possible to the foe. Just because the world is so full of evil men, disposed to put the wrong construction upon our actions, let us be on our guard to give no occasion for calumnious attacks. We must walk carefully towards those that are without; men are sure to whet their tongue, like a sword, and shoot in secret at us, to encourage themselves in their attack, and search out our iniquities. To be forewarned of this should lead to forearming. It was said of Savonarola that no breath of suspicion was ever breathed against his saintly life—his motives were so pure, his conduct so exemplary. But comparatively few of us are so transparent, so perfectly and utterly given up to God, that we deprive our foes of an opportunity for assailing us. Let us be more guarded, that they may say of us as of Daniel, that they can find no cause against us, except in so far as it concerns the law of our God.

If you are righteous, trust in the Lord. Let Him shoot at your foes who shot at you; so shall they stumble to fall, whilst you shall glory in the God of your salvation.

THURSDAY, April 19. Psa. lxv.

I cannot say to Thee all I would, O God of my life. Sometimes my words drop down into silence for the very fulness of my soul which cannot express all its thought. And what can stir my heart more than the memory of what Thou hast done, for Thou hearest my prayer, purgest away my transgression, choosest me, and causest me to approach unto Thee, satisfiest me with the goodness of thy house? Thy vows are upon me, vows of consecration to thy service, of surrender to thy will, of life-long loyalty, and to Thee shall they be performed.

God's answers come sometimes in "terrible things," as when Israel came out of Egypt amid the terrors of the last plague. We cannot dictate the kind of case in which God may pack his choice gifts. He is a great God, and his ways past finding out. Let us, however, always remember that He combines the most wonderful contrasts. On the one hand, He stills the roaring of the seas, but He makes the earth soft with showers. He startles those that dwell in the uttermost parts, but He nourishes the tender grass of the mountains. He is girded with might, but He girds the hills with the joy of green pastures, over which the flocks spread themselves. For every great and terrible display of his providence, there is a sweeter, gentler aspect of his grace.

Notice the present tense in which the psalmist conceives of God's work in nature. It is not what He did, or will do, but his ever-present activity, which is the theme of unceasing congratulation. He is the I AM. Whatever is done in the world He doeth it Himself. The God of perpetual spring—beneath his touch all is growing daily younger in eternal progression towards immortality.

FRIDAY, April 20. Psa. lxvi.

Come and see the works of God. To see is to praise, to worship, to adore. See his works in redemption, in creation, in his deliverances.

Come and hear, all ye that fear God. But how can they hear without a preacher? Be sure to declare what He hath done for your soul.

Note the remarkable phrases in this psalm, which live in our English tongue. "They went through the flood on foot." An apt similitude of our passage through many overflooding streams, and notably the river of death, which shall be cut off as we approach. Whenever the floods rise, remember that God can turn seas into dry land, and cleave paths through the mighty waters.

Again, "Tried as silver is tried." The alloy must be eliminated, the impurity removed. Nothing less than fire will cleanse and melt. Heart and flesh fail in the ordeal, but we must remember that it is only because we are so precious that it is worth God's while to pass us through such searching discipline.

Again, "Through fire and through water." This is the way to the place of abundance. It is only as we suffer that we reign, as we bear the extremes of heat and cold that we become God's Bessemer steel, for as you may know, the toughest steel is wrought by exposing metal first to the extreme of fire, then of cold water repeatedly.

Out of all this deep experience comes finally the mellow autumn of life, in which we look back and find that God had heard, had attended to our prayer, had visited us with mercy. Blessed be God.

SATURDAY, April 21. Psa. lxvii.

Bless us, say God's saints. Be merciful unto us and bless us: cause thy face to shine upon us. Why? For your delectation only, because his blessing is so sweet, because the sunshine of his face banishes the winter of murmuring and discontent? No; but that his way be known upon earth, his saving health among all nations, and that the peoples may be glad and sing for joy. Abraham was blessed that in him all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and we may well desire to be replenished with all that God can give, if only his saving health may be known among all nations. The world little realizes how much it gains from the prosperity of the Church.

But that is not all. Just as the Church reacts upon the world of men, from amongst whom she has been redeemed, so when the peoples praise God the earth yields her increase. There is a close connection between man and the world he inhabits. When he is virtuous and temperate, the travail of the earth is lessened, and her scars are healed. She is no longer constrained to bear the opium poppy, or the barley for strong drink. She is no longer seamed with the graves of her children smitten down while life is strong and young.

What an extremely beautiful title—our own God.

> Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
> Who never to himself hath said,
> This is my own . . .

There is a sense of proprietorship when we can put these tiny words before any object whatever. But we must be his, before we can call Him ours. Let the brook hear the call of the ocean, and yield herself to it.

Side-Lights of the War.

THE grand mountains and peaceful valleys of fair Natal are echoing with the roar of artillery and the rattle of musketry. Many of its homesteads have been looted, crops destroyed, and cattle taken by the Boers. The graves of our brave soldiers and volunteers are to be found on its hillsides, while in the old country many homes are desolate and hearts broken.

The transports arrive, and in a few hours the troops are all landed and entrained. Crowds are present to give our soldiers a parting cheer, which is taken up again and again as the train, filled to overflowing, passes through Durban. We can see them pass from the verandah of our Mission House, if in open trucks, with helmets lifted upon their rifles; if in carriages, crowding to the windows, answering to the shouts of the crowds.

Permission having been obtained, we have had the privilege of visiting the Castle Liner Lismore Castle, which has been turned into a hospital ship, and is full of wounded and sick soldiers. It is beautifully fitted up, and the comfort of the sufferers studied in every way. On the deck we found the convalescents. As we went from one to another we were able to give away booklets, and speak a word or two for the Master. Two dozen fishing lines quite won the hearts of the men and helped to break the monotony for them.

We were much cheered to find some of the lads on the Lord's side. One told us how he had come back to Him on board the transport on his way out. Another, a Gordon Highlander, in that memorable charge at Elandslaagte, and having recovered from his wounds was going to the front again. We stood by the side of one dear fellow, mortally wounded. "I am very bad," he said. "But do you know the Everlasting Arms are under you?" we inquired. "Please, sir, you must not talk to him; he is very ill," said an orderly, and we reluctantly passed on. He belonged to the Devons, and we heard afterwards that he was a Christian; his last words were, "I am going home."

HAD FACED DEATH

We spoke with two who had had remarkable escapes. One was crossing a short flat when a Mauser bullet smashed a finger on his left hand; a minute afterwards, on the same hand, another finger was smashed, the bullet passing out at the back of his hand. He listened very tenderly as we engaged his thoughts upon the great salvation. Another man had a still more wonderful escape. A bullet had passed through his ear, destroying the drum and coming out at the back. He was healed and just going to the front again.

One poor fellow, a reserve man, was down with pneumonia, and too ill to write home. An offer to write to his wife was very gladly accepted, and

OPENED THE WAY FOR CONVERSATION.

"I am a good living man, sir," he said; "but I know that won't do," and his tears told us he was a seeker. Passing on, we came to another, a Connaught man. He was a child of many prayers, but a slave to drink. He knew the Belfast Soldiers' Home well, and our good friends, Miss Somers and Miss Ella Potter. "I have tried it," he said; "it is no good, but I am sure the ladies at the Home are praying for me."

Our booklets were gladly taken, and we were able to leave a good supply of envelopes and paper, which were greatly appreciated. The patients are being constantly removed, and fresh ones taking the vacant cots, so in this ship alone we have splendid opportunities. The Marked Testaments, so much used of God, have been most acceptable.

The desolating influences of the war are to be seen in many a colonial home. The other day we rode to one of our Natal farmhouses, hidden away in a gum and wattle grove. Only a few weeks before two sons of a widowed mother left for the front, as volunteers. They were blessed with a praying mother. Two weeks previously the younger brother had become serious and thoughtful, and this was followed by unmistakable signs of conversion. His letters home expressed the change. During a sortie from Ladysmith he was struck down, a Mauser bullet going through his neck. He was carried to the hospital by his comrades, and soon passed away. His brother has been shot in the leg, which has been amputated. It was blessed to see the peaceful face of this old saint, and hear her speak of her boy as being safe.

Yet another scene. In a town in which we have often preached, and in a home we know, a Christian mother prays for her boy fighting in the ranks of the Boers. She was drawn out in much prayer that morning, and asked the Lord to give her a word of comfort. "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee; and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee," was the word given.

That day the battle of Elandslaagte was fought, and her son was chased by some Lancers. Coming to the steep bank of a river he threw himself off his horse, rolled down the bank, and threw himself into the swollen waters. He was taken safely across, and escaped. Surely our God is a prayer-hearing God.

Notes from New York.

MR. BALLON, of the McAuley Cremorne Mission, told me last night that his work is in an extremely satisfactory condition, so much so that plans of extension are in the air. A home for women will shortly be opened under the superintendence of Mrs. Ballon, and a good deal of the necessary money is also in hand for a new building for the Mission itself. Mrs. Ballon mentioned one curious circumstance that had come to her notice a day or two before, which shows the moral, or rather immoral, character of the district in which the Mission is situated. Although New York is "full" of day nurseries for the children of poor mothers, not a single one is to be found in the whole of what is termed the "Tenderloin" district — a plain proof of the dearth of families there—of even poor people.

Dr. Louis Klopsch, the enterprising proprietor of the Christian Herald, includes, among other items for the good of his fellow-citizens, the finding of the money needed for the spiritual side of the Bowery Mission. This Mission carries on an excellent work in the saving of both souls and bodies right in the very vortex of the deepest maelstrom of vice and woe in this city. About three months ago Mr. J. G. Hallimond, a gentleman of wide experience of evangelistic work in American cities, became superintendent, and the results of his energy and experience in aggressive effort are already both seen and felt. Borneo.—A correspondent writes:—"At a recent meeting of the Royal Geographical Society I heard an interesting letter from Northern Borneo, but was sorry to learn that there were no missionaries in this part, although it has been under British government for sixty years. At present Mr. Charles Hose is resident in the Baram district, Sarawak. There is no mission work of any sort in that locality. It seems sad that our Christian Government should not have sent the Gospel to these intelligent, though un-Christianized, people during these sixty years."

TOPIC FOR APRIL 15.

"The Bread of Life" (John vi. 24-40).

THE miracles which John relates were signs. In them we see the deep significance of our Lord's life, always reaching back from the outward and visible to the unseen and eternal. The Lord longed and longs that the hunger of the body should have its analogue in that of the soul.

We must first obtain Bread. For most men this must be by the sweat of the brow; but for the Israelites, whose table was spread in the wilderness, there was no exertion beside that of gathering. Yet even those who work hardest, and eat their bread in the sweat of their brow, must remember that it is God who supplies seed to the sower and bread for food. What our Father does in the physical, He does also in the spiritual realm. He taught our souls to hunger, and gave his Son as the Bread of Life. As corn is indigenous to the world, so the Gospel suits the need of all men.

We must masticate our Food. Good health depends upon deliberate eating. Here we have a deep spiritual lesson. The word of Christ must abide in us. We must meditate on it. We must roll the promises under our tongue as a sweet morsel. It is impossible to grow strong if we always take our meals standing at restaurant bars, listening for the bell which announces the express; and it is equally impossible to soul-health if we read our Bibles hastily in the mornings, snatching the first morsel that offers itself, and slurring over our fellowship with God in prayer.

We must assimilate our Food. The wonderful inner economy is intended to reduce our articles of diet to such a form that they may be easily appropriated by our system. After some hours of chemical process the food is reduced to a whitish liquid, which pours through the great ducts, and as it passes each part of the body appropriates nourishment for its special need. Here it makes bone, there nails or hair, and again, the grey matter of the brain, or the delicate tissue of the nerves. And thus, through the enriched blood, the whole system becomes vigorous. So we must assimilate the Bread of God, and so Christ will become the nutriment which each part of our moral life demands. The same Lord Jesus will be strength for moments of endurance, patience for irritation, meekness for affront. All we want is in Him, and all that is in Him waits to be appropriated and applied.

We must take our meals regularly if we would be in health. To pass over the time when we are accustomed to take a meal is most injurious. Better take a crust of bread than nothing. Here again we have a suggestion well worthy of attention. We must feed regularly on Christ. It isn't enough to have one good meal in the week and to starve for the rest of the time.

To adopt a habit of morning, afternoon, and evening prayer in early life; to be careful to read the Bible before we turn to the dissipating columns of the paper or story-book; to read deliberately, regularly, and in due course from cover to cover, are rules of indispensable value. In this lesson, notice that coming to Christ, and believing on Him, are one and the same (v. 35). Again, all those whom the Father gives come; therefore those who come are included in the Father's gift. You may know that you are one of the elect if you have come. Lastly, that He who offers Himself as the Bread of Life, so imparts his nature to those who believe that they begin to live in his own life. Death has no power over them, and amid the awful scenes with which this age shall close, they shall be shut up with Him, as Noah's family in the ark that floated across the deluge. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The President's London Meetings will be held on Good Friday in the City Temple, commencing with a sermon at 3 p.m. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor will be amongst the other speakers. The programme throughout the day will be the same as that adopted in every city and town which Mr. Meyer has visited in his presidential campaign.

All difficulties in the way of securing Alexandra Park and Palace as the site of the World's Convention, July 13-20, appear now to have been cleared away. The Great Central Hall will accommodate upwards of 10,000 persons. At least one of the American tents, seating upwards of 9,000 people, will be erected in the Park.

A Nottingham Endeavourer, who was called to the front, gained permission to hold daily prayer meetings on the deck of the transport on which he sailed, and held them with such good effect that, before the steamer reached Capetown, the little company of professing Christians doubled its number, and formed a C.E. Society, which has since carried on its meetings at Modder River.

A Tour in Gerona.

I RECENTLY visited Figueras, partly for health, and also to see something of the work for God being carried on by Pastor Rodriguez and his devoted wife. The Province of Gerona, in which Figueras is situated, was well chosen for mission work. Political feeling is intense, and the bigotry of the one party against the Gospel is sufficient to induce the other to look on it more favourably. Certain it is that the work has been most successful.

In Figueras, a town of 20,000 inhabitants, substantial mission premises have been built, consisting of a hall capable of holding 400. At the back of it is another extensive building, destined for the hospital; but, as yet, sufficient funds have not been forthcoming for it to be opened, so the building is used for the Medical Mission, which is much appreciated by the people. Whilst waiting for the doctor, the patients, who come from all parts of the Province, have the Gospel simply put before them, and on leaving each receives a Scripture portion, or tract. Two doctors are employed, one for the dispensary, the other for the treatment of patients in their own homes. The average attendance is from 2,000 to 3,000 a year; and since the work was started, the number of visits made by patients has been 26,185.

The public services in the Figueras Mission Hall are well attended, notwithstanding that it is absolutely forbidden to give any indication outside as to the purpose to which the building is devoted. Therefore, the growth of the congregation must be entirely due to the interest which the services have produced. The work amongst the children is most promising. In Figueras and out-stations, there are altogether six schools. In the former, the attendance is about 100. These schools are conducted in a most orderly way, and the pupils seem extremely happy and interested and are evidently very well advanced in both secular and religious knowledge. Outside Figueras there are and in these an important work is being done by itinerating evangelists, who scatter much "precious seed." Pastor Rodriguez finds great difficulty in renting suitable premises, both in towns, such as Gerona, and in outlying districts, some of which we visited, and the locales are neither sanitary nor suitable for mission work. In spite of the drawbacks, the services were always crowded. It was remarkable to notice the esteem in which Pastor Rodriguez is held wherever we went. One instance out of many will suffice. Returning to town after dark, our carriage stopped at the entrance, to be searched by the Custom House officer. When that official, lantern in hand, recognized the pastor, he simply shook hands, accepted our assurance that we carried nothing liable to duty, and directed the coachman to drive on. To anyone acquainted with the Spanish Customs, this means much—more than the bare facts imply.

Christians desiring to escape the rigour of an English spring, could not do better than visit Figueras, where they can count upon a time of real profit, physical and spiritual. The impression left upon our minds was, that the work being done by the Figueras Mission is of a very real, spiritual character, and that it is worthy of the hearty support of English Christians.

I ought to mention the need for further lady volunteers. At present there are three English ladies at work with Madame Rodriguez, their duties being to visit the people in their homes, conduct mothers' meetings, and shop-girls' classes. Whole-hearted volunteers, who can pay a guinea a week, which will cover all cost of living, will be heartily welcomed, and will find a valuable field for service.—Yours truly,

Loughton, Essex. A. Boake.

THE LATE

Professor John R. Sweney.

THE ministry of song has taken up an increasingly important place of late years in connection with religious movements amongst the masses.

It would appear that the Lord's people have been perhaps a little slow to recognise what a hold is obtained on the popular mind by new and easily singable words of pathos or appeal, wedded to some striking melody. True, the golden words, the of the Psalms of David, might well have stimulated thought upon the subject. We are reminded, too, of the power which political songs have exercised upon national feeling. To go no further back, the West Country ballad, "Trelawney," shook the throne of James II. Of "Lillibullero," Lord Wharton, the author, opined that it was the means of singing that same stubborn James out of his kingdom. "Malbrook" doubtless inspired the Grenadiers of Louis XIV. to resist the conquerer of Ramilies and Blenheim. The armies of the Republic, under Hoche and Bonaparte, gloried in the inspiration of the "Marseillaise." At the present day England rings with a jingle that has called many thousands of pounds into a fund for the relief of the wives and children of soldiers at the front.

To return to the more congenial topic of "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs," what Evangelical Christian who can recall the Moody and Sankey revival does not remember how Mr. Sankey's solos came as a kind of revelation of the extent to which singing in the power of the Spirit convicts sinners and stimulates saints. From that day Christian people have gladly welcomed the appearance not only of good singers, but of men and women with gifts for the composition of telling

VERSES AND MUSIC.

The demand stimulated many writers, especially in America. The works of Mr. Sankey himself, of Messrs. James McGranahan, George C. Stebbins, and others, "are familiar in our mouths as household words."

Worthy of record among the names of these brethren is that of Professor John R. Sweney, an elder in the Third Presbyterian Church, Chester, Pa., who, it will be remembered, passed away on April 10 of last year. He had remarkable gifts as a musician. He published, as Sunday school books, "Songs of Love and Praise," "Radiant Songs," and "Winnowed Hymns." He wrote the music of "The new, new song," "Beulah Land," and "There is sunshine in my soul." He was also the editor of several anthem books. It was, however, as a musical leader that Professor Sweney chiefly excelled, imparting his religious enthusiasm to the great audiences that he led in important meetings and conventions in various parts of the United States. He was well known too in connection with his musical leadership, extending over many years, of the in Philadelphia, one of the largest and best organized schools in the world, and with which the name of Mr. John Wanamaker is closely associated.

Professor Sweney was also an industrious worker in Christian Endeavour circles. At the convention held in July, 1896, at Washington, D.C., there were some 20,000 Endeavourers gathered, and one of the chief features of the meetings was the hymn teaching and leading of the esteemed Professor. He was in demand for camp meetings, and will be readily remembered by those who have been privileged to attend the well-known Ocean Grove meeting ground. His memory will surely be cherished as an American worthy and a useful contributor to the musical requirements of Christian work.

From Klondyke Gold Fields.

THE Association for the free distribution of the Scriptures has been encouraged by the receipt of news of good fruit attending efforts to circulate the Word of God in out-of-the-way places, where it is unobtainable otherwise, and often greatly valued by those who receive it. A letter just received from an earnest worker far up country, at Skagway, describes the distribution of a number of the Red-Marked Testaments, which were sent out last spring, and got safely over the snow ranges before the winter set in and the roads were again closed. The writer is the field secretary of the Arctic Committee of the Y.M.C.A. in the North-West Territories. He says:—

"The marked Testaments arrived in good condition, and their distribution thus far has afforded me much pleasure. I value this acquisition to our work more than I can tell; the help that they have been is simply inestimable. In this I speak not simply for myself and our work, but for the missions and various churches who have been permitted to use same. I have even found among our Christian workers—those who have never before realized the advantage of a marked Bible—who used the little Testaments in preference to their own Bibles, with the result that they are learning to mark their own Bibles.

"One young man, who said he never could get interested in the Bible, as he found it to be dull and uninteresting, was given one of the marked Testaments, and he never stopped reading until he had read every marked passage, and then he said it was a new book to him. We have used discretion in giving them out, so that every book has been made to tell. We never send a new convert up country without placing one of these in his hands."

God or the world must be neglected at parting time, for then is the time of trial.—Bunyan.

Paris Exhibition and the Lord's Day.—The Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association has organized a memorial to the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition from upwards of fifty English exhibitors, expressing disapproval of the clause requiring the display of exhibits on Sundays, "contrary to our national custom, and contrary to the practice of many English exhibitors at past exhibitions." The memorial asks that the clause may be withdrawn. Several exhibitors have expressed their determination to refuse compliance with the Sunday opening regulations.

After the Campaign.

INTERVIEW WITH

Rev. Robert Howie, M.A., Govan.

IT was a pleasure to meet Rev. Robert Howie a few days ago, and to hear from him something of the Glasgow Evangelistic Campaign, as seen through the eyes of one whose whole heart has been in aggressive home mission work for a generation. As a divinity student, he caught the fire of the Revival of 1859-60, and the writer has heard from his lips soul-stirring narratives of incidents which came within his own experience during these eventful years.

Ordained to the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland in the year 1860, Mr. Howie was at once placed in pastoral charge of the famous "Wynd" Church, situated in the very heart of the slum district of Glasgow. The experiment of placing so much responsibility on a young man at the beginning of his career was recognised to be attended by considerable risk; but the outcome has long ago shown that the finger pointing the way was that of the Lord Himself. Though a student all his life, the "few years of quiet," said to be necessary to every young minister, have never come to Mr. Howie. After nearly four years in the Wynd, he took up the task of establishing one of its offshoots—Trinity—and, eight years later, removed again to Govan, to gather together a fresh congregation from among the rapidly increasing artisan population. Like the others, this last effort has been crowned with success. At the ordinary day services on Sabbath the congregation requires all the space available; and one who has frequently occupied the pulpit assures us that he knows no other church in which the same proportion of the audience is composed of men of mature years.

Besides being the convener of the Home Mission Committee of his own Church, Mr. Howie has room in his heart for any scheme to carry the Gospel among the masses of our population. As soon as the Evangelistic Campaign was proposed it appealed strongly to his sympathies; and one felt that, when he used the word "we" in regard to what was being planned or done, it was as feeling a full share of the responsibility.

"Has the Campaign fulfilled your expectations," we ventured to ask, "in view of your past experience of aggressive effort and times of blessing?" "Yes, it has," he replied. "The circumstances have been peculiarly adverse. On the one hand, the weather has been particularly unfavourable, but the main distracting element has been the war. On the whole, however, a large number of people have been brought under the preaching of the Gospel."

Passing on to speak of conversions, he added, "I never care to deal with numbers. There has not been a revival; but then we could not plan a revival. All we did was to arrange aggressive work on a larger scale than usual, and there have been many professions of conversion, especially among the young. The circumstances have been, from a spiritual point of view, entirely different from such a time as we had in 1859-60. Whoever was the speaker then, we had crowded meetings, with many passing into the Kingdom, and a general impression about divine things all over the community. We have not had these in the same degree this winter, and could scarcely expect to have."

"Do you think that the nature of the work was clearly understood at the outset?" "No. I have felt all through that perhaps we did not recognize sufficiently how completely a time of blessing must be the work of the Spirit of God alone. It may be that we trusted too much to the arm of flesh. However, some of the meetings have been remarkably well attended all through.

"What was your experience in Free St. Mary's?" "In my own church, Mr. McNeill's meetings were crowded every evening, but I understand these were the largest gatherings he has had in any church."

"In what way were you impressed with what came under your notice of Mr. McNeill's general meetings?"

"The meetings in St. Andrew's Hall were quite phenomenal. There were seventeen Sabbath evening gatherings in succession; and to have that great building crowded week after week, with the class who attended, is itself a remarkable fact."

From Photograph by Messrs. T. and R. Annan and Sons, Glasgow.

"Then you think the attempts to reach special classes in St. Andrew's Hall and elsewhere have been successful?" "Yes. The audiences in the Hall were largely made up of West-End people not often seen in evangelistic meetings. The special effort made in Pollokshields to reach a large and influential class, was equally encouraging. Five or six hundred men and women came out to hear the Gospel preached at three o'clock in the afternoon. The five weeks of meetings for business men, and three weeks for men and women, were as remarkable as anything we have had in the city of Glasgow. Then the three weeks' mission for 'strollers' must have produced a very widespread interest in divine things."

"Do you think that any lessons might be learned as to the choice of men to lead such a work?" "Yes, I think a mistake was made in using so many men as evangelists who, however effective as preachers, were not known in Glasgow. I refer to lay evangelists as well as to ministers. I think it would have been better if even well-known Glasgow ministers had been chosen; and that, humanly speaking, they would have done quite as effective service, if taken to parts of the city different from their permanent fields of labour, as some of those brought from a distance. The expense would have been less, and another advantage would have been gained in that the names of those conducting the meetings would at once have been well known."

"Do you think that the undenominational basis materially strengthened the movement?" "The attempt was very good in theory, and had certain important advantages in bringing together the ministers and members of different churches at the earlier stages; but it largely broke down as time passed. Even when ministers were enthusiastic about co-operation, they did not always find their congregations willing to give up the work in which they are engaged from week to week to go and help in another church. In my own congregation we suspended our weekly prayer-meeting while the Campaign missions were going on in the district; and we find that it has suffered through being discontinued. It is a considerable sacrifice for a congregation to give up for a time its regular work. Personally, I was laid aside during a part of the winter through illness, due to the efforts made at an earlier part of the Campaign, and so was unable to be present as much as I desired at the meetings held in other churches."

"Have you had any other experience of 'united missions'?" "Yes. In that connection the experience on this occasion is exactly similar to ours a good many years ago in the Free Presbytery, when we tried to group together our own congregations in various districts throughout the city. We have always found in such movements that what we gained in extension we lost in intensity."

"Have any lessons for permanent work been brought home to you?"—"The main one, I believe, is that we need to do better the proper regular work of the church from year to year. One drawback of all special efforts is that they are apt to be followed by a reaction; and unless the churches set themselves carefully to gather up the fruits of this movement, we shall not reap the same benefit as might have been the case after steady persistent work by each congregation on its own lines, and with evangelistic meetings under its own auspices."

"How would you describe the place of evangelistic missions in connection with a regular congregation?"—"I believe in the necessity for such series of meetings from time to time, as fitted to bring to decision a good many people who have been in a lethargic state. You have the advantage that, with the reiteration night after night of Gospel truth, you are producing a greater impression than is possible when you have only the ordinary Sabbath services, with one meeting during the week."

"Would any change in the arrangements commend itself to you in view of future efforts in Glasgow or elsewhere?"—"Generally, perhaps, we attempted too much. If we had to begin over again, I believe we should do so with fewer centres. The Campaign proper closed at the end of March; but Mr. McNeill intends to carry on work in a large wooden erection, to hold at least 3,000 persons, which may be moved to different important centres, giving a month to each, and being ready to follow the leadings of Providence. The importance of a free hand in the conducting of such work was evident from our experience in Govan. Mr.

McNeill and the people were equally anxious that he should remain there for a longer period; but the arrangements of the committee made necessary his removal to another district. He left Govan just when a widespread impression had been produced, which would apparently have been much more lasting and extensive if he had remained."

"How long would you have wished the mission to be continued?"—"As long as the meetings remained crowded. I believe Mr. McNeill wishes, in view of that experience, to resume work in Govan with this wooden building. Then the effort will be more thoroughly dissociated from any church."

"Do you think the importance attached to the work among children is borne out by experience?"—"Its value will depend very much on how it is followed up. But if even a mere fraction of those who have made profession turn out to be genuine converts, and we are assured that very many of them are, there has been a very great work of grace. Among the lessons we have learned is to use the black-board and the lantern to a greater extent when speaking to children, for they are impressed even more through the eye than the ear."

"Have any new methods worthy of notice been introduced?"—"We did nothing in connection with the mission in my own church which I have not done again and again."

"In what direction do you think the attention of the Church would be specially turned at present?"—"The quickening of Christians is perhaps the first important matter to occupy our attention. That attained, there would be a passion for souls which would lead to persistent efforts, not only on special occasions, but from one end of the year to the other, and from year to year, to win men and women for Christ."

"If the churchless population of Glasgow is to be reached, along what lines do you think the work should be planned?"—"We must have a far greater attention to details, by personal house-to-house visitation, and by the conducting of small kitchen meetings by office-bearers and members of churches; in short, we must have a revival of the territorial system advocated by Dr. Chalmers. The greater attention given to that system was a remarkable outcome of the work of grace in 1859-1860 in many parts of Scotland. In a country parish with which I was familiar twenty-three weekly meetings were at once established, and the effects continue to the present day. It was also a noted feature of the Wynd Mission that the whole district was permeated by small meetings in the homes of the people; and these, more than anything else, will reach a class of the community who are not touched by the largest placards announcing meetings to be addressed by the best-known evangelists. In recent years we have been contented with a wholesale way of doing mission work, instead of attending to the quiet, unostentatious form of aggressive effort which is implied in the Master's words—'Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that My House may be full.' In a word, we need to depend more upon the aggressive than upon the attractive method. Those who come to large gatherings are generally people already impressed, and in a susceptible frame of mind; but the more difficult part of the problem is to move the spiritually inert mass. As Mr. Moody put it, we must go to them, for they will not come to us."

"How far do you think these ends have been gained by the Campaign?"—"I think a number of our people are more in earnest than they were about soul-winning. Though we do not see the difference yet, it will tell as time passes. The war has distracted the attention of even Christian workers, and we need a somewhat different atmosphere created by the Spirit of God in order to have such an enthusiasm as we desire. But I believe what has been done during the past months will tell in that direction when quieter times come."

Many friends of Mr. Howie will learn with pleasure that the senatus of the University of Glasgow, his own alma mater, has announced its intention of conferring on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. ERNIN.

Scottish Notes.

A WELL attended conference in connection with the Lanarkshire Christian Union was held in Motherwell, a few days ago, Mr. John Colville, M.P., president, in the chair. The subject was "The Cross of Christ," and among those who took part were Rev. William Muir (Blairgowrie), Rev. J. E. Houston (Cambuslang), Mr. James Macfarlane (Evangelist), and Mr. Andrew Ferrie (Glasgow). The report showed a total of 2,013 meetings conducted.

At the Presbytery of Ayr, last week, Rev. Mr. Duncan spoke out on the necessity of dealing with the opening of ice-cream shops on Sabbath, an evil which is becoming clamant all over the country. He said these places were more than temptations to children. There is abundant evidence that shebeening is carried on in them, and there is reason to suspect that they are sources of greater evil still. He hoped that before long something like national action would be taken with a view to legislation on the subject.

It will fall to the coming General Assembly of the Church of Scotland to decide on the proposal made last May for the amalgamation the two official publications, Life and Work and the Mission Record. It is desired to issue an entirely new monthly paper which might supersede the present magazines, while at the same time retaining the best features of both.

At the Presbytery of Annan last week, Dr. Crichton reported a decrease of five in the number of Bible classes during the year, and said that ministers of other churches are having a similar experience. Last year he said he was obliged to discontinue his own class through the absolute paucity of numbers. He urged that earnest attention should be given to the subject, that some means might be devised for bringing their young people together and arousing their interest.

Last Friday, Professor W. W. White delivered in Glasgow the first of a series of Bible lectures, the course being intended to extend till April 20. Mr. John Anderson, Principal of the Bible Training Institute, presided, and welcomed Dr. White to Glasgow, remarking that he came with a wide reputation as an instructor on Scriptural subjects. The subject of the opening lecture was the Gospel of John.

The resignation by Professor T. M. Lindsay, of the Foreign Mission Convenership of the Free Church of Scotland, removes from the front rank one who has done much to widen and deepen missionary interest in Scotland. It is matter for additional regret that Dr. Lindsay has been led to take this step under the advice of his medical adviser.

Children of Sorrow.

AMONG the social forces which have contributed both to inform the public mind and to mould opinion as to the requirements of the poor, the Ragged School Union has a familiar and worthy record. To its wise Christian philanthropy, associated for so long with the name of the noble-minded Shaftesbury, the nation is also a debtor. As the years have passed by and the School Boards have undertaken the work of teaching, it has continued and extended its spiritual and Samaritan work. Among other departments its and Poor Children's Aid branches are deservedly esteemed as valuable auxiliaries to elementary schools. Indeed, the ragged little children of slumdom would fare ill but for the Union. The organization has many equipments for the far-reaching ministry which it has undertaken. Its staff, under the large-hearted direction of Mr. John Kirk, includes a goodly number of ladies and gentlemen who gladly find their chief occupation in visiting suffering children in all parts of the Metropolis. Moreover, the system of personal inquiry and oversight is so complete as to prevent imposture.

The scene at the boot and clothing distributing depôt at the Union offices is full of interest, as the stream of applications pours in day by day, and the industrious workers select and pack the articles required. A glance at the stack of "forms" reveals the story of many a terrible struggle with misery; the curtain that hides the sorrows of the great under-world is drawn aside. Here, for example, is an application for "boots and two vests" for a delicate little seven-year-old girl, who lives in a noted East-End slum. The particulars are—"Father's earnings, twelve shillings a week. He could earn good money, but suffers from chronic pleurisy. There are six in family; the mother is ill, and it is a very deserving case." Again, a letter from a South London Mission worker describes "a family of father, mother, and six children, the oldest being nine years old. The baby is doubtless brought on as a consequence of poverty. The next child has rickets very badly. The others are without boots or socks, and are half naked. The father has been ill for six months with abscesses on his leg (he has only one leg). He is a tailor, out of work, but hopes to get employment at an early date. They were without food or firing, but appeared to be steady and deserving people. I thought, if you should have some boots and socks at your disposal, it would be the blessing they most need. If they had boots they could go to the school and the free dinners."

Attention is directed by other forms to that large class, the workmen who are disabled by physical injury. Not a day passes but some accident of the kind occurs. A labourer falls from some scaffolding, or a street hawker, as he stands in the gutter, is knocked down by a passing vehicle. A crowd gathers; there is a cry, "Give him air," and another, "A policeman has gone for the ambulance." Presently the sufferer is wheeled away to the hospital, and the mob dissolves. Probably but few consider what the accident means to

but the Ragged School Union is good enough to show us. "This man," writes a lady worker, referring to the father of a family of nine, "has met with two accidents, first breaking his leg and then his collar-bone. He is a labourer, doing odd jobs. This week his earnings are nil, and his wife's seven shillings. They are a very poor family." Later the same lady wrote: "I never saw any one more thankful than the mother was when I gave her the clothes. The children are attending school." The children of poor widows are also remembered. Mr. Kirk notes a case in which boots and a frock were wanted for a girl of twelve, very slender and delicate. Her father has been dead seven years. There are six in family. The mother has three days' work per week at 1s. 6d. per day. "Very industrious, a thoroughly deserving case," says a School Board mistress. There is a little fellow, too, less than six years old, whose father is a blind man, securing a precarious living by

SINGING IN THE STREETS.

There is another lad in this family, who, although partially blind and mentally deficient, acts as "leader" to his father. A pitiful household indeed, and one wherein the "knicker suit, two shirts, two pairs hose, and pair boots" must have appeared a delightful parcel. Certainly they were needed, since the lady visitor had written: "This child cannot go out or to school. When I saw him he had only one garment on, and the mother said she had nothing else for him."

Pathetic cases might be multiplied. Imagine a worthy man struggling to maintain his family of five in decency on eight shillings a week! "This," observes a lady worker, "is a very deserving case—very clean, and the mother has to work very hard also to keep home together. The child for whom a frock is asked is a cripple." In another instance a lady asked for a night-dress in which "to lay out a dead child."

Although the work has been carried on quietly and undemonstratively, lest the demands should grow beyond the possibility of supply, a great amount of useful help has been accorded to deserving people. In order to maintain it help is sought from those who may be able to give material for making up, or to form sewing classes; but the particular requirements of the hour are new frocks for girls of eight to fifteen years of age, underclothing, and boys' suits and boots. Mr. Kirk's address is 32, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.

Children's Scripture Union.

THIS flourishing organization celebrated its twenty-first birthday on Tuesday, April 3. At a largely attended meeting held in Exeter Hall in the afternoon, when the chair was occupied by Rev. E. A. Stuart, the president, Mr. H. Hutchinson (organizing secretary) reviewed the work and progress of the Union from its inauguration up to the present time. The Children's Scripture Union, as its name implies, was established with the special object of securing on the part of young people the habitual reading and study of God's Word. There are about 512,000 members at home, 56,000 in the colonies, and 88,500 in foreign countries. Moreover, kindred societies at work respectively amongst young women, girls, railwaymen, policemen, and foundry boys have adopted the daily readings appointed by the Union. The speaker urged his hearers to establish branches, where these did not already exist, in their different localities, and so further extend the much-needed work that the Union was seeking to carry on.

Rev. E. A. Stuart, in the course of his address, enlarged, to the interest and profit of his audience, upon four Scripture metaphors—the mirror to show themselves, the laver to cleanse their ways, the lamp to guide their feet, and the food, the sustenance, to enable them to walk in the pathway of God's commandments.

Rev. J. F. Sheldon, Vicar of Cromer, referred to the importance of the work now being done, and added that half the curates who had served under him since he became an incumbent had been the direct fruits of the Children's Special Service Mission, the well-known agency affiliated with the Union—which carries on its operations at various seaside places during the summer months.

After Mr. Eugene Stock (C.M.S.) had referred to the good work accomplished by the Scripture Union which he himself had personally witnessed in India and Australia, Rev. Bernard Herklots spoke of the earnest efforts that are being put forth in different parts of India.

Alderman Belsey, J.P., presided at the evening meeting, which was also largely attended, and interesting and encouraging addresses were given.

The Late Mr. J. P. Dickerson.—Mr. W. J. Chatten, of 8, Speranza Street, Plumstead, will be glad to hear from any relative of this departed evangelist.

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.

WITH the hearty co-operation of a band of earnest workers, Mrs. Anderson has had the joy of witnessing the development and increasing usefulness of the Cage Lane Mission. Her untiring devotion and unremitting energy as director of its movements have won the practical sympathy of an ever-widening circle of interested friends; while numbers of Christian workers scattered in various cities and towns owe their initiation into the higher life and service to the influence of the Mission.

The annual report presents many points for thanksgiving and congratulation. The agencies of the Mission have been maintained with aggressive earnestness, and are in a flourishing condition. The Gospel services, both in the hall and in the open air, have been productive of much good, while the efforts put forth in the direct interests of the children have resulted in an ingathering of many young lives.

At the anniversary of the Mission on Thursday evening there was a large gathering of sympathisers. Colonel F. Roberts presided, and in the course of a few remarks exhorted those who had undertaken to follow Christ to be careful as to their daily walk and conduct, that no stumbling-block be placed in the way of those anxious to find the way of life.

Colonel Yates, speaking of what the Mission had already achieved, said there was yet much more to be done, which could only be accomplished as a result of abiding in Christ. He emphasized the necessity of holding constant communion with God, and urged the responsibility of Christians for those who were in spiritual darkness.

Captain Dawson gave a helpful and encouraging address to the teachers in the Sunday School. Their work could not fail to accomplish its end if entered upon in the spirit of fervent prayer. They had the promise of the Master—"Lo, I am with you alway."

Several other brief addresses were given, and a happy and enthusiastic meeting terminated with the Benediction.

London's Young Women.

THE annual meeting of the London Y.W.C.A. was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening, April 4. It was preceded by a conversazione of which Lady Hope, the president, was hostess, and to which a large number of the committee and supporters of the Association resorted.

Mr. T. A. Denny (in the unavoidable absence of Lord Kinnaird) presided, and was supported by Messrs. Samuel Smith, M.P., S. Gurney Sheppard, the Misses Kinnaird, and many others who are interested in the welfare of the young women of the metropolis. During the past year the work had been extended in Finchley and Hampstead. A noon rest room for lady clerks had been opened in Paternoster Row, and had proved a great boon to many weary girls. New branches had been formed at Peckham, Marylebone, Cambridge Heath, and Forest Gate. The Central Institute in George Street, Hanover Square, continues to prosper. There were now fifty institutes and homes in London, for total membership of over 15,000—an increase of 1,000 during the year.

Among the various departments doing good work were that for the blind, the deaf (a number of whom, many of them friendless, had been helped), the Employment Agency, and the Convalescent and Holiday Department. About 174 factories and laundries had been regularly visited by the Factory Helpers' Union, and thus nearly 10,000 girls were reached weekly. The Park Mission, Teachers' Department, and Continental Office reported steady progress.

Lady Hope, Mrs. Menzies, and others, spoke favourably of the work; and Professor W. W. White gave an appealing address on "Is it Folly to Pray?"

Prayer will make a man cease from sin, or sin will entice a man to cease from prayer.—Bunyan.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE twenty-third annual meeting of the Liverpool Young Women's Christian Association was held on Thursday last, under the presidency of the Rev. Canon Spooner. Amongst those present were the Countess of Derby and the Lady Mayoress. The chairman, in reviewing the work, remarked that the Liverpool Y.W.C.A. was of great utility, and that it was specially beneficial in befriending young girls coming from the country into the city. There were evidences of efficiency in the way this was carried out, and the two homes were homes indeed. The scope of the association was very wide, and the girls were cared for in every way—socially, physically, and religiously.

A correspondent writes:—"There are thirteen Protestant Missions in Spain where regular Bible classes, and sometimes night-school classes are held, connected with the Y.W.C.A. From these encouraging reports are received. In one place the young women have gathered by themselves since their superintendent left, and continue the prayer meetings regularly. This year a new departure is being made in Madrid. Two good rooms have been taken and simply furnished. There are educational classes in the week-day evenings, always preceded by a brief Bible lesson and hymn-singing, and a Bible class on Sunday. The attendances are very good, and are increasing. A young Spanish lady and her sister conduct the meetings. The members are poor, being girls from the factories, shops, &c. There is also a Y.W.C.A. at Gibraltar. Further information can be obtained from Madame Gay, Continental Department of the Y.W.C.A., 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W."

The Y.M.C.A.

AN Evangelistic "At Home" was conducted by the Sunderland Association on the 4th inst. About 100 young men accepted the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbertson, and Rev. J. Macdonald gave an interesting address. Mr. J. Wright Johnson spoke upon the "Higher Life," and a number of young men expressed their desire to realize this in their own experience.

The Annual Spring Conference of the South-Eastern District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held on April 4, at East Grinstead, when a large number of delegates from the various Associations took part in the proceedings. Mr. Walter Langton, of Tunbridge Wells, occupied the chair. At the afternoon session a paper was read by Mr. Hedley G. Burrough, secretary of the Eastbourne Association, upon "How to Preserve the Proper Balance between the Secular and Religious Work of our Associations."

The anniversary of the Tunbridge Wells Association was held recently in the Great Hall. In the afternoon Rev. Mark Guy Pearse gave an interesting lecture on "Some Cornish Religious Characters." Mr. W. Langton, J.P. (President), occupied the chair at the evening meeting, which was well attended. The report, presented by Col. Wilson, the hon. secretary, showed progress.

An interesting account is to hand of the work done by the first Y.M.C.A. formed in Iceland. The work took its rise from the Association movement in Denmark, and not only is there now a prosperous branch of the Y.M.C.A., with thirty or forty members, but a similar movement has been set on foot for young women.

The Wolverhampton Y.M.C.A. started over three years ago a branch in Salop Street for young men of the poorer class. It has now thirty-two members all over sixteen years of age, and good work is being done. On the 31st ult. the annual prize distribution took place, when a large company were received by Mr. Marmaduke Odgen.

House of Rest, Finchley Road.—The address at the afternoon gathering on the 6th inst. was given by Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich. He spoke under the auspices of the Bible League, and, while confining himself chiefly to the devotional aspect of the Bible, showed how baseless and mischievous were a number of conclusions which had arisen out of the teachings of the Higher Critics.

Portsmouth Welcome Mission.—The twelfth annual report of this Mission records singular progress in spite of much opposition. A perusal of the extracts from the workers' diaries, appended to the report, will serve to indicate how varied and useful is the ministry of the institution. Much has been done for the comfort and cheer of those soldiers who, in obedience to their country's call, have gone forth amid the shout and song of the multitude, and often the heartrending cries and sobs of dear ones. To these the love of God has been made known, and not a few have enlisted in the army of the Prince of Peace. Copies of the annual report may be obtained from Mr. Thomas Hogben, Welcome Mission, Edinburgh Road, Portsmouth.

Other Lands.

From Cuba to the Bahamas.

PREVIOUS to the Spanish-American War only two Protestant Churches existed in Cuba—the Methodist Episcopal and the Baptist. The latter has achieved by far the greater results in aggressive mission work and membership. The founder, Dr. Diaz, whose portrait and life history appeared some years ago in The Christian, is a native of Cuba. He studied and took his M.D. degree at the University of Havana. Subsequently to his conversion, during a visit to the United States, he became a most earnest fisher of men. Well may his heart rejoice as, after eighteen years of faithful labour, he looks back upon the work which the Lord has permitted him to accomplish within this stronghold of Romanism. It was natural that a man of so strong a personality, and with such a keen love for Christ and freedom, could not remain on good terms with the Spanish Government. On visiting the Penitentiary, we were shown the cell where, prior to the recent war, he was kept prisoner. It contained no furniture. The weary body must seek rest on the floor. Being an American subject, the U.S. Government obtained his release.

Persecution is to the Christian faith as the storm is to the sapling, obliging the tender roots to cling firmly to the ground. Thus abundantly watered, at its beginning and more recently, Dr. Diaz's work has grown under the smile of God into a beautiful tree. The present membership of his church in Havana, with its branches in other parts of the island, is about 2,700. A large congregation can be accommodated in the "Iglesa Bautista," originally a theatre. A part of what used to be the stage, is now the platform. In the background, below the inscription in large letters, "God is Love. Cuba Para Christo," is through which, by an ingenious arrangement, a stream flows constantly; the people having the idea that running water answers more accurately to the river Jordan where John baptized.

One day we went to Matanzas, a delightful little town about eighty miles from Havana. We called upon Dr. Cova, a co-worker of Dr. Diaz, and were kindly welcomed by him and his wife and daughters, all thoroughly devoted to the cause of the Gospel. Dr. Cova said that he had kind friends in England. We inquired who they were. "I don't know them personally," was the reply, "but I receive tracts from the Stow Hill Tract Society, Newport, Mon., and also from Paternoster Buildings." When he understood who we were he became more interested in our visit.

We learned that the Cubans are eager to hear the Gospel, and that there was encouraging experience in preaching the glad news to them. The people have become tired of dead forms and rituals. They begin to cry out for the living—for the real thing—that meets their need when Masses and confessions fail. The old, old story satisfies their longing as nothing else could do.

Mr. Arnold Moody (nephew of our departed friend) whom we had the pleasure of meeting, expressed himself in the same hopeful manner. Since the war he and his coadjutor, Mr. Kelley, have been engaged in the Army and Navy Y.M.C.A. in Cuba, and hope within a short time to organize a city association. Rev. — Rioseco, a Cuban by birth, superintends a successful Presbyterian Sunday School Mission, in which children, besides elementary education, are instructed in Scripture. We dropped in one afternoon, and it did us good to hear their fresh young voices heartily sing our familiar tunes to Spanish words. All intelligent observers are aware that now is the time for the Evangelical Churches to influence the people, and the best way to do so is to get hold of the young generation.

There are as yet no public schools in the island. Only twenty-five per cent. of the population can read or write. Rome, so solicitous for the young of Protestant countries, never did anything for her own fold. There was no danger, consequently there was no need for her to trouble herself with educational schemes. To-day she is rubbing her sleepy eyes; some day she will awake and realize her threatened position, and then a subtle rivalry will begin, with all the art and cunning at her disposal, putting on philanthropic garments if need be.

There are sceptics who do not think that Cuba will ever become Christianized. They regard its people as incapable of self-government, and equally unable to assimilate the principles of Christianity. Others who know the saving power of Jesus in their own experience think differently. Cuba is in a transition epoch. The United States is giving her a fair trial in self-government, and it is to be hoped that she

WILL STAND THE TEST.

The Cuban woman, as she strikes us, is a graceful brunette with the peculiar charm of limpid eyes and an inborn capacity of tasteful dressing without looking conspicuous. The men are of middle size and demonstrative in their love for children. Rev. L. C. and Mrs. McPherson, and Rev. and Mrs. Menzes of the Christian Church Mission, who came from the United States last October, and who showed us much courtesy, said that their children proved a great blessing to them, as through them they frequently got into touch with people whom otherwise it would have been hard to approach. "A little child shall lead them."

Hearing as we reach Florida that a boat is ready to start for the capital of the Bahamas, we leave Miami the same day, and fifteen hours later behold the magnificent sight of a sea ever changing in colour, delightful, fascinating. The exquisite tints of green and blue, purple and amber, baffle description. They are caused by the white sands and the variety of sea-vegetation in these shallow waters.

Many a wreck has taken place among these islands. Last year a fearful hurricane swept their coast, tore boats from their moorings, and destroyed more than 260 lives. Such hurricanes come more or less every year, and the dread of them is

THE NIGHTMARE OF THE INHABITANTS.

What in the age of adventure and romance used to be the Eldorado of buccaneers and pirates like the dreaded Blackbeard, is now becoming more and more a fashionable winter resort. The material advantage is somewhat counteracted by the evil influence of greater prosperity. Drink is sadly on the increase, as we learn from a B.W.T.U. lady. We also regret the custom of visitors to throw pennies among a scrambling crowd of children. For the sake of a little amusement they are being demoralized and systematically trained into beggars. "Boss, give me a penny," "Missys—a penny," were the constant pleas from little children's lips, some of whom, judging from their appearance, must have been of well-to-do families.

The Union Jack is much displayed in Nassau. A young lady, leader of the Primary Presbyterian Sunday, to whom I made the remark that we thought the place to be Americanized, gave the lively reply: "Americans find us, on the contrary, very English, and we like that. The Bahamians are loyal British subjects." As a proof of it, she showed me the picture of Sir Redvers Buller. "It was of good service in an entertainment which we arranged in aid of the British War Fund. Our simple efforts raised fifty-two guineas."

Though some speak of increasing desecration of the Bahama Sunday, the Lord's Day spent at Nassau was to us the most typical English Sunday we have seen since leaving home. A perfect day, a hush of quietness over the whole town, interrupted only by the hearty singing in the churches. After service we see groups of men in their best suits, and girls in freshly-ironed white frocks quietly moving about. No yelling, no sudden outbursts of mirth. These are reserved for the week. W. The Indian Famine.

APPALLING REPORTS.

WE continue to receive from the afflicted districts a large number of appeals of a pathetic and urgent character. We give some excerpts from these communications, and trust that their effect may be to arouse increased interest and stimulate generosity.

In a letter from Ajmere, dated March 15, Mrs. Lilian E. Marks, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, gives of the condition of Rajputana:—"Hundreds have already died of hunger, thirst, and disease, thousands of homeless, naked and starving ones wander about from village to village in search of work, water, and food. Heart-rending cases have come under my own observation. No pen can exaggerate the suffering. Families separate to seek food never to meet again. Children are beaten and turned from their homes. Wives are thrust out with two or three children clinging to them. The old, the crippled, and the blind are left by the wayside to die. Hundreds of orphans wander about begging. In the market they pick up every grain that falls, and gather manure to wash out undigested grains.

"Yesterday, a boy thirteen years of age was brought to our verandah just as he was gasping his last. The emaciated body told the sad tale of starvation. A few minutes afterwards two more boys came up, and if you could only have heard the heart-rending cry of those two brothers as they gazed upon the face of the dying lad whom they had lost in their wanderings and had not seen for fifteen days. 'Have we found you only to look into your dead face?' they wailed. Their mother and father had succumbed to hunger, and these three brothers had for a time tried to keep together; but in their quest for food they were separated."

In another letter Mrs. Marks says:—"Hundreds of children are left fatherless and motherless; many have been forsaken by relatives. Roman Catholics, Mohammedans and Hindus stand ready to grab the girls—the former to convert them to their faith, and the latter two to use them for immoral purposes. The other day day a man killed his little boy, roasted and ate him. When caught, he said, 'Mera pet ne Kuja' (My stomach did it).

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

We would call special attention to an important letter from Dr. Colin S. Valentine, of the Medical Missionary Training Institute, Agra, dealing with the subject of relief. Dr. Valentine says:—"The reports that reach one of the mortality among children, and those who are unable to eat or digest the food that is supplied to them on relief works and famine camps, is simply appalling. Were consignments of the following nourishing and easily prepared food sent to missionaries and others who are interesting themselves in these poor people, I feel sure that the lives of thousands would be saved who would otherwise perish. The names of some of these foods are Mellin's Food, Nestlé's Food, Condensed Swiss Milk, Bovril, arrowroot, Indian corn-flour, &c. Ladies and gentlemen in charge of famine hospitals and orphanages could prepare these foods in a few minutes."

In carrying Dr. Valentine's idea into effect, we have communicated with a number of well-known firms; and several of these, manifesting a laudable interest in the work of relief, have agreed to supplement orders placed with them by the addition of goods by way of donation. Messrs. Allen and Hanbury, the Frame Food Company, Messrs. Clay, Paget, and Co. (Malted Farina), the Natural Food Company, Messrs. Neave, Messrs. Armour, the Infant and Invalid Food Company, Messrs. Brand (of Mayfair), Messrs. J. S. Fry and Sons, Messrs. Dunn and Hewitt, Messrs. Rowntree, Messrs. Peek, Frean, and Co., and the Bovril Company are among those who, in cordial terms, have agreed to co-operate in this way.

We hope to send in a few days 100 or more cases to Bombay to the care of Messrs. William Watson and Company, bankers. Their manager,

Mr. Carroll, who takes a personal interest in relief operations, will despatch the cases to the various famine-stricken centres.

Writing from Madras, under date February 27, Mr. G. S. Eddy, of the Indian National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s, says: "India is entering upon the greatest famine of the century. The Viceroy and Imperial Council, surveying the entire country, have said officially 'We are now face to face with famine of water, and food, and cattle, which is unprecedented in character and intensity. No Government can undertake at such a time to prevent all suffering. The aggregate famine area will be about 300,000 square miles, with a population of forty millions. There is a further population of twenty-one millions, in which more or less general distress prevails.'

"In South India I lately saw a veteran missionary. Already the crowds of hungry people were beginning to gather about his door. I saw one group of gaunt spectres, who had walked seventy-five miles, stalk silently in from the dusty road. 'Sir,' they said, 'we have no work, no food, no water; how can we live?' The missionary could only point them on, thirty miles further, where there was a little work at a penny or two a day. 'But what will become of our wives and children?' The missionary could not answer. In his own field are 10,000 Christians already suffering. He told me they were living on berries and cactus; and these could last but two weeks longer.

"In the next mission station half of the 18,000 Christians were destitute. In some places disease was following the famine. In one little village the people in forty houses had small-pox. And these people were starving. Some had eaten nothing for days. The missionary could not buy them a handful of grain in that village, for there was none to sell.

"On arriving in Bombay, I met an old acquaintance. He had just come in from his station in Gujarat. I noted down his statements in pen and ink:—'Gujarat was a fertile country, thickly populated. Now every blade of dry grass is gone. Every leaf was long ago torn from the trees for cattle, and now the trees themselves have all been cut down for wood. The whole country, once green as an English park, is now a blasted waste of barren stumps and burnt fields. Eight or nine months more of famine lie before us, even if the rain comes next monsoon. The cattle are dead. The Government officials say they find men dead along the road-side. As I passed the poor-house I saw two men lying dead in the street. They had arrived just too late. The streets were filled with children winnowing the dust, and even the manure, for particles of grain. Every day women come to me crying, and ask me to take their children from their arms, or from their empty breasts, and save them alive. Some of the poor little skeletons died after I took them. They were too far gone to be saved by food. Repeatedly the parents have offered me their children for one rupee (about 1s.). And they love them as we love ours. Children are now being offered as low as 2d. each, or for a measure of grain. The Mohammedans are buying little girls at this price.' One has to live in a heathen land to know what they will do with them. And to-day my friend goes back to fight the famine, almost empty-handed, for lack of money, and there are hundreds like him. One missionary told me she had lost her own little girl in the last famine, by going a little too far in trying to deny themselves and share their food with the natives. The missionaries are waiting and praying. The people are waiting. They are at your door. There are children still innocent who can be saved from heathenism for Christ; there are men who can be saved from the horrors of starvation; there are women and girls, still pure, who can be saved, in their desperation and helplessness, from what is worse than death. They are waiting. And our Master is waiting. It is a time to test the reality of our relationship to Him and to our fellow-men.

FAMINE CHILDREN. (The Clothes had to be borrowed by the Photographer.)

STARVED TO DEATH. (This Man died five minutes after the Photograph was taken.)

"As the College Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, my work has taken me through the famine districts of India. I have never thus asked before for help. I need nothing for myself or my own work. But in all my life I have never seen such need, or such an opportunity for doing good with money. Five shillings will save a child in an orphanage in South India for a month. Two pounds will rescue a girl during the famine. Five pounds could save a family. Twenty pounds might relieve a small village, or build an orphanage of mud or thatch, for deserted and starving children. You can send the money through the treasurer of your missionary society. I have made a list of thirty of the neediest missionaries I know, of all denominations and of isolated faith missionaries and orphanages. If you know of nowhere else to send it I will place the money where I see the greatest need, and where it will do most good, sending you a receipt and rendering an account to you when the famine is over. Communications may be sent through the secretary, National Council of Y. M. C. A.'s, Exeter Hall, Strand, or direct to me."

The appeal circulated by Lord Radstock, to which we have alluded in a recent issue, continues to receive influential support. The gist of the appeal is contained in the words: "The Government of India point out that help on the largest scale is needed for those whose caste prevents them from seeking Government relief, for comforts for the sick, for clothing the destitute, for housing orphans, and to replace cattle and industrial plant, which in many districts have almost wholly disappeared.

"On April 13 (Good Friday) we are reminded of Him who 'bare our sins' and 'carried our sorrows.' . . . Surely we are called in the light of the Cross to help, in his Name, these millions in distress for whom Christ died, and thus commend the religion of Jesus to our helpless fellow-subjects in India."

The treasurer of the movement is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard Street, who will transmit the Fund as a "Christian Offering" to the Central Committee of the Famine Fund, Calcutta.

How Thomas Conquered.

IN this chapter we are told how, when our Lord's disciples were assembled together in a room after his resurrection, they were suddenly startled by his appearing to them and saying, "Peace be unto you!" After he had left them, Thomas came in, and, when he heard what had taken place, he could not believe it.

A week later, Jesus appeared again when Thomas was there, so that Thomas was convinced that He was indeed risen, and said. "My Lord and my God!"

From these incidents we generally speak of Thomas as "doubting," and "unbelieving." Very often our failures are remembered by other people much more than the good things we do. You see, therefore, how important it is to be careful in our words and deeds, if we want our friends to think well of us.

But there is a better side than the unbelieving one to Thomas's character. You will find in John xi. 16 how deeply he loved his Master. When Jesus was going to Bethany to raise Lazarus from the dead, some of his disciples said, "Master, the Jews recently tried to stone Thee; art Thou going thither again?" But Thomas said, "Let us also go that we may die with Him." Was not that very true and noble of him?

Now you will remember that the disciples had been expecting Jesus to set up a kingdom on the earth: to be the king of it Himself; and they quarrelled among themselves "who should be the greatest" in it; and the mother of James and John came and asked Jesus that her two sons might sit, the one on his right hand and the other on his left in his kingdom.

Imagine therefore how terribly disappointed they all were when they saw Him crucified, and his dead body taken down from the cross and buried. Where were all their hopes and expectations now? All dead and buried too. No wonder the two disciples, who were walking to Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 13-21), were so sad and disheartened. But, like Thomas, they loved the Lord very dearly; and so, while their faith was severely tried and their hope seemed dead, yet their love lived, and helped them to bear the trial.

Now you will find (perhaps even now, but certainly more so later) that there are many things about Jesus and the Bible that you do not understand. I have heard of children being so disappointed because something they have prayed and hoped for has not come to them. But if you love Him, you will be so much better able to bear what you cannot understand. Thomas could not understand how Jesus could have risen from the dead; but while He lay in the tomb he loved Him; and then at last Jesus revealed Himself to him, and he bowed before Him and said: "My Lord and my God."

Dear young people, let this Easter time teach you this lesson—you will find there are many things in life and religion and your friends that you cannot understand; but though your hopes are not fulfilled and your faith is tried, ask God to keep alive your love for Him and for his Son Jesus Christ, and for your parents and teachers. And then, though, like the disciples, you pass through dark days of disappointment, you will some day be gladdened by a sense of Jesus' love and presence, as surely as the bright Easter morning followed the gloom of the days that had gone before.

Little Gustave.

(A DREAM OF EASTERTIDE.)

Methought 'twas Easter Eve, and chill
The air; the hour was late;
An angel, clad in robes of snow
Passed through Heaven's western gate.
Adown the twilight's purple stair
He came with noiseless tread,
Nor paused till close beneath his eye
A village churchyard spread.

The granite block, the marble slab,
And stately pile were there;
And many a flower the hand of love
Had brought with mindful care.
Methought the angel passed them by,
Though tenderly he smiled;
Nor stayed he till at length he knelt
Beside a weeping child.

A lonely grave, and newly made!
And cold and brown the clay!
No secret of the mother-heart
Beneath would it betray.
The boy had eyes of wondrous blue,
A light shone in his hair,
As though the sun's declining ray
Were held a captive there.

"They laid her here, so low, so low!"
The orphan softly sighed.
"They could not wait for her to wake—
They told me she had died.
She slept so long, so soundly too,
She neither smiled nor stirred,
And though I often called her name,
She answered not a word.

"They left her in the dark alone,
They led me quite away;
But she will wake again, I know,
When it is Easter Day!
She used to tell me, long ago,
How Jesus died to save;
And how upon the third glad morn
He rose and left the grave.

"'Death could not hold Him long,' she said,
'The stone and seal were vain;
I, too, in God's great Eastertide,
Shall surely rise again.
The Resurrection and the Life,
On Him my heart is stayed;
In his kind arms I lay me down,
How should I be afraid?'

"As stars at night her eyes were bright,
Her cheeks were pale and thin,
Save only that two roses red
Went softly out and in.
And oftentimes her hands were clasped—
She prayed for me, I know.
How near the Saviour must have been—
Her whisper was so low—

"More tired and yet more tired she grew,
And bade us all 'Good-night.'
'When the archangel calls my name
I shall be fresh and bright.'
She kissed me, and she held me fast,
'Beyond yon skies so fair,
Our home shall be with Christ,' she said.
'My Gustave, meet me there!'

"So I am waiting, waiting here,
To meet her, as she said;
For early on the Easter morn
Christ Jesus left the dead.
And she will ask for me, I guess,
When Christ shall call her name.
I know she will not love me less,
But will she look the same?"

Methought across the clay, so brown,
Two snowy wings were spread;
Methought upon the angel's breast
Reposed a golden head.
The Easter morn broke rosy fair,
With glory all aflame;
But little Gustave wept no more,
For Christ had called his name.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 223).

As no doubt most of you will find plenty to occupy you during the Easter Holidays, I have given you fewer questions this week.

In Matt. xxviii.; Mark xvi.; Luke xxiv.; John xiv. and xx.

1. Who said, "He is risen?" describe briefly the circumstances.
2. What was the command of Jesus when He appeared to the women?
3. What happened when Jesus appeared to the eleven disciples?
4. What were his questions when He appeared to the two going to Emmaus?
5. What were the words of Jesus when He appeared to Mary Magdalene?
6. How did Thomas show his unbelief?
7. What was it Thomas did not know?

Church of England.

Mr. George Faber, M.P. for York, has sent £1,000 to the Dean of York, with the request that he will allot £800—part of that sum—to the fund for the restoration of York Minster, and the remaining £200 to the York Minster Organ Fund.

The Council of the Sheffield Church Conference has declined to renew the grant to St. Matthew's Curacy Fund, on the ground that the vicar (Rev. G. C. Ommanney) has openly refused to comply with Archbishop Maclagan's request to discontinue the use of lights and incense.

The Rector of St. Mary-at-Hill Church, Monument (Rev. W. Carlile), is arranging for the introduction of a large gramophone to be used at the 1.15 daily limelight service in the church. By means of the gramophone the congregation will hear brief addresses from the leading dignitaries of the Church, and from a number of prominent laymen.

Rev. F. S. Webster, in his report of the work in the parish of All Souls, Langham Place, says: "Most thankfully I must acknowledge the decided advance that has been made. Every class in our parish is now largely represented in our Sunday congregations. The freeing of the galleries (with the exception of the front row) has been a great help. Every Sunday I see working men, young men from business houses, servants, and members of our mother's meetings, occupying the gallery pews and entering heartily into the service."

Rev. W. Odom, vicar of Heeley, in the course of a controversy on the Confessional, quotes some cogent words of the late Dean Vaughan's: "We will venture to say that neither Scripture nor our Church's teaching gives the slightest encouragement to that sort of systematic and habitual confession, the periodical carrying to a priest the secrets of the conscience and of the life, which had its natural place among the many errors of Romanism, and which some would bring back in these days into the bosom of a Reformed and Protestant Church."

Congregational.

At the meeting of the London Congregational Union on the 3rd inst. the City Temple was crowded. Rev. J. M. Gibbon's address was devoted to showing why Congregationalists were justified in maintaining their protest against the Church of Rome, and in preserving their own denominational identity.

Rev. David Walters has commenced his pastorate at Headingley Hill Church, Leeds. In the evening Mr. Walters spoke with earnestness on "The Passion for Saving Souls" which, he said, should animate every professing follower of Christ and every Christian Church seeking to fulfil its only true mission.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Twentieth Century Fund, gratifying progress was reported, it being stated that since the meeting in December, 229 additional churches have adopted the movement, and that upwards of £4,000 has been remitted to the central office. More than forty speakers had been engaged in deputation work, and seventy-two meetings have been addressed during the present year.

Baptist.

Anniversary services have been held in connection with Catford Hill Church. Revs. F. B. Meyer, John Vine, and Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, took part. Pastor Newton Vanstone, in reviewing the work, was able to report satisfactory progress.

Fourteen days' special services have been held at Sheep Wash, Devon, by the pastor, Rev. H. Smart. A number of persons expressed their faith in Christ. The mission concluded by a tea given by two friends to the members and converts.

Methodist.

The committee of the Wesleyan Mission at Liverpool have decided to invite Rev. Arthur Wood, of Wesley's Chapel, City Road, to become Rev. Chas. Garrett's successor.

The Primitive Methodist Missionary Society, owing to the war, are postponing for the present the extension of their Zambesi Mission, and Rev. A. A. Kidwell, who was to have proceeded there this year, will take temporarily an English station instead.

The progress of Methodism at Thornton Heath has been hindered, owing to the need of suitable premises. After years of hard work and sacrifice, the members' efforts have been rewarded. The memorial stones of the new church were laid in the presence of a very large number of spectators. Rev. Walford Green gave an encouraging address.

Clarence Street Chapel and City Road Mission Room, Newcastle-on-Tyne, with the second minister's house, have been transferred to the Newcastle Mission. Thus another important stage in the development of the Mission has been passed. The premises now acquired will provide an admirable centre for aggressive work in the East End of the city.

Rhodesia Wesleyan Methodist District has now 195 members, with 245 on trial, while some thousands of heathen are being reached by the Gospel. During the year the first Mashona chief to receive Christianity has declared his faith by baptism along with his wife, son, and daughter. The first converts in the Tegwani River Mission, in Matebeleland, have also been baptized during the year.

About three years ago a Wesleyan mission room was opened in Lower Compton, a rapidly developing suburb of Plymouth. The room was filled at the first service, and has been full ever since. A Sunday school was gathered which became too large for the mission room, and a second cottage was taken. More room was required, so it was decided to build a portion of what will eventually be a large modern Sunday school. At the opening services of these premises Rev. C. H. Kelly preached.

Presbyterian.

The report of the Presbyterian Settlement, Esk House, East India Dock Road, E., tells of good work in a needy district. Accounts are given of visiting in families and factories, of the factory girls' club, of mothers' meetings held in connection with the Millwall and Bow churches, and a variety of other Christian and philanthropic work. There is a heavy deficit on the year's income, though the annual expense only amounts to the modest sum of £200.

The spring sessions in connection with the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association have been held at Rhosllanerchrugog, under the presidency of Rev. Griffith Ellis. Rev. D. D. Williams, Oswestry, read a paper on "The Best Means to Adopt for Preparing for the Pulpit and Ministerial Visitations," and Rev. W. Pritchard, of Penarth, opened a discussion on "The Influence of the Methodist Revival on the Life and Character of Wales." Meetings were held for ministers, deacons, and church members, respectively, the emainder of the time being devoted to preaching services.

Society of Friends.

The Conference of the Friends' Prayer League at Bristol attracted a good attendance, and was felt to be a time of spiritual refreshment and impetus.

At Swindon, the meeting for worship, without design or effort, has developed in the direction of family worship. A number of children are generally present with their parents In this way the attendance had increased, and it is probable, steps will soon be taken to commence the new premises.

The jubilee of the First-day School at Bradford has been celebrated. "The work," commented the Bradford Observer, "has never been trumpeted before the public, but the record which was presented of the past fifty years is a story of wonderful perseverance born of zeal and enthusiasm."

Fallen Asleep.

In a letter from Rev. R. L. Rogers to Rev. Marshall Hartley, dated Durban, March 10, he mentions that a Methodist local preacher at Mafeking, Councillor JAMES DALL, son of the late Dr. Dall, was killed by a shell, while in his home preparing food for his wife, who was in the women's laager.—Broughton Road Baptist Church, Melksham, Wilts, has lost its oldest member by the death of Mr. ELI OATLEY, at the age of eighty-one. He was a deacon for many years, local preacher, and worker in the Sunday school.—The death has occurred of Rev. DAVID LANDALE, of Applegarth, Dumfrieshire, at the age of sixty-nine. Mr. Landale was ordained 1856, and at his death was "father" of Lochmaben Presbytery. Applegarth was his first and only charge.—The death is announced of Rev. E. W. DADSON, D.D., pastor of Olivet Baptist Church, Montreal, and formerly editor of the Canadian Baptist. Dr. Dadson was known throughout Canada.—At the age of eighty-four, Professor AUGUSTUS RAUSCHENBUSCH, D.D. In 1855 he was entrusted with the organizing of the German department of the Theological Seminary in Rochester, N.Y. This position he filled with ability, performing a most valuable service for the German Baptist churches in the United States.—Aged eighty-one, Miss HARRIETT EVITT, a devoted and esteemed lady who had for many years rendered active service in many departments of evangelical Church work.—The oldest parish clerk in England, Mr. JOHN LAMB, has died at the age of ninety-five. For seventy years he had been parish clerk at Reedness, near Goole.

BIRMINGHAM POSTMARK.—Postal order for £1 received in reparation.

A reader would like to know the author and publisher of a pamphlet entitled, "Love's Chastening."

Another inquires for a leaflet poem, "Oh, the snow, the beautiful snow."

A third asks for the first line and particulars of a poem in which occurs the lines—

"And vie with Gabriel while he sings,
In notes almost Divine."

There is yet another inquiry for the words and music of the children's hymn, beginning—

"These two little eyes that God has given Must always look to Him."

The hymn, "Christ, He sits on Zion's Hill," appeared in the first Primitive Methodist hymn-book, issued in 1822, edited by Hugh Bourne.

ERRATUM.—In a recent article, "Rifts in the Cloud," Rev. Henry Sturt erroneously ascribed to Heber the lines of Watts, "Just such is the Christian."

Mr. Charles Cook.

THIS well-known evangelist has been ordered a sea-voyage, as his health has been seriously impaired by over-exertion. The constant strain of speaking to large audiences in the Theatre and Hyde Park during many years has occasioned a heart-weakness. The doctor prescribes a month or so of rest and change.

The Metropolitan Theatre services close for the season on Sunday next, and Mr. Cook will start on his voyage soon afterwards. For rent and other expenses, about £80 is needed if the account is to close without debt. If this amount were forthcoming without delay, our friend could leave almost immediately. During his absence the general work of the mission will be well sustained by approved workers. Many will doubtless regard it a privilege to do something towards relieving Mr. Cook of anxiety at the present time.

A Temperance Conference.—A numerously-attended conference of the total-abstaining members of the present London vestries, with representative temperance electors of the metropolis, was held a few days ago in St. Martin's Town Hall. A resolution was adopted emphasizing the desirability of returning to the new borough councils gentlemen not only of marked business capacity and administrative ability, but more especially those who have the social and material improvement of the metropolis at heart. It was urged that candidates should be selected whose views and capacities are in sympathy with such administration as will conduce to the well-being of the people by lessening the facilities for the sale and use of intoxicating liquors.

The Exaltation of Christ.

By Rev. E. E. JENKINS, LL.D.*

IN the history of Christianity this one fact has been made clear by uniform testimony, that when the Church has neglected her missionary calling, when she has turned aside from the high road of Gospel aggression, there have followed invariably stagnation, barrenness, and death. And, moreover, where the Church has not forgotten her missionary obligations, but has been so absorbed in other departments of service as to suffer an abatement of zeal and support in prosecuting her foreign work, there has been in proportion to this abatement a corresponding decline in all her societies and institutions.

If it be true that, in spite of the freedom of inquiry and that licence of speculation which has accompanied the advancement of science, there never was a time when the Church exercised so wide a beneficence as she does to-day, when her followers were so many, so courageous, and so united—when her influence in the politics and literature of the nations was so commanding—we must ascribe it to the revival of foreign missions. That spirit of enterprise and unselfish love which is the direct inspiration of missions must be the animating genius of all Church work.

In measuring from a human standpoint the ascendancy of God among the nations, we must not restrict our estimate to the net result of missionary societies as set forth in their reports. This result is glorious. The record of foreign churches with their galaxy of schools, colleges, and charities is astounding. But beyond these marvellous creations there is an intellectual commotion and a moral unrest disturbing millions of non-Christians. And is not unrest a form of seeking after God? In many cases it amounts to an absolute dethronement of idols; and where it falls short of a repudiation of the native faiths, there is a profound misgiving in the minds of their leaders as to whether their traditions and authorities can abide the closer tests of historic and scientific inquiry.

The ascended Christ pervades by his Spirit everything that touches the mind of nations—the tides of public opinion, their ebb and flow, the changing bases of the religious sentiment, the circulation of literature, the strife and issue of the battlefield, the revolutions of commerce, and the fate of Governments. Christ is in all these movements, appropriating every force, and using it for the exaltation of God among the nations.

The ultimate fate of the Christian religion is a subject of intense interest, even to those who do not believe in its divinity. I refer, of course, to thoughtful men who study the forces which are moving the world. No thinker, whether in the domain of philosophy, literature, or politics can afford to neglect the religious sentiment of the masses, or those great doctrines by which that sentiment is nourished and sustained. These intellectual observers see in Christianity a tremendous power, with a history behind it and a prospect before it, which not only places it above the rivalship of other faiths, but leaves it absolutely alone as the one religion which educates the highest principles of humanity and commands the civilization of the world. They assail its dogmas, they predict its fall, and yet are compelled to acknowledge that, in spite of the disunion which distracts its labours and weakens its federations, its march upon the convictions of mankind was never so swift, never so triumphant as it is to-day. The argument which has the most weight with men of this school is the exaltation of Christ among the nations.

"The Friend of Armenia" is the title of the organ of the Society known as Friends of Armenia. The first number contains much information—naturally appalling—of the conditions of life in that country. There are numerous illustrations, demonstrating how strenuously the Society's agents are coping with the distress, sufferings, and privations of the inhabitants.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 22, 1900.

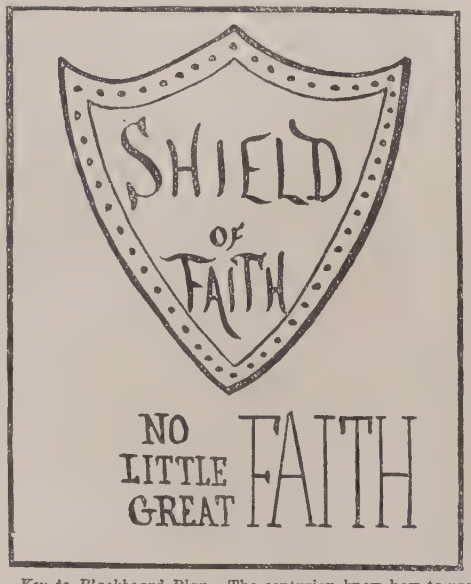
The Centurion's servant healed (Luke vii. 1-10).

Golden Text.—Ps. ciii. 13, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him."

Introduction.

Let us contrast last week's lesson with to-day's:—

Jarius' daughter raised.	Centurion's servant healed.
Jarius—a ruler.	Centurion—a soldier.
Daughter—his loved child.	Servant—his loved slave.
"Why trouble the Master?"	"Lord, trouble not Thyself."
Took the damsel by the hand.	"Speak the word only."
The maid arose.	The servant made whole.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The centurion knew how to use the shield of faith, and so well did he use it that Jesus said, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." See Mark iv. 40 for "no faith;" Matt. xiv. 31 for "little faith;" and Luke vii. 9 for "great faith."

Let us study the three principal people.

1. Soldier.
2. Servant.
3. Saviour.

1. The Soldier.

The centurion (5) was a Gentile, a Roman soldier.

He commanded 100 soldiers (8), and held about the same rank as a captain does in the English army.

He did not go himself to Jesus. First he sent some Jews (3), and next he sent some friends (6). This was often done in the East, someone between being employed to convey messages, &c.

His character shows us that he was no heathen at heart, for he lived the Christ-life in his ignorance so well that he puts us to shame.

Note his unselfishness (3), his generosity (5), his kindness (2), his humility (6, 7), his great faith (7, 8).

He did not seem to mind what trouble he took for his slave. The synagogue he built for the Jews was a large gift prompted by love (1 John iii. 14). Twice he says, "He is not worthy;" and he keenly believes Jesus can command life and death, health and sickness, even as he commands his own soldiers.

Notice—

(1) What the Jews said about him: "He is worthy."

(2) What he said about himself: "I am not worthy."

(3) What Jesus said about him: "Great faith."

See other centurions—they make instructive Bible studies (Luke xxiii. 47; Acts xxvii. 43; Acts x. 1, 2); so also does—"I am not worthy" (Gen. xxxii. 10; Matt. iii. 11; Luke xv. 19); but He is worthy (Rev. v. 12). To be a good soldier of Jesus Christ we do well to copy the character of this soldier in his humility, unselfishness, and great faith.

2. The Servant.

Many people came to Christ on behalf of sick ones, but this is the only instance of coming to Him for a slave or bond-servant. The man was very ill with palsy (Matt. viii. 6), nearly dying, and evidently in great pain; (v. 2) he must have been a good servant, and had endeared himself to his master (Ex. xxi. 5).

Christ healed him (10) in answer to his master's prayer of faith. How do we treat those below us? With contempt or kindness? How do we treat those above us? With rude independence or faithful service? (Eph. vi. 5, 6; 1 Pet. ii. 18.)

Other servants dear to masters—"Joseph" (Gen. xxxix. 4-6; and "Onesimus" (Phil. xvi.).

3. The Saviour.

Always kind, always full of sympathy, always ready to help; we can only repeat what we have been learning for weeks past; the yearning love of Jesus for every soul that comes to Him, that feels it needs Him. "Marvelled at the great faith" (9). Note Mark vi. 6—"Marvelled at unbelief." It is only twice we are told, "Jesus marvelled," and they are the two extremes.

Lessons We Learn.

1. To be humble, loving, generous.

2. To treat those below us with kindness, those above us with courtesy.

If we serve—with faithfulness.
If we rule—with love.

3. May Christ say of each one of us—"Great faith."

Personalia.

The Earl of Aberdeen has accepted the presidency of the National Vigilance Association in succession to the late Duke of Westminster.

Rev. A. R. Whately, Curate of St. John's, Deptford, has been appointed Vice-Principal of St. John's Hall, Highbury, in place of Rev. S. Legg, who has resigned the post.

Rev. S. Pearce Carey, late of Loughborough, has been spending three weeks in the United States before returning to England, on his way to Melbourne, where he is to take charge of Collins Street Baptist Church.

Pastor Charles Spurgeon, who has been suffering for the greater part of the present year from the effects of a severe attack of influenza, had so far recovered as to be able to take a Sunday evening's service. He has now gone away for a change of air for a short time.

Rev. A. A. Milne has been appointed travelling evangelist for the Scottish Baptist Total Abstinence Society. His first pastorate was in Lerwick, where he remained over six years. From thence in 1892 he removed to Cambuslang, where his ministry has been very successful.

Rev. William Taylor, D.D., who, prior to the union of the Congregational and Evangelical Union Churches in Scotland, was Professor of Systematic Theology at Glasgow, and has since held the chair at the United College in Edinburgh, has resigned his position. He has seen more than fifty years of ministerial service.

Rev. Chas. Garrett, who is now in his seventy-seventh year, has made up his mind to retire from active labour, and to relinquish his position as the head of that remarkable organization the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission. Mr. Garrett has communicated his determination to the committee of the Mission, together with an intimation that the resignation would be laid before the forthcoming Wesleyan Conference.

Rev. Norman Bennet has accepted, temporarily, the head-mastership of Monkton Combe School, one of the principal Evangelical schools, whose past history is connected with much practical missionary effort, about thirty-four missionaries having gone from the school into the foreign field. Mr. Bennet has only taken the matter up for a time, owing to the resignation of the late head master, and he is consequently still retaining his work among public school boys.

North London Schoolboys.—Holiday gatherings for games, meetings, &c., will be arranged on April 18, 19, 20, by officers of the Universities Camps for Public Schoolboys. Particulars from Mr. A. C. Kestin, 71, Crouch Hill, N.

Algiers.—A correspondent writes: "The absence of English visitors in Algiers, on account of the anti-British feeling there, has so affected trade that the authorities have become aroused. It is encouraging to note that on the recent death, at Algiers, of Field-Marshal Donald Martin Stewart great military honours were rendered to him, which was a practical display of the good sentiments which exist in the higher ranks of the French nation towards the British, again revealing that all the mischief is due to the Press under Jesuit influence."

Shaftesbury Brotherhood, Manchester.—This Society consists of young men formerly connected with the Strangeways Refuge, and is now a branch of Mr. and Mrs. Kirlew's work among children. Its object is to promote Christian brotherhood and mutual help. At the annual meeting a few days ago many cheering messages were read from distant brethren. One minister wrote from a little village among the Adirondack Hills, where he preaches the "unsearchable riches" to intelligent Yankee farmers. He went out, an orphan boy, seventeen years ago, to be trained in Mr. Moody's school at Mount Hermon. The hon. treasurer of this Society is Mr. C. Arthur Buckley, 33, Princess Street, Manchester.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription Rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

THE Paris Exhibition is open, and we once more urge visitors to respect the Sabbath day when in the capital of France. The Exhibition will not be closed on Sundays, and there is therefore, all the greater necessity for avoiding anything which seems to patronise the breaking of the Sabbath. British visitors are often accused of leaving their consciences behind them when they go abroad. Let us remove by the way in which we live on the Continent that we are no less sincere than when supported by tradition and public opinion at home.

Christian workers are reminded that it is desirable to give a timely warning to young women who are seeking or are offered situations in Paris and France just now. We call special attention to the fact that many of the advertisements for assistants in connection with the Exhibition, and the influx of visitors, are of a dishonest and misleading kind. Very great care should be exercised, and no advertisement should be acted upon without advice, as they are only too frequently intended to trap the innocent and unwary.

It is fortunate that France has at the head of the State a man who declines to encourage the irritable attitude of so many of his fellow-countrymen towards this country. The voice of the alarmist is being continually raised that war with France is inevitable, that it is a mere matter of months, and that it will the most terrible of history. President Loubet, in an interview of the most cordial kind he has just granted to the Secretary of the Peace Society, stated, on the contrary, that he regarded war between Britain and France an impossibility; that they had too many interests in common, and should be brought closer together; and deplored the fact that certain people tried to stir up strife between them. These are wise and timely words, which ought to be remembered when the irresponsible vapourings of the French Press and of a section of our own are in danger of being listened to. There are no worse criminals than those that stir up strife between nations.

We are sorry to see a rather unpractical attitude on the part of some temperance workers with regard to the report of Viscount Peel's Commission. It is obvious to all students of the problem that retrogression, instead of progress, has been made in the past few years, and some change of policy is essential. The enormous growth of the liquor interest, and the wide distribution of its influence, call for a serious union of all reformers. This must mean concession of individual views for the common achievement of the great task. We hope this course will be adopted in view of the importance of the issue.

The South London magistrates have had the courage to uphold the refusal of the Petty Sessional Bench at Penge to grant the Crystal Palace a seven days' licence. It will be remembered that the demand was made as a corollary to the holding of Sunday concerts, and the Company determined not to continue these concerts unless the licence were granted. This was practically an attempt to coerce the authorities to grant the doubtful privilege, trusting that, as most of the magistrates were known to be favourable to the concerts, they would strain a point further and allow the licence. The attempt has deservedly failed, and a sound and healthy blow has been dealt to the ever-widening campaign of attack on the Day of Rest.

Of course we approve the decision of the directors to close the Palace on Sundays; but, at the same time, their motive for doing so once more illustrates the "canting hypocrisy" (a phrase often used by the secularizing party against the upholders of all moral reform) of the promoters of the Sunday concerts. Their professed solicitude for the "elevation of the people" collapses like a pricked bubble when they are denied the privilege (and profit!) of demoralizing them with drink at the same time.

The presiding magistrate at the above-mentioned Session, however, gave utterance to an extraordinary protest against the custom of sending in petitions for or against such demands as those made by the Crystal Palace Company. He said that he considered this "one of the most improper proceedings that anybody, however disinterested, or however good their intentions may be, can be guilty of;" the implication being that it involved a more or less deliberate attempt to interfere with the course of justice, "as gross as though the memorials were presented to a jury or to a High Court of Justice." In view of the facts that these petitions are a recognised part of the plan of campaign on both sides in the war of licences all over the country, that the custom is time-honoured, and is as useful to the magistrates as to the public in determining the expediency of granting or refusing applications, and that the Lord Chancellor has held that magistrates sitting for licensing purposes are not a judicial tribunal, but an administrative body, this protest on the part of the presiding magistrate was altogether irregular and untenable.

The Bill designed for the better management of children committed to industrial schools seems to meet a difficulty which has been experienced by the managers and others connected with those institutions. It seeks to extend the power of control over the children until they are eighteen years of age, and also to empower the magistrates to make an order upon the parents for a maintenance contribution; also to punish the parents or guardians for any cruelty or neglect leading to the committal of a child. We trust, therefore, that the proposed measure will become law, as at present the means of dealing with cruel and intemperate parents are too limited.

An interesting little discussion has been going on as to the real origin of the word "teetotal," which has become so entirely a part of common speech that its irregular etymology is little known. Mr. Thomas Aspden, in a letter to the Daily News, thus gives the historic account of its first appearance.

About September, 1833, Dicky Turner (the converted weaver), when delivering one of his fervid speeches in the Temperance Hotel, Preston (the cockpit, where the Earls of Derby formerly fought their cocks for three centuries), in favour of the new pledge, declared with emphasis that "nothing but the tee-tee-total pledge would do." Mr. Joseph Livesey, upon hearing this, immediately cried out, amid great cheering, "That shall be the name." The newly-coined word was taken up by the succeeding speakers, and was afterwards used at all the meetings held in the town and neighbourhood. It was soon adopted in every part of Lancashire, and was eventually accepted as the true designation of total abstainers, not only in the United Kingdom, but throughout the civilized world.

Dicky Turner was one of the "Seven Men of Preston" who first signed and advocated the total abstinence pledge, which was in the following words: "We agree to abstain from all liquors of an intoxicating quality, whether ale, porter, wine, or ardent spirits, except as medicines." Such was the beginning of a world-wide reform which has done incalculable good in checking intemperance, and bringing innumerable souls within reach of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The precariousness of a curate's living in the Church of England is one of the most acute problems of the day. A "Country Parson," writes strongly to the Church Times, in terms which have, unfortunately, only too much truth in them. It is tragic that so many men who are pledged to the service of a Christian organization, and have been fully accepted for that ministry, should be, as far as any stability in their means of livelihood is concerned, so utterly at the mercy of circumstances. The attention of Convocation is to be seriously called to this matter.

It is also a great pity that the voice of congregations is so consistently ignored, not only by private patrons, but by bishops, in fresh appointments to livings. Two such cases have just occurred. At Hull, many of the parishioners wished the curate-in-charge to be appointed as successor to the late vicar. A Leicester vicar was appointed over his head, while the man who, by years of good and faithful service, had commended himself to the community, was sent adrift. In another instance, at Birkenhead, it was desired that the son of the late Rev. Charles Fenton, who had built St. Peter's Church, secured its endowment, and ministered to it for forty years, should be appointed in his father's stead. Within two days of the latter's death a petition to that end to the Bishop of Chester was got up and signed by 2,000 persons. The Bishop, however, had already appointed another man to the post. The relationship of the clergy to the laity is not helped by such arbitrary acts as these; nor is the work of Christ furthered.

"An open confession is good for the soul," and the Church Times may be congratulated on its frankness in having so clearly thrown over the Reformation. In last week's issue it refers to Dr. Wace's criticism of the following sentence in the late Mr. Wakeman's "History of the Church of England."

The Church revival of the present century is seen in nothing more than a complete reaction against the Protestant movement of the sixteenth century.

This, according to the High Church papers, is a statement that cannot for a moment be doubted; the only question remaining being whether that reaction is justifiable or not. Dr. Wace, as a Low Churchman, thinks not. The Church Times and its school, on the other hand, openly think it is. It is well that we know whither we are drifting in this painful controversy. It will stiffen the backs of true Evangelical Churchmen to find their Protestantism thus summarily rejected; and it ought to open the eyes of the "moderates" to the real position of things.

Perverts to the Church of Rome appear to be of somewhat doubtful advantage to her, as they seem to find it more than difficult to give up utterly their right of private jugement. The latest instance is that of Mr. R. E. Dell, whose paper in the current Nineteenth Century is a damaging indictment of the Romish system. Certainly the number of candidates qualifying for the honour of excommunication grows larger rapidly, and Cardinal Vaughan just now must be anxious to be delivered from his friends who are not willing to accept unquestioned the Roman dogma that "as the (Roman) Church is commissioned by Christ to teach his truth, she is incapable of teaching error."

Mr. Dell, after a tribute to the intellectual power of the men who "went over" during the early days of the Tractarian movement, says:

> We are relapsing as a body, so far as intellectual vigour and mental capacity are concerned, into the state from which the extraordinary accession of able men rescued us two generations since. . . . The arrogant dogmatism, the childish credulity, the appetite for superstition, which are to be found even among educated Catholics naturally gifted with mental capacity, are not seldom the outward and visible sign of an inward and deep-rooted scepticism destitute of true faith. They can only retain its husk by the suppression of their reason and intelligence.

More remarkable still, however, are some of Mr. Dell's remarks upon the mental attitude of Cardinal Vaughan in the ranks of the Roman theologians who "too often prove in practice apostles of unbelief," with a "devotion" quoted from a penny manual issued last April, "Our Father and Patron, St. Joseph," by Herbert, Cardinal Vaughan:—

> Hail, Joseph, image of God the Father!
> Hail, Joseph, Father of God the Son!
> Hail, Joseph, treasury of the Holy Ghost!

The Roman Catholic journals have said but comparatively little in regard to the departure of the Duke of Norfolk for the Seat of War, following, as it does, so closely upon his correspondence with the Pope as to the attitude towards England of the Vatican Press. None of them have reminded their readers that one of the Duke's ancestors was a leader against the Armada, when as one of our great historians has said "the only chance of Spanish success lay in a Catholic rising," and "in the crisis patriotism proved stronger than religious fanaticism in the hearts of the English Catholics."

In an article on "Puritanism and the Theatre," published in the Morning Leader, the distinguished dramatic critic, Mr. William Archer, speaks straight words about the moral, or rather *im*moral qualities of the modern drama. He complains, on the one hand, that the "Puritan" mind fails to discriminate between "what is noble in the theatre and what is base"; but he very pertinently caps this question with another—"Can we" (i.e., those who uphold the theatre) "reproach them while we ourselves attempt no such discrimination?" Referring to the success of a certain play that has recently been the rage in the West End, and which he describes as "one long glorification of the vulgarest order of debauchery," he scouts the idea that the audiences which kept it going for eighteen months belonged, except as regards a small part, to the fundamentally vicious, but included thousands of people of education and breeding who fully realized the "clotted vulgarity entertainment, and revelled in the sense of superiority involved in that very realization."

This charge against the audiences is certainly very plausible. Actors and even managers, not to mention play-writers, are, no doubt, to a certain extent, the servants of the public; they produce, as a rule, what their instinct, or experience, tells them will command success. Many of them have no preference for plays that are immoral or low; many often feel keenly the degradation of having to represent characters upon the stage which are abhorrent to their own soul. But so long as the "respectable people of education and breeding, of decent life and presentable manners," continue to patronize these doubtful or evil plays, and bitterly resent "puritanical interferences" with their standard of taste—so long will the theatre be what it is, an institution that its best critics denounce as in league with prurient tastes and decaying morals.

What is the precise character of the sin of gambling? This has been a question for casuists from far-off times. It is in truth not a little difficult to locate the precise element of immorality in an evil, the worst features in which are its cumulative results, and the imperceptible manner in which, in its milder forms, it shades off into legitimate aspects of enterprise. Dr. Horton defines it as, "Robbery by mutual consent." One party consents to be robbed without complaint, on condition that he may have a chance of turning the tables on his antagonist and so rob him. Gambling and betting are thus a transgression of the eighth commandment. That both parties are mutually agreed on the conditions only makes their fellowship in evil more marked, and deepens their guilt in that they knowingly involve another in their own sin.

The widespread tendency to believe in some occult method of reading the future, even among people who might in virtue of their education be supposed to be above that kind of weakness, has been illustrated in a remarkable degree in the evidence at the trial of a Bond Street palmist. The incident is of little interest except as a testimony to an extraordinary survival of superstition in cultured circles. It is forgotten by many that ignorance of our future lives and destiny has been imposed upon us by our Maker for our good, and they are perpetually trying, by foul means or fair, to tear aside the veil that hides to-morrow from their eyes. Our Master spoke in love as well as warning when he said, "Take no anxious thought for the morrow, for the morrow will take thought for the things of itself." Being such creatures as we are, it is well for us that we know not what a day may bring forth.

Be Patient.—We often want to know too much and too soon. We want the light of to-morrow, but it will not come till to-morrow. And then a slight turn, perhaps, will throw such light on our path that we shall be astonished we saw not our way before. "I can wait," says Lavater. This is a high attainment. We must labour, therefore, to be quiet in that path from which we cannot recede without danger and evil. —Richard Cecil.

The Grace of God in Vain.

By Dr. NEWMAN HALL.

RECONCILIATION by Jesus Christ i the grace of God. This is th great fact and theme of the Gospel The fact is divine, the publication of i is human. "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation." His the grace, ours the publication, man's guil the refusal. "We, then, as workers togethe with Him, beseech you also that ye receiv not the grace of God in vain" (2 Cor. v 18, 19).

The message is that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." Th first act of God's reconciliation was forgiveness and the proclamation of grace by the ministry of reconciliation. When this grace is accepte the renewed heart, no longer at enmity with God, is "at one" with Him, trusting, loving obeying God in Christ. It is the function o all Christ's ministers and witnesses to believe and be saved by accepting the grace of God.

St. Paul says: "We are workers togethe with Him." "We are ambassadors therefore o behalf of Christ, as though God were entreating by us." What an honour and privilège! Hov can this be? We work together for the same purpose—the salvation of the world; by th same method, the message of reconciliation by the same power—the Holy Spirit of God This togethership demands reverence, devout ness of thought, of motive, of manner: n turning of service into frivolity, no wresting o the Divine message for worldly laughter, n making our work for God an opportunity o personal display.

If fellow-workers with God, we shall b industrious, for He is the watchful Overlooker we shall be humble, for it is He who gives u strength, opportunity, and success; we shal be hopeful, for though of ourselves we coul expect no true result, by Him "we can do al things;" so that even when we see no frui of our work, we are confident that by hi working-together there must be fruit.

As "workers together," we must work in th same spirit; not so much accusing, censuring condemning, as entreating. "We, as worker together with God, beseech you." The messag committed to us by God resembles his own "God hath committed unto us the ministry o reconciliation; now, then, we are ambassador for Christ, as though God did beseech you b us, we pray you, in Christ's stead, be y reconciled to God." Oh for more of this tende entreaty in all our efforts to win souls! "beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercie of God" (Rom. xii. 1).

Along with so many gracious promises o help we are warned of the possibility o neglecting, or even opposing the promise blessing. "We beseech you that ye receiv not the grace of God in vain." This ma arise from faults of the ambassador. Succes in delivering the message may depend, no alone on the accuracy of the message itself but on the manner and character of th messenger. Success of teachers often depend less on what they say than on what they are The Apostle adds this warning, "Giving n offence in anything, that the ministry be no blamed, but in all things approving ourselve as the ministers of God."

Then follows a comprehensive enumera tion of features in the ministry, which wer proofs that the Apostles were "ministers o God"—much patience, necessities, persecu tions, pureness, kindness, righteousness, &c

Cor. vi. 3-10). If teachers and preachers e evidently seeking self-ends, fame, ease, spectability, notoriety, conformity to the orld's evil customs, opinions, and pleasures, ther than by example enforcing the precept, Come out from among them and be ye parate," may not such teaching, by example, unteract the effect of the verbal message, d thus the "grace of God" not be fully eached, and thus be "received in vain," by e ear alone and not the heart (2 Cor. vi. , 18)?

The grace of God, faithfully proclaimed, is ceived in vain "when received as the seed the beaten path, or on rocky ground, or among orns—'in vain,' when, resisted by wicked nduct, or by delay instead of heeding the hortation: 'behold, now is the accepted ne; behold, now is the day of salvation.'" as, how deep the guilt, how fearful the peril thus receiving the grace of God in vain! But teachers and preachers ponder the admoni- n: "Giving no offence in anything that the nistry be not blamed," lest, inadvertently, we use the grace of God to be received in vain those to whom we preach it.

Thoughts on Light.

HAVE you ever watched the light breaking in at dawn of day? First, a reddened glimmer in the east, gradually deepening, until the sun lights up the landpe, making all things beautiful.

The Light of Love breaks in upon your life, d makes it beautiful; and it is constant. e comforting thought of God's love is—once shines in our heart, no night can extinguish it. The sunlight peeps in everywhere. It ghtens the attic, illumines the wan features the poor cripple looking out at the window on the squalid court below; it shines upon mansion. Yea, the same sun that ripened peaches in the millionaire's hothouse, nted the roses around the poor man's cottage. erywhere the sun shines, on sea and land. ght comes, but the sun never dies out, it is ning elsewhere. Thus, when nights of uble come, we must not think God has forzen us. He still lives, and ere long will in reveal his love, 'tween the shadowy mists. The sunlight marks the time. The shadow the dial tells how the day is fleeting. Where he hand pointing in our lives? What is the ord when the light shines upon it? How we spending our days?

The sun shines upon all. It paints the lily h its regal beauty, yet it gilds the daisy's heart. ch is beautiful. Let us not be discouraged our station in life. God cares for all, and nes upon all who love Him, from the highest the lowest.

Sunlight is life. From it springs colour and ign. It permeates our beings. Without it world would be dreary, desolate—one dark, nal night; no flowers, no fruit, no cheerful . Without God the world would be a blank, ilderness.

The sunlight is a miracle-worker. From the ming nothingness of the negative it prints shaded beauty the photograph. God shines hin your heart, and out of chaos makes it ar, bright, and beautiful, and reveals to you icture full of love. George S. Astins.

A Roused Temperance Sentiment.—I.

By J. GLYN DAVIES, Newport, Mon.

ALL true men will agree that the use of alcohol is excessive, and that it ought to be reduced. Note well the following facts:—(1). The consumption per head in the United Kingdom is much greater now than it was sixty years ago. Then it was £2 18s. 10d. per head. In 1898 it was £3 16s. 10½d. And in spite of every temperance effort, it is slowly and surely rising. (2). The population may be set down at 40,000,000. Of these, 14,000,000 are children, and perhaps 3,000,000 are total abstainers. It appears therefore that 23,000,000—give this enormous figure a little serious thought—23,000,000 are consumers, moderate or excessive, of alcoholic drinks! (3). We are told that the limit of the useful effects of alcohol is 1½ fluid ounces in twenty-four hours. Beyond this the effects are bad. In 1898, it has been calculated that the daily average was 2⅕ ounces. England, on the showing of unprejudiced men, drinks twice too much! (4). The amount spent on drink in 1898 was £154,480,934, an increase upon 1897 of £2,199,211. This alarming sum is equal to all the rents of all the houses and farms in the United Kingdom! It fills one with dismay, and is not only a grievous economic waste, but

A GRAVE MENACE TO OUR VERY LIFE!

Give these facts the calm thought they deserve. Consider them slowly, duly, one by one. Let their meaning be clear. Let their evidence accumulate. In the face of such facts, and in the name of all that is good, is there no need of a roused temperance sentiment?

2. All true men will agree that the contributory influences of intemperance are more deplorable than words can tell. The social and moral aspects are bad. We need not quarrel as to whether intemperance is more of a result than of a cause. It is a result. The strained conditions of life are producing it. Life to many is an unutterable dreariness. The rack-renter, the sweater, and the brewer are the triune evil that drives the joy out of hearts and homes, and makes the Drink the solace of men. Many drunkards are more sinned against than sinning. All that granted, we must remember that Intemperance is also a cause. A fountain and origin of untold ills! Crime, and Poverty, and Insanity—write them in letters of black—these are some of its gaunt results. Who can ever tell the tale of woe that lies behind these grim words?

It is calculated that 1,800 men and women died last year in England and Wales of chronic alcoholism, and that 400 died in delirium tremens! All must note with most anxious alarm the GROWTH OF FEMALE INTEMPERANCE.

By Grocers' Licences, by medical advice, by social custom—by these and other means, intemperance among women grows on a scale so vast, at a rate so fast, as to constitute a danger and a disgrace of the gravest kind. We know also of the temptation and the contamination to which our children and young people are exposed. How all this must tell on home life!

Give these thoughts the place they ought to have. Go down to the misery, the humiliation, the woe which they mean. Look this pestilent thing full in the face; and then answer the question, as a question of conscience before God, Is there no need of a roused temperance sentiment?

3. The national character is at stake. The struggle of progress is keener than ever. Other nations are forging ahead. America, as we must know, is especially active and progressive. The ferocity of competition demands physique, nerve, mind, pushful manhood. Englishmen must be strong, and sane, and therefore—sober. Our success depends on our fitness, our efficiency, our physical and moral worth. What do we find? Two-thirds of our huge drink bill is incurred by the working classes! At least £100,000,000! Six shillings a week for every working-class family! Money that ought to be spent on food, clothing, education, recreation, and all else that makes for high fitness! The result is that our strength, our physique, our manhood are being, in this slow, deadly way, daily undermined. The marrow of the nation is being slowly, silently, very silently sapped. Our blood is sottening, and our brain is muddling. We are losing our smartness, our inventiveness, our grand old energy.

ONE DAY THE COLLAPSE WILL COME.

In hot honour for the national name, look this possibility in the face. If our drink bill were reduced to the proportion of that of America, it would be smaller by £57,000,000. Enough to provide all the funds for a national scheme of old age pensions, and to pay in twenty years the whole of the National Debt! Is there no need, one asks again, of a roused temperance sentiment?

Christ—Way, Truth, Life.

John xiv. 5, 6.—"Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the Way, and the Truth, and the Life."

'Tis ever so—whenever thou dost fail
To understand thy Lord, and fain would'st know
His purpose in his guidance here or there,
His meaning in his message, or his strange,
Deep secret in the mystery of Time—
Eternity — "things present" — "things to come,"
He points thee to Himself, directs thy gaze—
Thy much-bewilder'd sight—to Him, th' I AM.

Thou sayest, "Lord, ah, whither dost Thou go?
I cannot follow with the path unknown,"—
Listen, perplexed one, dost hear his voice
Behind thee saying, "Child, I am the way?"

Thou prayest, "Holy One, who teachest all
Who seek to do thy will and claim to know
The doctrine, I, so foolish, ignorant,
E'en as a brute before Thee, fain would know,
Would comprehend Thy word—thy wondrous law;
But thy great thoughts are all above my ken,
As heaven above earth,—my brain doth reel!"
Hear,—'tis his answer to thy seeking soul,—
He saith to thee, "My child, I am the Truth!"

And when, in labyrinths of time and sense,
The darkness deepens o'er thy heart and throws
Its mantle o'er thy mind in doubt or fear;—
When, reaching forth into the great unknown,
Thy spirit longs to pierce the clouds and soar
Up to the Throne of God and of the Lamb,
Whence flows the river pure, like crystal clear;—
And thou dost ask, in trembling tones, "Ah, why
This parch'd existence in a world of drought?
Oh, tell me how to know that, though I die,
I yet do live!" He answers thee Himself,—
The First, the Last, the Living One doth say,—
"I AM the Life; and thou, because I live, Shalt also live, and know, and walk, in ME!"

John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

His Schools and Schoolmasters.

Oh to have watched thee through the vineyards wander,
Pluck the ripe ears, and into evening roam!—
Followed, and known that in the twilight yonder
Legions of angels shone about thy home!

ZACHARIAS and Elisabeth had probably almost ceased to pray for a child, or to urge the matter, when suddenly the angel of God broke into the commonplace of their life, like a meteorite into the unrippled water of a mountain-sheltered lake.

It is not impossible that prayers that we have ceased to pray, and are in despair about, will yet return to us with the words, Thy supplication is heard, endorsed on them in our Father's handwriting. Not unfrequently dividends are paid on investments which had been given up as valueless. Fruit that mellows longest in the sun is ripest. Such things may transcend altogether our philosophy of prayer; but we are prepared for this, since God is accustomed to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think.

"And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit." "And the hand of the Lord was with him." There were several remarkable formative influences operating on this young life.

I. THE SCHOOL OF HOME.

John's earliest memories would doubtless register the frequent absence of his father in the fulfilment of his course; and, on his return, with what eagerness would the boy drink in a recital of all that had transpired in the holy city! We can imagine how the three would sit together beneath their trellised vine, in the soft light of the fading sunset, and talk of Zion, their chief joy. No wonder that in after days, as he looked on Jesus as he walked, he pointed to Him and said, "Behold the Lamb of God"; for, from the earliest, his young mind had been saturated with thoughts of sacrifice.

When old enough his parents would take him with them to one of the great festivals, where, amid the thronging crowds, his boyish eyes opened for the first time upon the stately temple, the order and vestments of the priests, the solemn pomp of the Levitical ceremonial. Doubtless, the young heart dilated and expanded with wonder and pride, but how little he realized that his ministry would be the first step to its entire subversal.

He would be also taught carefully in the Holy Scriptures. Like the young Timothy, he would know them from early childhood. The song of Zacharias reveals a vivid and realistic familiarity with the prophecies and phraseology of the Scriptures; and as the happy parents recited them to his infant mind, they would stay to emphasize them with impressive personal references. What would we not have given to hear Zacharias quote Isaiah xl., or Malachi iii., and turn to the lad at his knee, saying—These words refer to thee:—"Yea, and thou, child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Most High; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways."

There were also the associations of the surrounding country.

The story of Abraham would often be recited in the proximity of Machpelah's sacred cave. The career of David could not be unfamiliar to a youth who was within easy reach of the haunts of the shepherd-psalmist. And the story of the Maccabees would stir his soul, as his parents recounted the deeds of Judas and his brethren, in which the ancient Hebrew faith and prowess had revived in one last glorious outburst.

How ineffaceable are the impressions of the Home! What the father is when he comes back at night from his toils, and what the mother is all day; what may be the staple of conversation in the home; whether the father is willing to be the companion of his child, answering his questions, and superintending the gradual unfolding of his mind; how often the Bible is opened and explained; how the weekly rest-day is spent; the attitude of the home towards strong drink in every shape and form, and all else that might injure the young life, as gas does plants—all these are vital to the right nurture and direction of boys and girls, who can only wax strong in spirit when all early influences combine in the same direction.

II. THE SCHOOL OF HIS NAZARITE-VOW.

The angel, who announced his birth, foretold that he should drink neither wine nor strong drink from his birth, but that he should be filled with the Holy Spirit. "John," said our Lord, "came neither eating nor drinking." This abstinence from all stimulants was a distinct sign of the Nazarite, together with the unshorn locks, and the care with which he abstained from contact with death. In some cases, the vow of the Nazarite might be taken for a time, or, as in the case of Samson, Samuel, and John, it might be for life. But, whether for shorter or longer, the Nazarite held himself as peculiarly given up to the service of God, pliant to the least indication of his will, quick to catch the smallest whisper of his voice, and mighty in his strength.

"Mother, why do I wear my hair so long? You never cut it, as the mothers of other boys do," he might question.

"No, my son," is the proud and glad reply, "you must never cut it as long as you live; you are a Nazarite."

"Mother, why may I not taste the grapes? The boys say they are so nice and sweet. May I not, next vintage?"

"No, never," his mother would reply; "you must never touch the fruit of the vine. You are a Nazarite."

If, as they walked along the public way, they saw a bone left by some hungry dog, or a little bird fallen to the earth to die, and the boy would come near to touch either, the mother would call him back to her side, saying, "Thou must never touch a dead thing. If thy father were to die, or I, beside thee, thou must not move us from the spot, but call for help. Remember always that thou art separated unto God; his vows are upon thee, and thou must let nothing, either in symbol or reality, steal away his power from thy young heart and life."

The effect of this would be excellent. It would give a direction and purpose to the lad's thoughts and anticipations. He realized that he was set apart for a great mission in life. The brook heard the call of the sea. Besides which, he would acquire self-restraint, self-mastery. The strength of a man is in proportion to the feelings which he curbs and subdues, and not those which subdue him. The man who receives a flagrant insult, and answers quietly; the man who bears a hopeless daily trial, and remains silent; the man who with strong passions remains chaste, or who with a quick sense of injustice can refrain himself and remain calm—these are strong men; and John waxed strong, because, from the earliest dawn of thought, he was taught the necessity of refusing things which in themselves might have been permissible, but for him were impossible. On each of us rests by right of our union with the Son of God, who was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. Remember how He went without the camp, bearing our reproach; how they cast Him forth to the death of the cross; and how He awaits us on the Easter side of death—and surely we can find no pleasure in the world where He found no place. His death has made a lasting break between his followers and the rest of men. They are crucified to the world and the world to them. Let us not taste of the intoxicating joys in which the children of this present age indulge; let us allow no Delilah passion to pass her scissors over our locks; and let us be very careful not to receive contamination; to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but to come out and be separate, not touching the unclean thing.

But whilst we put away all that injures our own life or the lives of others, let us be very careful to discriminate, to draw the line where God would have it drawn, exaggerating and extenuating nothing. It is important to remember that while the motto of the old covenant was Exclusion, even of innocent and natural things, that of the new is Inclusion. Moses forbade the Jews having horses; but Zechariah said that in the new they might own horses, only "Holiness to the Lord" must be engraven on the bells of their harness. Christ has come to sanctify all life. Whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we are to do all to his glory. Disciples are not to be taken out of the world, but to be kept from its evil. "Every creature of God is good, and not to be refused if it is received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer." Natural instincts are

NOT TO BE CRUSHED, BUT TRANSFIGURED.

This is the great contrast between the Baptist and the Son of Man. The Nazarite would have felt it a sin against the law of his vocation and office to touch anything pertaining to the vine. Christ performed his first miracle by providing wine in abundance, though of a innocuous kind, for the peasants' wedding at Cana. John would have lost all sanctity had he touched the bodies of the dead, or the flesh of a leper. Christ would touch a bier, pass his hands over the seared flesh of the leper, and stand sympathetically beside the grave of his friend. Thus we catch a glimpse of our Lord's meaning when He affirms that, though John was the greatest of women born, yet the least in the Kingdom is greater than he.

III. THE SCHOOL OF THE DESERT.

"The child was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel." Probably Zacharias died when John was quite young, and Elisabeth also. But "the hand of the Lord was with him."

Beneath the guidance and impulse of that hand he tore himself from the little home where he had first seen the tender light of day and spent happy years, to go forth from the ordinary haunts of men, perhaps hardly knowing whither. There was a wild restlessness in his soul. A young man, pleading the other day with his father to be allowed to emigrate to the West, urged that whereas there are inches here there are acres there; and something of this kind may have been in the heart of John. He desired to free himself from the conventionalities and restraints of the society amid which he had been brought up, that he might develop after his own fashion, with no laws but those he received from heaven.

Thus, a lone man, he passed for th into the great
l terrible wilderness of Judæa, w ich is so olate that the Jews called it the ab omination desolation. Travellers who h av e passed r and through it tell us that it is destitute ll animal life, save a chance vult u re or fox.
the most part, it is a waste of s a nd, swept wild winds. When Jesus was t here, some or three years after, He found n othing to
; the stones around mocked his hu nger, and re was no company save that of the wild sts.

n this great and terrible wilderne ss, John ported himself by eating locusts—th e literal ect, which is still greatly esteemed by the ives—and wild honey, which abound ed in the vices of the rocks; whilst for clot hing he s content with a coat of coarse camel's hair, h as the Arab women make still; and a lle of skin about his loins. A cave, li ke that which David and his men often found re fuge, ficed him for a home, and the water of the eams that hurried to the Dead Sea, w as his erage.

Can we wonder that under such a regime n he w strong? We become weak by conti nual tact with our fellows. We sink to their el; we accommodate ourselves to their hions and whims; we limit the natural elopments of character on God's plan; we e on the colour of the bottom on which we

But in loneliness and solitude, whe rein we Jerusalem.

E Holy City sleeps among the hills,
Surrounded by her treeless mountains bare.
housand tombs bespeak thy greatness past,
A thousand voices wail thy dire despair!
vidowed queen still sits in haughty pride.
Yet nay! for widowhood forsooth is not thy fate;
t wife—debased—estrangéd from thy Lord—
This is thy crime, and this thy sinful state.
y mem'ries of three thousand years and more,
On every hill, in every valley, stand;
y kings and prophets, and thy sacred bards,
Still hold their sway through all thy wondrous land.
ey are not dead; their voices cannot die;
Unseen of men, they in their patience wait.
anwhile their dirge is echoing o'er thy hills,
"Your land is left unto you desolate!"
e Moslem and the Hebrew, Greek and Jew,
On camel, ass, or Arabs' fiery steeds—
wrangle on thy pavements, in thy courts,
O fallen city, mother of the creeds!
y lands so fair and lovely to behold,
Thy skies of sapphire blue, and wondrous light.
all thy people sunk in shame so low,
Thy glory merged into the gloom of night.
en wilt thou rise, a lovely, joyous bride,
Thy sweet love-song o'er all the earth to sing?
pent, return unto thy waiting Spouse,
And claim Him for thy Sovereign Lord and King.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

THE communications which we continue to receive from missionary workers in the famine-striken districts, supply additional evidence of the heartrending condition of affairs with which the Government and the missionaries have to contend. It becomes more and more apparent that, unless private charity gives generously and promptly, a terrible loss of life must ensue.

Rev. Robt. Ward, (Man Sukh Lal) writes under date March 24, Mission House, Godhra, Pauch Mahals, India:—

"The famine grows worse day by day. At the back of the mission house there is a a dried up watercourse, in the bed of which groups of emaciated figures crouch and sicken and die. Some gather leaves from the already impoverished trees, and sell them for a few pice; others drag their shrunken limbs along at the rate of four miles a day, to the Government Relief Works; others, too weak for either task, sit down by the scorching rocks and wait—not long—for death. I cannot walk many steps without seeing dead bodies. In some cases a partly gnawed trunk is all that is left. A wild-looking old man and his family are now taking shelter in a hole fifty feet from here. They have rigged up a shelter with dried wood and some empty grain bags which I lent them, and they huddle together with their eighteen goats, and pray for rain, which has

NOT FALLEN FOR TWO YEARS!

"'Sahib,' said the old father to me the other day, 'we were well off in our own country before the drought, and lived in a tiled house; but the cattle died before our eyes, and we have left the house—putting a bundle of thorns in the doorway.' Our missionaries are working early and late organizing work for the people, such as cloth-weaving, well-sinking, and land-levelling. During the last few months my wife and I have sold, at a cheap rate, sixteen railway waggon-loads of maize. This very day we have turned away crowds of people—many of whom have walked twenty miles—because we cannot get the corn quick enough. The worst of the famine is yet to come. The leaves are gone from the trees, and that was the last hope for keeping the cattle alive; the mowrah berries, due now, have not appeared; and the rains, if they come, are yet three and a half months ahead." Mr. Ward also cables appealing on behalf of 200 FAMINE ORPHANS.

Rev. Albert Norton, of Dhond, Poona district, says:—"The price of grain is still rising. The hot season, now commencing, is unusually hot. We are engaged in putting up inexpensive quarters here at Dhond, which, as soon as finished, we expect the Lord to fill with new orphan and destitute lads from the famine. We are employing nearly 100 famine sufferers, and almost daily increasing the number. The distress is very great."

A letter from Rev. M. B. Fuller, of Bombay, tells us that: "Parents, losing all natural affection through hunger, sell their children or forsake them, and the Government and infirm people, many of whom were well and strong a few weeks ago. Nursing mothers and their babies are reduced to skeletons. A cartload of over twenty boys was brought to one of our orphanages the other day, and when they reached the haven of rest where they could be cared for, several were delirious from fever induced by weakness. At one other orphanage we have averaged a funeral a day for a good many days. We are selling grain at low rates in nearly all our fifteen stations, and feeding large numbers of children, who will return to their parents after the famine, beside three hundred orphans already received. We hope to sell thousands of pounds worth of grain at a loss of, say, 20 per cent."

Mr. Frank J. Clark, of the Chief Engineer's Office, G.I.P. Railway, Bombay, sends us a batch of letters from which we extract some items: "Miss Clarke, of Malegaon, tells of six dead bodies of starved people being picked up in one day close to the mission compound, and this although the missionaries are doing their utmost to provide food for all."

Rev. W. Mulligan, of Jhalod, wrote: "We estimate that one-third of our district Bhils may possibly survive the famine; the other two-thirds (20,000 or 25,000) have little chance of pulling through. Kushulgarh to the east, Chilkari to the north, and Sunth to the west, are quite as badly off as Jhalod; that is, for these four small patches of territory we may expect a mortality from famine about as great as the total army now commanded by Lord Roberts in South Africa."

Lord Radstock, in a published appeal, gives extracts from letters. We reproduce some sentences:—"I am sick at seeing children's funerals and children dying. There have been two deaths a week in our compound, and our community is little over a hundred." "Food is now quadrupled in price. Starving children come to the mission gates, or are picked up by the road." "Already we have sixteen orphanages going—one at each station, and at some sub-stations also." "We go out for a walk every morning, and whenever we find a child lying by its dead mother, we of course bring it back with us. Yesterday morning I saw sixteen dead bodies within 200 yards from our door. This in a native state. From two or three sources we hear that in several of the native states next to nothing is being done in the way of relief."

In consequence of the reports from their missionaries, and in view of the fact that many parents are for a few pence in order to obtain food, the Committee of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission have resolved to make provision without delay for receiving a considerable number of orphan and destitute girls. The Memorial Home, which is being erected at Munmar, about 140 miles from Bombay, in memory of the late Mr. W. T. Paton, is to be utilized for this purpose. Sanction has already been given to the admission of 100 girls. The cost of their support will be £3 10s. each per annum.

In the course of a long and interesting letter, descriptive of relief work commenced as long ago as September last, Miss M. MacKellar, M.D., of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Neemuch, Central India, writes: "Last September the poor people in less favoured districts began flocking into Central India, feeling sure that here they would get food and fodder, but they were doomed to disappointment. It has been with great difficulty that those in authority have driven back outsiders to their respective states. It was while these were passing to and fro that we started in a small way to give food. Some 200 persons have been taken in by our mission in Neemuch. Of that number several are children, forsaken by their parents in the bazaar, streets, or out in the fields; they were picked up by policemen or some of our workers and brought to the orphanage, where they are tenderly cared for by the big girls, who were saved from the famine of three years ago. Others were brought by their parents. The number might have been double or treble what it is, had we been willing to buy the children brought to us for sale."

THE DESPATCH OF FOOD.

In our last issue we referred to a timely suggestion made by Dr. Colin S. Valentine, of Agra, that easily-prepared foods would be of great use in relief work, and that well-known makers of reliable food stuffs might be pleased to help in the matter.

To the list of firms who have replied in favourable terms to a communication from us, it is our pleasurable duty to add the following names:—Messrs. Cadbury, the Liebig Extract of Meat Company, Messrs. Mellin, and Messrs. Nestlé. These firms have largely supplemented with generous donations the various orders placed with them. Messrs. Carr, of Carlisle, are sending a consignment of biscuits.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 22. Psa. lxviii.

AN ancient invocation stands as the first verse of this Psalm, and indicates its intention. It was composed as a processional hymn, when the ark was borne to the holy hill of Zion. It has three aspects:

(1) The Psalm looks back on the Exodus, when God went forth before his people, and led them through the wilderness, whilst Sinai itself trembled before Him.

(2) It looks towards the Ascension. In Eph. iv. the Apostle gives it that application. As the ark was borne up the hill, surrounded by the joyful clamour of the people, it anticipated the time when Jesus Christ ascended, leading as captive, bound to his chariot wheels, Death, Hades, and the power of the devil. It is sweet to think of Him, seated in his ascended glory, with gifts even for the rebellious.

(3) It looked toward the then present need of Israel. The little country was surrounded by strong peoples, who were jealous of its growing power. It was very necessary that God should be known as the God of deliverances, and that He should grant his people issues from death. As the stately procession swept past, with singers before and minstrels following, with little Benjamin, Judah, and Zebulun in their place, it was comfortable to know that God was in their midst, prepared to rebuke the wild beasts of the reeds, which may stand for Egypt, and to scatter such as delighted in war (v. 30).

The charm in the thought of God's providence, of which the pious Hebrew never wearied, lay in his tender pity to the defenceless; that He was a father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widow; that He set the solitary in families, and brought out prisoners into prosperity; that He was prepared to give his goodness to the poor. It was for this that the saints would ascribe, for evermore, strength and excellency to Jehovah.

MONDAY, April 23. Psa. lxix.

Save me, O God! There are times in a man's life when he comes to close grips with God for himself. However thoughtful he may have been of others, he must now have God for himself. When there is no standing in deep mire, when the floods rise by inches to the lip, when the eyes fail for weeping:—what hope is there for the soul in times like these, save in God?

The keynote of this psalm is the word, Reproach. What awful trouble man causes to his brother! We need to watch our lips lest we make life harder for other souls. The psalmist's days were greatly embittered because of those that hated him without a cause. Reproach broke his heart, gall was given for his meat, and vinegar for drink. Of none are these words so true as of our Lord, who came unto his own, and his own received Him not; but, in a measure, they have fallen to the share of most of the disciples.

It is especially bitter when we suffer reproach for the sake of Christ, because we must needs bewail the blindness of those who see no beauty in Him, that they should desire Him. We smart for ourselves, but we weep most for those who are utterly indifferent to the claims of Jesus. Does one read these words who is suffering such reproach from his brethren, from his mother's house, because of his zeal for the name of Christ? Are you a proverb because you mourn your sins and theirs? Is your heart well-nigh broken with reproach? Then be of good cheer; God will turn to you in the multitude of his tender mercies. He knows all your reproach and shame and dishonour, and will draw nigh to your soul and redeem it. He will not hide his face from you, but deliver you speedily.

Is it not wonderful how psalm after psalm, which begins in the depths ends, as this does, in songs of praise! Ah! we shall one day praise God for even the darkest passages of our experience. There are sparks even in flints.

TUESDAY, April 24. Psa. lxx.

Rudyard Kipling's noble hymn, "Lest we forget, lest we forget," comes to mind as we peruse the inscription of this Psalm. It was written to bring to remembrance. We are too inclined to be insistent, when trouble is near, and to forget God, when it is past.

The psalmist was in desperate straits. Thrice he bids God to make haste, and once to make no tarrying. Like Peter, he is sinking in the water—another moment, and he will have gone under. His foes threatened to be too much for him. They sought his soul, and delighted in his hurt; and they nearly had their way. It was only in the nick of time that they were turned backward and brought to dishonour.

Are you poor and needy? Nothing could be better. To be thus, constitutes our strongest argument with God. It is the helpless and ailing child that gets most certainly its mother's care. If there were a fire at night, breaking out in the homestead, the mother's first thought and effort would be in the direction of her cripple or imbecile child. And if you are poor and needy, you are sure to have God as your Help and Deliverer. And notice, those that seek Him always have reason to rejoice and be glad in Him; and those who love his salvation have cause to magnify Him. Yes, the sweets of Christian living are not reserved for the mature saints alone, but for the sucklings and babes—for those who are nothing in themselves, but find their all in God—whose only desire is that God should be magnified in their body, whether by life or death.

WEDNESDAY, April 25. Psa. lxxi.

The prayer of an old man, who has seen a good deal of life on its roughest and most strenuous side. But he sees that God has been in it from the first. His hope and trust in his youth, his teacher from his youth, the friend and guide who had led him to the brink of the whirlpool and shown him great and sore troubles, but had withheld him from their vortex—all this and much more God had been to him through the years of the past; and now that he is old and grey-headed, he is confident that he will not be deserted or put to shame.

Our consuming desire at the end of life should be that by no act or word we should overthrow the fabric at which we have been labouring. Better never to have lived than to have brought shame on God's name or our own. And yet, such is our frailty, and the hatred of our foes, that we shall certainly make shipwreck unless God interpose to save us. Therefore the prayer, "Cast me not off in old age, forsake me not when my strength faileth."

Our purpose should be to pass on the name and honour of God; to desire to tell of his righteousness and salvation all the day; to describe the mighty acts of God, and to make mention of his righteousness, even of his only. We long to declare his strength and might to coming generations; and to pass on the torch to young hands, which shall bear it forward. These are laudable desires. Let us be as eager for spiritual children to perpetuate our testimony and influence, as the Hebrew mother was for offspring.

God's praise should be our chosen employment (vv. 8, 14, 22, 23). "My mouth shall be filled" . . . "my mouth shall tell" . . . "my mouth shall talk." Oh, that our mouth might be fragrant with these holy themes!

THURSDAY, April 26. Psa. lxxii.

O Son of God, hasten thine Advent and thy Kingdom. Thy Bride longs for thine appearing, and the evils that sin has wrought can never be uprooted until Thou hast set up thy Kingdom, which is righteousness, peace, and joy. Thy people are often misjudged and misunderstood, the poor and needy cannot get justice at the hands of the proud, the lawless ones are exalted at the expense of righteousness and peace, sin like a deluge submerges the ancient landmarks; come, oh, come, Emmanuel.

Thou shalt come. Thy Father hath given Thee the kingdom. Before times eternal, He ordained that Thou shouldest put down all rule, authority, and power, and every high thing which exalts itself against Him. The sun shall never set on thy kingdom; the moon herself shall tire and fail in her ministries to the earth before thy power shall wane. The kings of men, its artists, poets, authors, politicians, shall own thy supremacy—the poor and lowly—the differing races of men, even to the wild sons of Esau that range through the deserts, shall submit themselves to thy sway.

And as to results, they shall be as refreshing as the showers that bring the aftermath on the grass. Judgment, righteousness, and peace; deliverance for the needy, and redemption for the oppressed. To Thee, who lovest men, shall come the expression of their love. Presents from the Gentiles of the far West, gifts from the monarchs of the East. Men shall pray to Thee, and bless Thee. Nations shall be blessed in Thee, and send back their devout desires that Thou shouldst be blessed for evermore.

FRIDAY, April 27. Psa. lxxiii.

The R.V. marg. substitutes for surely the word only. "Only good is God." There is none good but One, that is God, and God is only good. Only good comes from the great and good God. Dare to believe this of all that befalls you day by day—it is only good.

His every act pure goodness is,
His path, unsullied light.

The description of the prosperity of the wicked is a very vivid one, and is as applicable to what we see in modern life as in the old Hebrew world. Still we are tempted to wonder whether we have not cleansed our heart and washed our hands in vain. The dark spirit whispers that we should have done as well and better if we had not been quite so precise. And we have only kept back the expression of such thoughts lest we should offend against the generation of God's children, who might be injured were we to say what we think. This is well. By all means keep these dark and faithless thoughts locked up within your breast. To express them will be to accentuate them; you have no right to scatter thistledown.

The true position for forming a right estimate of life is where Asaph found it, in the sanctuary of God, because, from its elevation, you are able to see the far horizon of the future. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable; but if we take into consideration the hereafter, what Lazarus would exchange his lot with Dives? At the moment of death the entire fabric of wealth and fame, for which the worldly man has pawned his soul, will vanish like the baseless fabric of a vision (20). But for the righteous, there is God's continual presence and upholding here (23); beyond, the heaven of his presence and love.

SATURDAY, April 28. Psa. lxxiv.

It was a time of sore rebuke. The enemy had broken through the sacred defences of the temple, and was engaged in destroying its richly-carved work. Their ruthless mission of devastation could only be compared to the havoc wrought in the forest by the woodman's axe. Fire, too, had burst out in the Holy Place, and the blackened walls of the sacred sanctuary told a bitter story. One of the most pathetic laments of any history is that of v. 9.

To the pious Hebrew it seemed as though God had cast off his people whom He foreknew. He had put his hand into his bosom, leaving them to their fate. There are in most lives periods of apparent Divine absenteeism. There are no signs that God has heard our prayers, or come to our aid. We seem drifting on a boundless ocean, surging under a darkened sky. We do not realize that from yonder mountain Christ is watching us with unslumbering eyes. But such periods are no without their blessing. If they are for our testing, they make us yearn for Him with new zest. If for our sins, they lead us to humble heart-searching and confession.

Let us go back on the past. Has God purchased us to cast us aside? Was He our king of old, and will He not work for our salvation still? Did He divide the sea, and break Rahab in pieces, to stultify all his work by deserting us? Aye, and there is no plea so potent as to remind God of his covenant, sealed with the blood of the cross. "Even if we are utterly undeserving and evil, have respect unto the 'I Wills' of thy covenant (20)."

Home Missions.

The Theatrical Mission.

LONDON alone possesses nearly 600 theatres and music halls, giving employment to some 100,000 persons. The life of the great majority of minor actresses wing to the excess of the supply over the mand) is more or less one of th the inevitable sequence—temptation. For e honest and pure, the life is one of peculiar fficulty. Realizing these facts, the Theatrical ission seeks to help in every possible way ose girls who, through force of circumstances, ther than from choice, find themselves difficulty, and desire to live an honest and rtuous life. With this object in view, Home is provided where these young people ay be sure of sympathy and succour. An idence of the appreciation of this agency is entioned in the annual report, which states that ring 1899 all the cubicles at Macready House re occupied, and numbers desiring to share its nefits had frequently to be refused. In this ay hundreds of young women, having no other me in London, have found a temporary refuge. hese form but a meagre proportion of the mber benefited by Macready House, for its ors are open daily; and, being in the centre of e theatrical neighbourhood of London, it fers a convenient place of resort to hundreds girls.

One case may be mentioned as showing the sappointments of the profession and the eful purpose served by this institution.

A girl who had been brought up under Christian luences in a seaside town somewhat suddenly suf- ed the loss of both parents, and found herself, at e age of nineteen, practically friendless and penni- s. Altogether unfitted for ving only just left school, she was induced to see a ay. It was the first time she had ever entered a eatre; and as she sat there, held spell-bound by e development of the play, it seemed as if a new and autiful world was opening to her, and there and en she resolved to "go on the stage." Coming to ndon she was trained as a dancer, as a preliminary her appearance on the stage. As one of a troupe of ncers this delicate and refined girl "took a turn" at veral music halls, and then suddenly found herself on the stream," without engagement, home, or end. Subsequently she was admitted to Macready ouse, where she remained for some time. When oken to about her bill for board and lodging, she rst into tears, and said she could easily get it paid, t it would mean her ruin. The memory of her ristian training, and her only sister, a missionary China, led her to express a desire "to keep right." edless to say, she did not leave Macready House til employment had been secured.

At the special services, the assembly of tiny ildren at Macready House presents a picture pathetic interest. The "Old, old story" listened to with eager interest. The love of rist finds a quick response in their young arts. The daily service for the residents of e Home is still maintained, and many are the asons of blessing experienced.

Apart from the direct work of Macready ouse, the valuable service rendered by the 0 or more lady letter-writers has been lovingly ntinued, and the writers have had the joy of nowing that their correspondence has been llowed by encouraging results. Clothing is so provided for poor cases.

The secretary of the Mission is Mr. S. E. urrow, Macready House, Henrietta Street, ovent Garden, W.C.

Venice Industrial Home.—According to the neteenth annual report, there are now nearly forty ys in this institution. A large number of boys have ssed through the Home, and the gratitude of these after years is being constantly expressed in various ays. The Holy Spirit has worked among the lads the Home in a wonderful way, and during the past ar several have made a public confession of their ith, and have given evidence of a true change of art. The address of Mrs. A. Karl Antonini is 923, ndomenta Cannaregio, Venice.

"Weary in the Work."

WHEN it is considered how disproportionate is the number of Christian workers compared with the enormous populations of our cities, it will be easily understood how necessary it is that provision should be made for them in seasons of weakness, weariness, and sickness.

The Houses of Rest at St. John's Wood and Eastbourne provide temporary homes for deaconesses, parochial mission workers, nurses, Bible women, and others, when health and strength need recruiting, or when requiring to look for new spheres of labour. There are, of course, no restrictions as to religious denomination, all Evangelical Protestants being received. Many are the weary toilers in the service of the King who have found at these houses the respite which their devotion to labour in the cause of the needy has rendered essential, and have derived therefrom encouragement and inspiration for the work to which they have given their lives.

The Seaside Branch at Eastbourne during the year admitted 590. The applications for admission are sometimes very pathetic, revealing details of much suffering and privation. Equally grateful are the testimonies to the relief and change afforded by a sojourn at the institution as the workers return to their spheres of labour renewed in body and mind.

The Aged Workers' Home, Finchley Road, founded in 1893, has proved a boon to many of those whose best years have been spent in the service of Christ, and whose old age has rendered them unfit for active service. There are now twelve rooms occupied by the inmates, whose expressions of gratitude for the help and comfort provided are a source of much encouragement. One, who for thirty years was engaged in ragged school and Bible women's work, writes: "It is with pleasure and thankfulness that I wish to say how very much I appreciate this benevolent provision for aged workers. I thoroughly enjoy the teaching and Christian fellowship, in addition to my domestic comforts and blessings."

Another, who for forty years worked in various parts of London and the provinces amongst the sick poor, remarks: "How graciously and abundantly has He supplied the need of the aged ones in the Home! What a boon it is to us! What a rest after years of toiling to find such a halting place, where one is able to look back and see the goodness which granted and denied various prayers and aspirations."

Copies of the annual report of these institutions will be gladly forwarded by the hon. superintendent, Miss Mason, 10, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

Welcome Home, Canning Town.—An interesting incident occurred in connection with the April muster of the "Christian Life-boat Crew." Miss Child always selects the text for the month, which is only given out after the meeting has begun. After she had done so, Rev. W. J. Sears, from Willesden Green, intimated that it was the same message which the Lord gave him. The text was Joel iii. 16: "The Lord is the hope [harbour] of his people." Mr. Luff, in his usual happy style, summed up the various explanations and exhortations, in the harbour being a place of Refuge, Rest, Reunion, and Recognition. A Norwegian captain gave a graphic story of his seafaring experiences. His vessel was expected to be wrecked, and he and all his crew lost through a storm; but in answer to prayer the Lord changed the wind, thus bringing him and his ship to a safe harbour.

London Medical Mission.

THIS mission continues, with gratifying success, its varied branches of work in the interests—physical and spiritual—of young and old. The first dispensary was opened in the year 1871. The lease of a beer shop at the corner of Endell Street and Short's Gardens, St. Giles, was purchased; but the premises soon became crowded, with the result that additional property had to be acquired. In addition to this, the freeholds of the Convalescent Home and Netley Cottage, Folkestone, have now been purchased. Since the first holiday home was opened in 1878 near Hatfield, the utility of this branch of the Mission has made much progress, and has proved a gracious boon to those children whose parents have not the means for recouping their lost health and strength. The report of the clothing department shows how sorely needed and greatly appreciated have been the parcels forwarded by sympathising friends.

During last year 2,678 cases were admitted to the St. Giles dispensary, and 5,650 to the one at Lambeth. To the Convalescent Home 264 were admitted, and to the Holiday House 197. Copies of the annual report will be forwarded by the secretary, Mr. C. Oakey, 33 and 34, Short's Gardens, St. Giles, W.C.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. H. J. SMART, of the Bristol Y.M.C.A., has been publicly welcomed to the secretaryship of the Weston-super-Mare Association. The Sunday afternoon Bible-class, which has been a remarkable feature of the work, having an average attendance of over two hundred young men, will continue to be conducted by the retiring secretary, Mr. Harrison.

The Diamond Fields Advertiser, dated Kimberley, March 15, gives an interesting account of the opening of a Soldiers' Christian Association tent at Newton Camp. Mr. Arthur H. Wheeler (Secretary S.C.A.) and Mr. W. G. Sprigg (Secretary Cape Town Y.M.C.A.) took part in the proceedings; and the Mayor of Kimberley formally opened the tent, giving an earnest Christian address. "At the close of the meeting," says the account, "the large, well-lighted green tent presented a pleasing sight, crowded with men, all feeling at home and delighted."

The Good Friday meetings at Stafford Rooms, Titchborne Street, Edgware Road, have for many years been a feature of the work at this old and honoured centre of Association activity. This year meetings were arranged for morning, afternoon, and evening. The breakfast at eight o'clock was followed by a meeting to which friends from the whole of the West Metropolitan district were invited, and for which the help had been secured of Revs. Dr. Hanson, F. B. Meyer, W. H. Griffith Thomas, and S. A. McCracken. Dr. J. H. Gladstone occupied the chair. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Worraker invited the members to a social gathering in the afternoon, and in the evening Rev. A. Audley Parry spoke upon missionary work in Western India.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

IT was a great pleasure, after a long absence from England, to re-visit this well-known spot. On Good Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. Isaac and their helpers were at work among the sailors with unabated energy, and the old spirit of enthusiasm was manifest everywhere. A numerous company of sailors of several nationalities was kept interested by continuous services of song, prayer and exhortation from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m., half an hour of the time being given to the consideration of a substantial tea. Addresses in German and Swedish, as well as in English, were listened to with attention. A useful department of this work is the distribution of Bibles, and it transpired during the evening that one man had by him, in constant use, a Bible that had been given him by Mr. Isaac fifteen years ago.

J. Lampard.

The Faith of God's Elect is the acknowledgment of the truth which is according to godliness. (Titus i. 1.) Never let the great design of Christianity be lost in an eager contention for any of its appendages, or any of its parts. Yet alas! how often has it, in particular instances, been wounded almost to death in a furious attempt to rescue it, and that, sometimes perhaps, from only an imaginary danger.—Dr. Doddridge.

The Late Colonel Travers, R.A.

THAT esteemed worker, Colonel John Travers, R.A., whose decease took place on February 16 last, in his eighty-third year, was a conspicuous figure in religious and philanthropic circles in the metropolis. A veteran in Christian service, he was a man of transparent sincerity, and of strong evangelical sympathies.

As speaker and organizer, his services were in constant demand, his message being accepted not less for its directness than for the gracious spirit in which it was delivered.

Early in life, and under notable circumstances, Colonel Travers yielded to the Spirit's call to Christ. In 1841, when a lieutenant, he was returning home from India, on board H.M.S. Rattlesnake. As the vessel rounded the Cape of Good Hope, arose. The young officer was deeply impressed; his heart was stirred, not by personal fear, for he was conspicuously brave, but by a strong sense of the Divine presence, which humbled him. God and eternity became actualities to his soul. He retired to his cabin and engaged earnestly in prayer. The answer came in a personal realization and application of the Saviour's words, "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out." From that time forward Lieutenant Travers bore fearless testimony for his Master under varying circumstances of difficulty, and in many climes. In the course of his military duties he was engaged in the Crimean war; and in those dark and trying days when, in addition to the terrors of battle, the troops had to encounter extreme suffering from frost and hunger, and from the want of proper arms and equipment, he evinced remarkable energy in sustaining the courage and confidence of the British soldiery, and imparting spiritual cheer and consolation. Rev. John Wilson, of Woolwich Tabernacle, tells us that a sergeant who had served under Colonel Travers in the Crimean campaign, and who died some two years since, was wont to say of his old leader: "He was the best man I ever knew." While before Sebastopol, he was privileged to minister to Captain Hedley Vicars, when that beloved officer was wounded.

A TERRIBLE STORM

As time went on, Colonel Travers devoted himself to Christian work in the neighbourhood of Woolwich and Plumstead; where, amongst other undertakings, he superintended, for thirty-six years, the Sunday school which now meets in Bloomfield Road. The good influence which he exerted upon the scholars

HAS BORNE ABUNDANT FRUIT.

In later years he was intimately associated with the work of the Bible Society, being president of the local branch of that organization. At the same time he evinced a keen interest in the Christian Colportage Association, the London City Mission, and indeed in many agencies having for their object the spread of Gospel truth.

A member of the Church of England, he had intimate fellowship with Christian people without regard to denominational position. To give him an opportunity to speak for Christ was to confer an honour upon him; and, in spite of the weakness contingent upon advancing years, he was indefatigable in visitation work. He was usually accompanied by his wife, a true fellow-labourer in the Gospel, on his missions of love and mercy. "No private worker," said one who knew him well, "has been so much engaged or so much blessed of God in visiting the sick and dying, of various denominations or of no denomination."

It was a feeling of concern for the neglected condition of the masses which led Colonel Travers into a new spere of service as a member of the local Board of Guardians. Of that body he was for some time chairman, and his influence was consistently exercised for good. In the infirmary he was regarded with esteem on account of his efforts on behalf of the SPIRITUAL INTERESTS OF THE POOR.

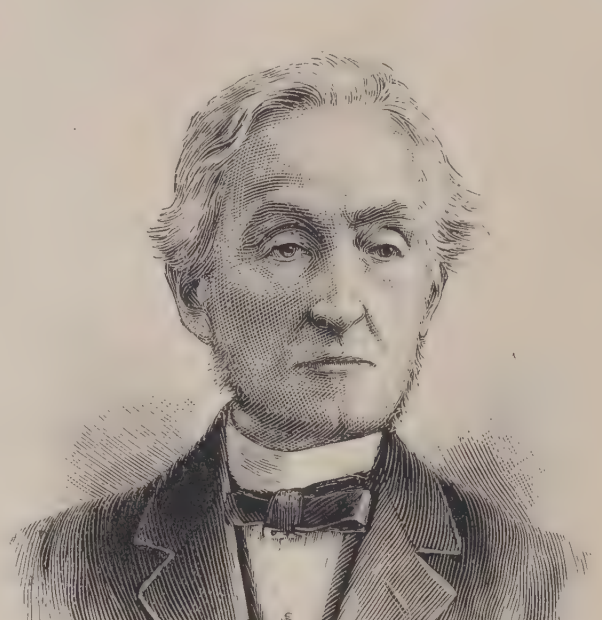
He would visit ward after ward, and he had a cheery word for each patient. After the transaction of business on a board day, he was wont to set out for the workhouse to meet "his friends," as he styled the inmates, at tea, and to conduct a service for their edification.

No one questioned Colonel Travers's right to preach. His experimental knowledge of the doctrines of grace, his holy life, his passion for souls, were all evidence of the divine sanction—yea, of an antecedent impulse, God-given and God-directed; and the seals of the Colonel's ministry are to-day found in many parts of the world.

The manner of Colonel Travers's departure was full of mercy to him and the dear companion of his life. To the end his example was one of humility, and earnest effort to lead sinners to Christ. The esteem in which he was held was evidenced at the funeral, not only by the presence of ministers and representatives of the Church of England and Nonconformity, but by a vast attendance of the common people, who could not but mourn the loss of a godly and consistent friend.



Slavery Under Britain's Flag.

AT the annual meeting of the Anti-Slavery Society, held last week, Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, who presided, said that the Society still upholds the principle that freedom should not be restricted to the British dominions and to white races, but that all on British soil should receive freedom.

The meeting recorded its satisfaction at some improvement, announced by recent reports from the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, in regard to the working of the decree abolishing the status of slavery, but expressed its regret at the slow rate of progress in regard to the number of slaves emancipated. Mr. E. W. Brooks said that the most recent regulation issued by the British Governor at Zanzibar was that no slave was to be able to obtain his (or her) freedom unless he could show his future means of subsistence. Of the 250,000 slaves in that part only some 3,000 or 5,000 had been emancipated. Mr. H. S. Williams (hon. sec. of the Pan-African Conference), as one who had benefited by the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, spoke of the pitiable plight of the natives on the African East Coast, and of the "apprenticeship" system, which is virtually slavery, in South Africa.

"Study Big Maps."

THE advice once given by the Prime Minister to "study big maps" has much in it which might be accepted profitably by us all. We are in danger of becoming insular in our spiritual life as well as in our social and other interests.

If we studied big maps, for instance, the shocking realities of the Indian Famine would appeal far more forcibly to us than as a tragedy affecting a far-off land. We should awaken to the enormous amount of suffering, and the vast area over which it is spread in waves of varying misery. If we studied big maps we should be absorbed in the great empires of Japan and China, with all their future possibilities, in a way which infrequent reading or hearing of missionary addresses fails to create in us. We should extend the frontier of our sympathies until the woes and needs of the wide world awakened in us an irresistible appeal.

Then, in our individual soul, the study of big maps will work in us a valuable relief to many of the cares of life. A gifted writer says in one of his letters to a self-sacrificing man who was debarred from many of the solaces of others: "I don't think you will be lonely long. It is the self-centred people who are lonely. The richer the gift, the richer the giver." If our outlook is extended, and embraces the cares and anxieties of other people—if we "study big maps" in the vast continent of sympathy—we shall be all the happier ourselves. Many a good man and woman has degenerated almost imperceptibly into a querulous self-centred being, just because the horizon of interests was bounded by the home in which he or she dwelt. And, on the other hand, how often the grandest, happiest workers have been those whose own private experience was the bitterest. The sharpest corners in life must be turned alone; but, thank God, life does not wholly consist of sharp corners. The man who has to soothe and sympathize," is he who "studies big maps." If you turn resolutely away from your own griefs to wipe the tears of neighbours, you will yourself grow calm and happy.

One of our greatest needs is a sense of proportion. If we are to understand how vastly more important are eternal matters than all our mundane hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, we must see things in their correct relation. To "study big maps" is a spiritual necessity if we are to progress in our life. Realize how absolutely imperative are God's commands, and what a small insignificant place on the map our own wishes will occupy. Study God's map and follow his guiding hand, and all the intricacies will be threaded safely. As in our geographical maps the hills and villages are not usually marked, so in God's map they are hidden mercifully from our inquisitive eyes. To-day we may be walking in the heavenly places; to-morrow, in the valley of the shadow of death. But our task must be to go forward daily on the King's business, our eyes fixed more often on the needs of others than on our own troubles, our hearts filled with a self-forgetful sympathy and yearning for the souls of our fellow men.

Prayer and the War. — The Executive Committee of the Memorial Hall, Augusta Place, Leamington, have issued an invitation to all the clergy and ministers of the town to use the hall for united daily prayer meetings in connection with the war in South Africa. The Memorial Hall has been recently opened, and set apart for purposes of evangelical Christian work. In their address, the committee say:—"Do we not need to pray for the desolate homes, for the bereaved, the widow, the orphan, the anxious; so many husbands, sons, fathers, brothers, laid low? Do not our statesmen need the prayers of God's people at this critical time? Finally, is there not need to pray earnestly, unitedly, for the restoration of peace and goodwill throughout South Africa?"

A Healer by Faith.

FREDRIK BALTZIUS.

A FEW years ago, living in Stockholm, I heard for the first time of the wonderful peasant of Wermland, Fredrik Baltzius, and of his gift of healing by prayer. Wishing to judge for myself, I went to see him one evening, and found him sitting with his open Bible, in the midst of a number of lame, deaf, blind, and sick people. He was talking familiarly with them, encouraging or scolding them. I was so much interested that I repeated my visit, and felt more and more attracted by this plain man, with his great and childlike faith. I can easily imagine that those who know him but imperfectly misjudge him, for he is of a very unconventional, original type. He can tell you the most unpleasant truths face to face; but those who know him well must surely discover the most tender heart under a very rough outside.

Baltzius was born on May 13, 1836, in the fine country of Wermland, in Sweden, in the village of Grawa, near the town of Carlstad. His father's grandfather had been a German physician, but his grandfather came to Sweden and took his abode at Grawa. His father was a commissioner for the province, and there were eight brothers and sisters in the family. Our friend is a tall man with characteristic features, and talks in a coarse, rustic dialect.

From childhood the Lord blessed him with good health and a very robust constitution. When his comrades quarrelled with him he used to seize the strongest of them by the neck and gently bend him to the ground, never hurting him. He was shy and reserved as a boy. In 1850 some preachers entered his home; then he thought himself to have become a child of God. Soon afterwards, however he realised that his experience was one of feeling only; he became indifferent and actually hostile to spiritual impressions. Shortly after that his conscience troubled him greatly on the question of sin. The preaching which he mostly heard was on death, judgment, and hell. The uneasiness of his soul rose to despair; he could find no peace, but walked alone in the neighbouring woods, wringing his hands in anguish. Several times he tried to kill himself, but the Lord prevented his doing so.

In 1865, he got peace and rest in Jesus, after an entire year of terrible anxiety of soul. He was now born anew, to be a living child of God. A Divine work began in him, and God's love was poured into his soul. He had now an ardent desire to testify for and to confess his Saviour. His mother and sister, to whom he told his conversion, would not believe him at first, but he proved in his life the reality of the change professed, so that at length they became conscious of not being converted themselves, and surrendered to the Saviour.

The life-task of Baltzius was now to live for Jesus, and to become a help and support to his neighbours. By his firm faith and unshakable trust, he became, and still is, a blessing to many. The Lord showed him that he had received freely, and must also give freely. The Spirit summoned him to go and to "preach the Gospel to every creature," to cast out devils, and to lay his hands on the sick. He obeyed the voice implicitly.

He began by walking about to the peasants' cottages and estates, collecting rags and ironmongery, which gave him rich opportunity to talk of Jesus, and to testify of God's love for sinners. The first occasion when he tried to trust the Lord as his Physician was when he got a sore foot, which prevented him from walking about. He had been reading that Jesus and the apostles laid their hands on the sick, and they received health and strength again. He remembered what is written in Mark xvi. 17: "These signs shall follow them that believe," &c. Accordingly, he laid his hand on the sore foot, and prayed; having done this, he put on his boots believingly, and began to jump about. He was restored to health! The Lord became greater to him by this, and His name was glorified. An inner voice told him he should go out and help the sick and miserable. He began with less severe maladies, laying his hands on the sick, praying the Lord to help; and he saw the sick recover. At this Baltzius was very glad, giving glory to God. Being blessed to the sick and sorrowful, he became full of pity for the poor, and the Lord owned his word and deed. Having few needs himself, he has distributed to the poor with a liberal hand. When he saw that lighter maladies disappeared by the prayer of faith, he dared soon to believe for more severe sicknesses. He was permitted to witness the blind receiving their sight, the deaf hearing, and the lame being empowered to leap. Many a deadly sickness vanished before God's all-healing power.

A word must be said as to Baltzius' manner of examining the faith of sick persons. He talks to one at a time, and presents strong proofs from Scripture of the Lord's power as our Physician. Then he says that faith must precede help, and he asks, "Do you believe that God will restore your health?"

Further, he puts the question: "When is God willing to do so?" If the answer is "at once" he takes the sick one to be treated. He insists that the sick person must be converted, and that there shall be nothing crooked or uncertain in his position in the presence of God. Before selecting a sick person out of a larger assembly he says the short prayer, "Dear Lord, do show me whom I am to take." When God's Spirit has shown him the right person, he takes the patient into another apartment. Those that are left are bidden to pray the Lord to help, while the treatment is proceeding in the adjoining room. Baltzius prays with the patients, anoints them with oil, and lays his hands on them. He even uses handkerchiefs, after Acts xix. 11, 12. He never affords himself any rest, and is often engaged till late in the night. He is very anxious that honour should not be bestowed on him, and emphatically repeats that it is the Lord Jesus who is doing the work, he himself doing merely the servant's part on the lowest stage. It is touching to hear his fervent prayer to be preserved from thinking himself to be anything.

A more childlike, simple, and faithful follower of the Lord Jesus it would be difficult to find. His prayers prove his implicit faith and his habitude to converse with God. A short example of it may be allowed: "We now pray to Thee, dear heavenly Father, that Thou mayest open the windows of heaven and that torrents, torrents, torrents of thy Spirit may come over us. O Lord, Thou who hast created heaven and earth, it is nothing to Thee to cure these sick ones. Thou hast given us so many promises; thy book, the Bible, is full of them." Then he will begin to count up all the books of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, sending them up to God's throne with all their divine promises. This is generally followed by an assurance in his spirit that God has heard his prayer. Many of the most wonderful cures have happened in Sweden, and are still happening. I heard this testified by believing clergymen. It were easy to understand that such a simple-minded man should be deceived and make mistakes, believing too eagerly in the recovering of some; but independent witnesses agree in confirming th startling statements.

But the cure of the body is not the principal object with Baltzius; he is very eager for his patients' souls. If he is heartily bent on a soul's salvation, he will lie on his face for a long time praying for it. Neighbours hear him praying aloud in the middle of the night for the conversion of souls, and that the Holy Spirit may be poured out on cities and countries. He never dismisses the sick without having treated them with good coffee and cake; when his provision is at an end, he simply tells the Lord, thanking Him beforehand. The thing begged for is sent to him shortly. Then his joy is great, and he exclaims, "Have I not a good landlord? Was I not right to leave my first master, and to choose this one?" On the road you will often meet him, bearing a bundle, consisting of a coloured peasant's handkerchief, containing his large Bible and provisions for his sick ones; or he may be leading by the hand some blind or invalids, taking them to other sick or believing people to strengthen their faith. In his leisure, when at home, he helps his sister to dig out potatoes in the field; or he reads his Bible in a loud voice. He has done this in the streets of Stockholm, and boldly goes about speaking aloud to his God. He is often asked to hold Bible readings, and then he generally speaks in a very childlike manner of the Lord's coming and the beauties of the New Jerusalem.

Many were the lessons this dear old man taught me; first of all, that we must "be converted and become as little children." A. v. K.

Bible School for South Devon.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for the holding of a twelve weeks' Bible School in Plymouth, Devonport, Torquay, Newton Abbot, and Exeter. Committees of ministers and laymen have been formed for the different centres. Halls have been secured, and already much prayerful interest has been created in the movement.

The dates and hon. secretaries are as follow: Torquay, commence Wednesday, April 18; Miss Perrens, Piercefield, hon. sec. Newton Abbot, Thursday, April 19; Mr. H. G. C. Bishop, Greenbank, hon. sec. Plymouth, Friday, April 20; Devonport, Monday, April 23; Mr. W. A. Moore, Royal William Yard, Stonehouse, hon. sec. Exeter, Tuesday, April 24; Rev. J. H. Cooke, LL.D., 29, St. Leonards Road, hon. sec.

I shall be glad to open up communications with friends for the formation of an autumn course in and around London.

A Pastoral Testimony.—It pleased me nothing to see people drink in opinions if they seemed ignorant of Jesus Christ and the worth of their own salvation. Sound conviction for sin, especially for unbelief, and an heart set on fire to be saved by Christ, with strong breathing after a truly sanctified soul—that it was that delighted me; those were the souls I counted blessed.—John Bunyan.

Other Lands.

In the Bahamas.

NASSAU.

HERE I called on the Presbyterian minister, Rev. R. T. Bailey, whom I found to have been a college chum of Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast. They stood together, with others, in a photograph which he showed me. A large new hotel was built last year by Mr. Flagler, who had also bought and enlarged the Royal Victoria. He practically owns and works the railway on the East Coast of Florida, and has built along the coast several large hotels, some with extensive grounds exquisitely laid out. He also owns the vessel which plies between Miami and Nassau. Thus, the traffic on that coast and at Nassau is entirely in his hands; as also it is on the west coast in the hands of the Plant Co., whose Tampa Bay Hotel is one of the finest houses in the United States.

When Mr. Flagler brought 400 men from the Southern States to build the new hotel, "The Colonial," Mr. Bailey took occasion to impress upon the foremen that all men are equal before the law in the Bahamas, and that if a white man assaulted a black man he would be treated just the same as would the other if the cases were reversed. They received his counsel, and there was no trouble. Indeed, conditions which prevail at Nassau must have been a wholesome object-lesson to those workmen.

Mr. Bailey preached on the Sunday morning on "Diversities of Gifts," naming as illustrations three great men who had recently passed away—D. L. Moody, Dr. James Martineau, and John Ruskin. He fully appreciated the evangelist, said that the Unitarian divine, like Channing, was far better than his creed, and eulogized Ruskin from various points of his many-sided character. From my point of view, I thought that had the first-named come last it would have made a better climax.

The largest congregation in Nassau is the coloured Baptist, over which Rev. C. A. Dann, formerly of the Pastors' College, presides. Mr. Rowland Edwards, now of the Evangelization Society, preached there a year or two ago to congregations for whom there was no room inside the building. Mr. Dann is doing good work. There is a large number of members in this church, including its several branches in the other islands.

The Established Church is represented by the two extremes of High and Evangelical. There is an able and earnest coloured Baptist minister, Mr. Roberts, and a second white Baptist pastor, Rev. Mr. Wilshere, with six branch churches in other islands. There is also a Congregational Church, and more than one meeting of "the Brethren." The Presbyterians have a useful school in the suburbs, called the Quarry Mission.

Nassau is becoming quite a popular resort, and the large accommodation provided will tend to multiply the visitors in the coming time. "Summerlands," published at Nassau, contains much interesting information.

AN UNEXPECTED MEETING.

A friend writes me: "If you live long enough, there will not be a spot on the habitable globe that you have not visited." But I am continually reminded how small the world is. Here at Nassau a letter came from an American lady, whom I had known in London, asking me to call upon her. She and her husband had been unwearied tract and Scripture distributors. Their last field had been in Mexico, where they had sold at two cents each thousands of the beautiful Illustrated Gospels of the Scripture Gift Mission. Thousands of tracts and portions were constantly being given away for years by this devoted pair, both in delicate health. Last year the husband was called to the home above; now the one that is left has for her chief purpose in life to carry on the same work wherever she may be led.

The currency in Nassau is, of course, English—at least nominally. But there are so many Americans there, and so much business is done with the United States, that dollars and cents are in very general use. Indeed, I wonder more and more that we should cleave so blindly and tenaciously to the antiquated and artificial, complicated and cumbersome system of £ s. d., and sell heavy goods by Avoirdupois weight, 16oz. 1lb., and the precious metals by Troy weight, 12oz. 1lb. Why should we waste the precious time of our children, our clerks, our customers, and handicap our home and foreign trade, by methods of calculation which could be done in half the time, with half the liability to error, by the decimal system? The go-a-head American, the retrogressive Spaniard, the superficial Frenchman, the plodding German, are all in advance of us in this respect. The inconvenience of the change would be temporary, the benefit would be permanent. It will have to come some day; the sooner the better, the easier, the more advantageous.

NEW Y.M.C.A. BUILDINGS.

Last year Mr. Gordon Sprigg, the able and indefatigable secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Capetown, was in England endeavouring to raise funds for a new building in that important city, now more important than ever, especially for our young men. I have just heard from Mr. T. D. Patton, the efficient and energetic secretary of the Y.M.C.A. of the city of Winnipeg, Manitoba, that they hope to begin their new building as soon as the frost is out of the ground. They have within 10,000dols (£2,000) of the total amount needed to erect and equip the building; and the canvass is being pushed vigorously, as they want to have every cent promised from the beginning. They wish their friends in the old land could see the great need, and that a little help might go that way.

Seeing how much Cape Colony and all South Africa have suffered from the disastrous war, and how much and how nobly Canada has helped us, has not the Y.M.C.A. in each country a valid claim on our aid in their new buildings, which are chiefly for the benefit of our own young men? Very large sums have been contributed to the war, the wounded, and the bereaved, but a great proportion has come from those outside of ordinary Christian givers. The terrible Indian famine is now also urgently appealing to us. But may we not hope that during the year, by the good hand of God upon us, we may be able to have some stones in both of these much-needed buildings, as well as helping to save our famishing fellow-subjects in India from death? Hebron Medical Mission is one of the numerous beneficent institutions associated with Mildmay. The attendance during the year 1899, of Jews, Christians, and Moslems has again emphasized the utility and importance of the work, and how wide is the influence brought to bear upon the lives of the deserving and afflicted poor in Hebron. The mission, however, is not simply a dispensary, for the homes of the villagers are constantly visited and cheered by the sympathy and assistance of the workers. The treasurer and superintendent of the Mission is Colonel J. F. Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

Notes from New York.

A SOMEWHAT remarkable sermon was preached on Sunday, April 1, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, by Father Pardow, upon the Bible. He took the position that Luther's great cry was "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible," and that the effect of the "Higher Criticism" was to admit that the principles of the Reformation were wrong, in so far as that movement's object was to give the infallible Bible to the people. He quoted Pope Leo XIII. as saying that "Higher Criticism resolves itself into the reflection of the bias and prejudices of the critics; and, seeing that most of these men are tainted with false philosophy and so-called rationalism, their criticism must lead to the elimination from the Bible of all prophecy, of all miracle, and of everything that goes beyond the natural order." The preacher also expressed his surprise that Protestants should send so many Bibles to the heathen, without also supplying a key for the discovery of the errors which they assert to exist in them.

The New York Rescue Band is an energetic body of workers, that carries on many forms of religious and philanthropic effort. It has about a hundred volunteer labourers, representing some twenty-three churches of the city. A night or two ago I went to the first anniversary of their Thecla Home for Wayward Girls. It is a building well adapted for the purpose; formerly it was a saloon. There is accommodation for about half-a-dozen girls, besides the officers in charge. During the year twenty-seven girls have passed through it, of whom seven have been sent back to their own homes, three placed in other homes, and seventeen are doing well—some of them in positions of credit as well as usefulness. Three are now members of churches. All the girls received (seven being now in the Home) had been brought up in professedly Christian homes.

Negotiations have been completed between the British Government and the Christian Herald (New York), by which that energetic paper is authorised to charter a steamer to take a cargo of (Indian) corn to India. It is expected that the cargo will consist of about 3,000 tons of grain. The daily amounts received by the Christian Herald for the benefit of the famine sufferers in India are about 3,000dols, and more than 30,000dols have been already cabled to that country.

The Christian Endeavour Unions of Louisville, Ky., have been raising money for a farm to be used this summer as a playground for the poor. Among others who contributed were some distillers of the city, who gave among them more than 1,000dols. Much to the disgust of the liquor men, the Christian Endeavour people have decided to return these donations.

We are solemnly informed by a press despatch from South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, that as a result of a temperance campaign conducted by Colonel Hadley (late of the U.S. Church Army), the entire police force of the town has "sworn off" liquor, and adopted the blue button—the latter being the successor of the blue ribbon. Bethlehem is a kind of American Sheffield, with great ironworks, from which a great deal of armour plate has been sent for our Navy. Roger Martin.

The Evangelical Alliance Quarterly (1d. Morgan & Scott), contains some useful comments on matters of momentary and general significance. A thoughtful sermon by Rev. F. B. Meyer on "The Gift of the Holy Spirit for Service," and deeply interesting items of news from other lands, render the current number particularly valuable.

Quietness, to the person endued with it, or practising it, begetteth tranquility and peace; for he that letteth others alone, and cometh in no man's way, no man will be apt to disquiet or cross him—he keepeth himself out of broils and factions. But the busybody createth vexation and trouble to himself—others will be ready to molest him in his proceedings, because he disturbeth them in theirs; he that will have a sickle in another's corn, or an oar in every man's boat, no wonder if his fingers be rapped.—Isaac Barrow.

Moorish Prisoners and their Friends.

I HAVE to thank many kind friends for their liberal response to my appeal in The Christian some months ago, in behalf of the wives and children of poor Moorish prisoners. We have clothed over 100 children, and over fifty women have received garments. Christmas dinners were given to women and children, and prisoners were helped in various ways. After a meeting at which the Gospel was explained, one of the hearers said: "You talk of heaven. This is heaven! Never since we were born has anyone taken such an interest in us."

In all, we have helped some 500 persons. Our kindness, however, was viewed in another light by the Moorish Government. To see nearly 100 children leaving the Mission House with new garments was too much for the fanatical section of the Moslem community. Many praised us—"Those who do such things will get to Paradise as well as ourselves. They are whose hearts are hard and unsympathetic, while theirs are tender and full of love."

Apparently our interest in the prisoners and their families was communicated to the Sultan and his Ministers, for we had scarcely finished our work when an order came from the Sultan to drive the wives and children of the prisoners out of the town, and have their huts and tents razed. One Sabbath morning, in the midst of a perfect hurricane of wind and rain, the order was carried into effect, and the people sent back to their own country. It was most heart-rending to witness mothers and their little ones crying and pleading with the soldiers to leave their huts and tents until the storm was over. Their entreaties were of no avail. Many of the women and children were imprisoned in a fonduk (native inn) till the morning, when they were driven off by the soldiers

LIKE SO MANY CATTLE.

The rivers were in flood, and, in the midst of an indescribable scene of weeping, the poor women were made to cross as best they could. Several, we were told, were carried down the streams, and heard of no more.

Surely, one day, ere long, the cry of these poor sufferers will be heard by God Himself! The sad condition of the people here ought to make us sincerely grateful to God for a humane Government and kind Christian friends to help and care for the suffering and erring. Any who may feel interested in the sad lot of the poor prisoners, and our work, might kindly communicate with our hon. secretary, Mr. Grahame Wilson, 191, Meadowpark Street, Dennistoun, Glasgow.

'Ngelani Mission, East Africa.

LABOURING single-handed amongst the Wakamba and Masai, Mr. Stuart Watt finds that the work is out-growing his strength; he needs a married couple to assist him. Besides having built his own little mission church, he has to act as doctor to the surrounding tribes.

An evangelist and his wife have volunteered to go out in October, after the former has learnt a little practical craftsmanship; and, as Mr. Watt's private means have been exhausted in carrying on a pioneer mission at his own charges for the last seven years in this half-way station to Uganda, it is necessary that the candidates raise their own passage money and outfit expenses.

Determining to know nothing but "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and finding no society willing to finance a mission in an hitherto unoccupied corner of dark Africa, Mr. Watt went out trusting in God alone for all needed supplies. Money is urgently needed now that the work is established in the hearts of the warlike natives, and more especially as Mr. Watt has come to an end of his own little property.

Itinerating in China.

IN a letter to English friends, Mr. Archibald Orr Ewing relates his experiences while visiting the mission stations in the north-east of Kiang-si. He writes:—

Having reached Tong-hsiang-hsien on Saturday afternoon, oppressed by a severe cold, I was little equal for the labours of the Sabbath. Quite a number of persons came twelve miles to worship, which meant that after the forenoon service and a meal they had to return home. To come this distance steadily week by week shows a real desire on their part to serve God.

A number of workers had formerly been opium-smokers, and Miss Caroline has, by the blessing of God, enabled them to get free from the injurious habit. They have banded themselves together, praying for one another, and encouraging each other to trust the Lord to keep them from backsliding. The number of pressing invitations I received to visit the people in their homes was astonishing.

One man, a military graduate, had brought his horse for me to ride, by way of ensuring that I should go to his place, but I had reluctantly to refuse. Having visited Hsu-uan, where Miss MacFarlane and Miss M. Brown are designated to work, we left for Kink-hsien. Here we found Miss Cormack, who had come from Shang-ts'ing to meet us. This little city is a quiet place, situated among the hills, and there are quite a number of people interested in the Gospel.

A very serious fire had just taken place in the city, and the remarkable thing about it was that the flames travelled north and south, stopping on the north side just in time to save the house of an inquirer. On the south side a similar thing occurred. Between the houses of these two Christians fully 200 buildings, consisting of the principal shops of the place, were burnt down. The natives were struck with the way God had delivered his children. We had a crowded meeting, and there seemed to be a deep desire after the truth in the hearts of the people.

Starting the following morning from Shang-ts'ing, we were favoured with only a small amount of rain. Next day was Sunday, and we could not accommodate with any degree of comfort the large number of people who crowded the chapel; though only one was received, there seems promise of a large ingathering, as people attend worship from many surrounding villages. A member and his wife were ready to give their services to the Lord's work free of any remuneration if we were prepared to open a hall in a place about ten miles off, which we quite hope to be able to do.

At Ing-tuen the Romanists have a large chapel and buildings; they are much disliked by the people. There is a most flourishing work in the town. Not long before our visit an innkeeper named Kuei, formerly an opium-smoker, celebrated his mother's seventieth birthday. He desired to do it in a manner pleasing to the Lord, so he rented a newly-built shop, bought lamps and other decorations, spread a feast and invited the sisters, making the day a time of preaching. We had a very hearty reception, and a splendid meeting in the evening. At the service in Kuei-h'i we had a large attendance, and on Monday morning very early we had our first of the seventy-six baptisms which took place here during our visit.

A Missionaries' Rest.

ALLOW me to inform you that we have taken a house at the address below with the object of helping African missionaries.

In addition to the usual furlough every four or five years, because the African climate is so severe on Europeans, there is need of rest and change for a brief period in order to prevent illness and possibly worse.

We invite missionary friends to stay with us free for a fortnight, and afterwards 15s. a week till recruited. My house is five miles from Las Palmas, at an elevation of 1,000 feet above sea-level.

The Mission to Lepers.

NOT long ago a Chinese mandarin gathered the lepers of his district together, under promise of a supper, and while they were feasting had the building fired, soldiers being placed on guard to shoot those who escaped the flames. From Sumatra a lady missionary writes, that, on going to see a leper woman recently, she was shocked to find only the burnt trees which grew around her hut. Only two days before, another leper was put to death in the same way. He was a strong man, and tried to escape, but was thrust back into the fire with spears. This was the fourth leper burned alive during this past year in that district alone!

The readiness of lepers to accept the Saviour is confirmed by workers from most of the fifty-five stations in which the Mission to Lepers is now at work. Their very affliction, their isolation, their utter helplessness, all constrain them to listen to the message of the missionaries, who have shown them the only kindness they can find on earth. Testimony is also often borne to the influence of such very practical Christianity on the heathen around. Every Leper Home is an object-lesson of the true character of the Christian faith, and many of the non-Christian natives have been profoundly impressed by the fact.

During the past year the Mission to Lepers has erected new hospitals, wards, or children's homes, at six centres, and they are undertaking work in six new stations this year. New buildings of various kinds are about to be erected in Seoul (Korea), Sumatra, Miraj (India), Ludhiana, and Ramachandrapuram, as well as in two places in China. The London office of the Mission to Lepers is at Exeter Hall, Strand, where further particulars may be obtained from Mr. John Jackson.

A Christian Home in Paris.

THE Exhibition opened on Sunday, April 15. Alas, Sunday is the world's day and not the Lord's day in Paris. In many quarters numerous workmen are still toiling day and night, Sunday and week-day alike, constructing the new transient city in the old one.

Thousands of English-speaking Christian young women will doubtless come to sojourn a little while near the "Exposition," either for business, or instruction, or recreation, and it is most important that they, or those who take an interest in their souls' welfare, should know of a Christian home where they would be in a congenial atmosphere. There are a few such in this gay and giddy Romanist capital—the Girls' Friendly, Miss Leigh's, and one or two others; but there is one which is not known to most Christians in England. It is the "Training Home for Bible Readers," under the superintendence of Madame D'Alencourt. This highly esteemed Christian worker founded her work of evangelization twenty-nine years ago, and it has supplied lady workers to the French Missions to the Heathen, to the McAll Mission, and to other evangelistic societies. Her "Home" is now at 67, Rue du Théâtre, Grenelle, only ten minutes distant from one of the main entrances of the Champ de Mars Exhibition grounds. It is situated in a quiet street, has bright and airy rooms, also a pleasant garden. It is a plain, clean, and comfortable abode.

During the Exhibition of 1889, several persons who sojourned in this "Training Home" testified to its being "a quiet, healthy, Christian home, which had proved a spiritual boon to them." French, of course, is the language used there; but Mme. D'Alencourt speaks English also. Nobody should come without having previously corresponded with her, and being introduced by a minister of the Gospel, or some well-known Christian, as otherwise there may be no bed free for them when they arrive.

Considering the Exhibition season, the terms will be very moderate. A stay in this Christian Institute will give an insight into French women's work for Christ in Paris. S. H. A.

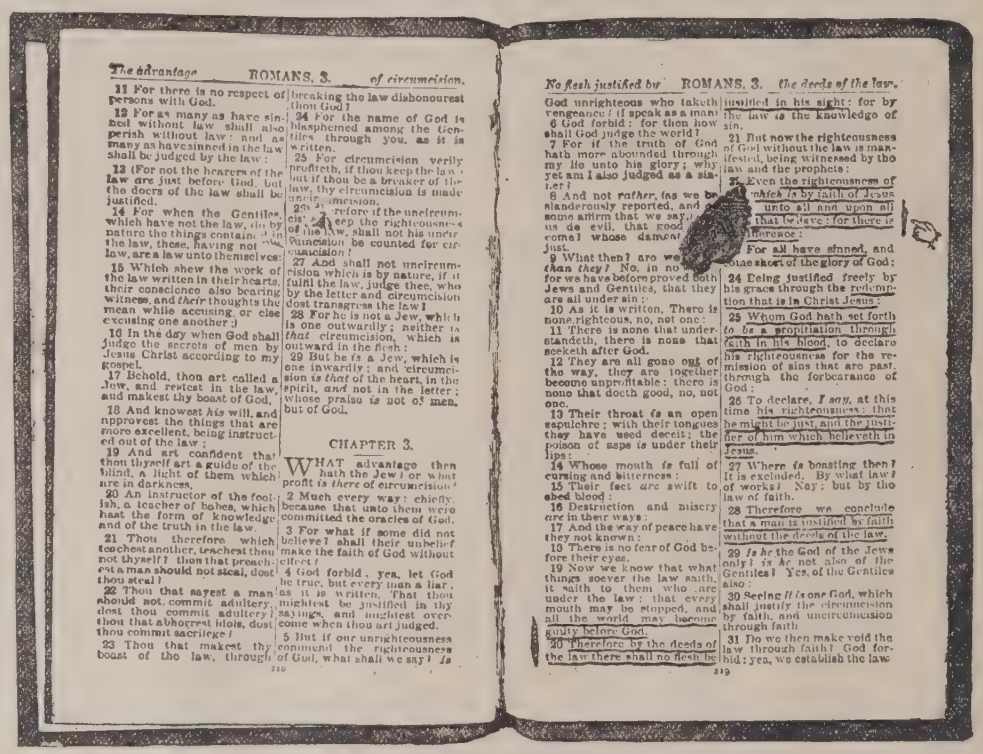
BIBLE SOCIETY'S WORK.

THE Bible Society is distributing the Scriptures in South Africa irrespective of race or party. Among prisoners on board the Penelope, and others at the convict station, 213 Dutch Bibles have been distributed. To the Wynberg Military Hospital over 400 Bibles and Testaments have been sent, and more are to follow.

About 13,000 Testaments, Gospels, and Psalms, in a neat and portable form, have been circulated among the troops on active service in South Africa. Recently 2,000 New Testaments and Gospels, mostly Dutch, well bound and of good type, were sent to Pretoria for the sick and wounded, and for the British prisoners. They have been forwarded by the permission of the authorities, and by the favour of the United States Consul-General.

A "BULLET-PROOF" TESTAMENT.

We have received the following interesting communication from Mrs. Menzies, of Liverpool:—"A Christian soldier, a 'rough-rider,' when recently distributing at embarkation, amongst his fellow-men, some of the red-marked Testaments, published by the Oxford Press, said to each comrade:—You will value it, as it is 'bullet-proof.' The accompanying photograph of one of the Testaments, which was in the engagement of Graspan and was brought down to Cape Town, shows how, when the book in question was struck, it not only shielded the owner, but the bullet, after passing from the back of the book through 142 pages, stopped at page 218, and there remained embedded as 'a monument of mercy.' How many more bullets may yet be found in a similar position, to speak as clearly, has yet to be told. This photograph would interest many praying wives and mothers who have those they love at the front."



The advantage ROMANS. 3. of circumcision.

11 For there is no respect of persons with God.
12 For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law;
13 (For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.
14 For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves:
15 Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excusing one another;)
16 In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel.
17 Behold, thou art called a Jew, and restest in the law, and makest thy boast of God,
18 And knowest his will, and approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law;
19 And art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness,
20 An instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law.
21 Thou therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?
22 Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?
23 Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through

No flesh justified by ROMANS. 3. the deeds of the law.

God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man)
6 God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world?
7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?
8 And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.
9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin;
10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one:
11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.
12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.
13 Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips:
14 Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness:
15 Their feet are swift to shed blood:
16 Destruction and misery are in their ways:
17 And the way of peace have they not known:
18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.
19 Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.
20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.
21 But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets;
22 Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference:
23 For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;
24 Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:
25 Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;
26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.
27 Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.
28 Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.
29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also:
30 Seeing it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.
31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law

ON A TROOPSHIP.

An esteemed correspondent sends us a letter which he has received from a friend who is engaged on active service. From this we give extracts bearing on Christian work: "I have had several deeply interesting conversations, and have pressed the Gospel with its claims and offers on my fellow-officers. My senior subaltern was, I think, a little disconcerted on the first night or two, when I quietly produced my Bible and read it. He refused to be drawn into any remarks. At mess, two or three days ago, there came a criticism on my teetotalism, and an assault on the inspiration of the Bible. I tried to utilize the opportunity to the best advantage, and the whole mess listened with the deepest interest. Nor did the incident close there; again and again I have been 'tackled' in public and private by one and another. Several appear to be earnestly seeking the truth. Though I feel my weakness, and the impossiblity of really touching the soul by mere argument or entreaty, I feel that God is working and answering, not only my own prayers, but those of many at home."

Dunkerque Sailors' Rest.

THE seventh annual report of this mission among British and foreign seamen in Dunkerque, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie, is an encouraging record of Gospel effort. It gives an account of a wonderful work of grace on board a steamer trading between Dunkerque and England; through the influence of one of the engineers, an earnest Christian man, and one of the firemen, who was converted at the "Rest," several of the crew have been saved, and blessing has extended to their homes in Rotterdam and Liverpool. We make a brief extract:—

"The last Sunday in December, J.B. (the fireman) brought with him to our Sunday evening service a young man, R.K., who had recently joined the ship. The first hymn sung was 'O happy day that fixed my choice.' Before we reached the last verse, our new friend was deeply affected. The memories of past years, when he was a member of a Bible-class, and of the holy and happy influences that surrounded his youth, flooded his memory, until he could no longer restrain his emotions. He broke down utterly, and cried to God to have mercy upon him. It was our privilege to lead this sorely-stricken soul to the fountain of living waters.

"That night R.K. left not only the old year, but the old life of sin and self behind him. His wife and brother had long been praying for his conversion. Who can tell with what feelings of joy and gratitude to God they received the tidings from Dunkerque that he had been brought into the fold of the Good Shepherd!"

Thus, from this mission in a comparatively unknown seaport on the coast of France, the Word of God goes forth with power, bringing new hope to sin-sick souls, and touching with a divine radiance the common round of daily toil, as well as brightening the homes of many whom we have never seen, and never may see in this life. Through the loss of friends and supporters, the work is in financial need. The superintendent is Mr. D. S. Mackenzie, Sailors' Rest, Dunkerque, France.

Chinese Bible Women.

THE Chinese Bible Woman's Mission, working in co-operation with the Church Missionary Society and other approved agencies, and affiliated with the Society for Promoting Female Welfare, has before it the sending forth of native Bible women. In addition to this the Mission supports beds in the hospitals at Hangchow, Ningpo and Foochow, and a day school at Ningpo.

The Lamp of China (1d. quarterly. Morgan & Scott) contains some deeply interesting communications from missionary ladies in China bearing grateful testimony to the work accomplished by these Mission agencies. One of these letters runs:—"We meet with many who seem to be interested in the doctrine we teach, and ask us to teach them to pray to the true God, and promise to do so themselves instead of praying to Buddha."

Surely these poor dark souls are groping for the light of the Gospel, and it is a happy privilege and joy to witness many being born again. Another communication reads: "Your Bible woman in Chuki has her hands very full. She is single-handed, and has to prepare candidates for baptism and confirmation; she frequently to take up temporary residence at our country stations for this purpose." From Hong Kong a lady writes: "Our Bible women are working diligently. Last Sunday I was at one of the C.M.S. stations on the mainland—Kowloon. Some people were baptized in the little church. One was a woman whom Sun Tsing, your Bible woman, had been teaching from a village close by. The husband is already a Christian. There is only one other Christian home in this village, but a good many of the women receive Sun Tsing and listen to her teaching. Will you pray that they may do more—repent and believe?"

The urgency of the work is obvious from the fact that the Bible Women are able to go where foreign missionaries find no entrance. £5 supports a Bible woman for a year in most parts of China. Many more such workers could easily be placed.

The hon. treasurer of the Mission is Mrs. Elborough Woodcock, 8, Buckingham Gate, S.W.

Negroes in Canada.

THE successor to the well-known Bishop Hawkins has come to Great Britain to plead the cause of the coloured Methodists of Canada. Forming the British Methodist Episcopal Connexion, these people are not specially numerous, but particularly poor, and scattered in the Provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia. Rev. C. A. Washington, the present Bishop, is soliciting help for an agency which is calculated greatly to assist the church life of his people. In a word, he asks for help towards the establishment of an aged and worn-out ministers' Home. About £1,800 will be needed, and already nearly half has been promised. Composed largely of liberated slaves, or the children of such, this community cannot, unaided, supply this great lack in its religious organization. Bishop Washington will be glad of opportunities to tell the story of his Church, and plead for its need. He may be addressed the next few weeks—Wild's Hotel, 34, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

WORSHIP IN HINDU TEMPLES.

NONE of my young friends will, I hope, suppose that worship in Hindu Temples in India resembles at all worship in churches and chapels in England. Most of the sacred buildings there are too small for a congregation of any size to assemble in them. The great majority are only just large enough for the image they shelter and the priest who officiates at the altar. Eight or ten feet square is an ordinary size for a Hindu temple.

The image occupies, perhaps, two feet of this: the space in front being for the priest as he mutters the texts, rings his bells, and offers fruit, flowers, leaves and water to the idol. The hideous idol of course hears nothing, and knows nothing of the object for which the pilgrim presents his offering. The aim of the worshipper, if such he may be called, is evidently to hurry to the priest with his present, make his offering, and get away as quickly as possible. There is no prayer, no hymn of praise, no exhortation—just a scramble to get to the front of the image, and then a hasty retreat. And this is believed to secure the forgiveness of sin, and to be at the same time a meritorious act.

Contrast with this your own house of prayer, where the Father of all mercies is the supreme object of worship, and Jesus Christ is exalted as the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." Not because you fear God do you come to Him as the Hindu comes to his shrine, but because you love Him and desire to grow like Him.

But you would like a pen-picture, I am sure, of some particular Hindu temple. Here, then, is one, larger than most, which stands at Kali Ghat, near Calcutta. A holy place it is, to which pilgrims come from all parts of India because of the great benefits a visit is supposed to secure.

The temple stands on the banks of a small stream that is believed to have once been the bed of the Ganges. It is almost hidden by a number of small shops, as the pilgrims who visit the holy place are anxious to carry away with them mementoes of their visit and presents for their friends. In front of the temple proper is a platform with a roof, but no walls, where a number of Brahmans are always to be seen reading the sacred books or repeating the names of the gods. In front of this platform are the frames fixed in the ground for holding the victims that are there to be sacrificed. On the other side of it is the shrine, between which and the platform is a narrow passage used by visitors in order to pass in front of the image.

But of the shrine itself? It contains the image of the goddess Kali—a most repulsive-looking object. She is represented as a black woman, with three glaring eyes—the third being in her forehead. Her huge tongue, made of bright gold, protrudes from her mouth, reaches to her waist, and is seen better than any other part of the image. For earrings she has two human heads, a garland of human skulls for a necklace, and a waistband formed of human hands. All these decorations she is supposed to have taken from the enemies she slew during her visit to the earth.

The temple is an immense source of profit to its owners, as they receive about 7½d. as a fee from every goat that is sacrificed there. The priests and all the numerous attendants are in the service of the family that profits by the falsely called worship before this gruesome image. And every offering or supplication has to be presented by a priest. No ordinary Hindu can perform religious rites for himself. At certain times the number of victims slain in front of this image is so many that the courtyard literally streams with their blood.

And this is a representation of religious worship in India to-day. Can you wonder at all that Christian people in England, who have heard Christ's command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," hunger and pray to send the knowledge of Jesus Christ to the perishing millions of India? I fervently hope that many of the readers of these pen-pictures will by-and-by consecrate themselves to missionary work in some part of the great heathen world.

*"I am Ready!"

IT is said that Oliver Cromwell, while visiting one of the great churches in England, discovered a number of silver statues in the niches of a side chapel, and demanded sternly of the trembling dean, "What are these?" "Please, your highness," was the reply, "they are the twelve Apostles." "The twelve Apostles, are they? Well, take them down, and coin them into money, that, like their Master, they may go about doing good." I see many rich gifts and powers adorning your lives—gifts of speech, of song, of love, of influence, of capacity for work. They are very beautiful there, in your soul, but Christ wants them at work, doing good.

This is my first counsel to Christian young people. Bring every grace and gift of your life into Christ's service. Not only use well the gifts you have employed already, but develop what you have into greater skill and power. Strive to excel. Grow by working.

An artist, when asked, "What is your best picture?" answered, "My next!" Never look back for your best work for Christ, but forward; make to-morrow your best day.

Again, I exhort you to live better, to be better Christians. There is a resistless power in personal holiness. Not what you do, but what you are, counts most among your acquaintances.

I know a man who says many brilliant, eloquent things every time he speaks; but his words have no more influence with those who know him, than the patter of hail on a rock. The man lacks character; nobody believes in him. I know another man, with neither eloquence, nor brilliance, yet that man's plainest, commonest words are listened to with respect which amounts almost to reverence. People know him to be a genuine man, a godly man, and believe what he says to be from his heart.

"You are not as good as your Book," wrote a Hindu Brahmin to a missionary. "If you were as good as your Book, India would soon be at the feet of Jesus Christ." This word may be spoken to Christians here. We are not as good as our Book. If we were, what power would we have merely in the silent influence of our lives! Let your life be so pure that it will shine like a dewdrop.

Oftentimes it is the little faults, little carelessnesses in conduct, little blemishes in character, the "no harms" that make even fairly good people almost useless, so far as their influence goes.

There was a great lighthouse out at sea. One night the men lighted the lamps as usual. Some time afterwards they saw that there appeared no light on the water where ordinarily there was a brightlane of beams. They examined their lamps—they were burning brightly. But they looked outside, and there were millions of little insects on the glass, so thickly piled there that the light could not get through. In the morning they learned that a ship had been wrecked close by—because the light had been obscured by the insects.

You get the lesson? The lamp may be burning brightly in your soul or in mine, but little faults—pride, ugly tempers, selfishness, half-heartedness, bad habits of tongue, carelessness about paying debts or keeping promises, a hundred other such things—may so cloud our lives as to obscure the shining out of Christ in our souls. Perhaps already some soul has been lost because your lamp does not shine out with clear light. I counsel you, Christian young people, to be good, beautiful in your character, faithful in all duties, careful not in the smallest ways to dim the lustre of the Christ-light within you.

So I call you to work and to goodness. I call you to no idle good time, but to loyal, loving service. Now in the last moments I call you to prayer. Prayer leads you to God, from whom alone blessing can come. Without prayer work accomplishes nothing. Without prayer you cannot attain Christ-likeness.

I like those words we find dropping so often from St. Paul's lips, "I am ready!" No matter what it was, life or death, danger or safety, hardship or ease, to preach or to suffer, to go to the ends of the earth for Christ, or to a dungeon, ever the clear voice rang out, "I am ready!"

I give these words for a motto for every young Christian, "I am ready!" That is what consecration means. It is doing what Christ commands. It is going where Christ sends you. It is not a mere sentiment—warmth of heart, good feeling—it is being good and doing good. Oh, be earnest. Be faithful. Be true. Be strong. Believe in Christ. Cleave to Him. Do your work for Him. Lift up your face toward your blessed Master, and, as you catch his eye, say to Him, "Master, I am ready. I know not what Thou hast for me to do, to work or to suffer, to live or to die, but I am ready. I am ready to speak for Thee, to endure persecution for Thee, to live for Thee. I am ready; I am ready."

Thanksgiving at Glasgow.

LAST week the annual public meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association was combined with a thanksgiving service for blessing received throughout the city during the recent Evangelistic Campaign. The audience numbered about 3,000, and a spirit of praise and gratitude to God pervaded the whole of the proceedings.

At the outset Mr. John W. Arthur (honorary secretary) gave a brief sketch of the work of the year. In the Bible Training Institute nearly eighty students are trained on the basis of the Word of God, and receive practical instruction in the winning of souls for Jesus Christ. At the Tent Hall, the Sabbath Free Breakfast has an average attendance of 1,300, and the Poor Children's Dinner of 1,871, while the Gospel is preached every day of the year. Bethany Hall, in the East End, is a large and flourishing Mission carried on by working men and women among their neighbours, under the leadership of Mr. Robert Logan. The Fresh-air Fortnight Homes have received 7,424 children during the year, and the Weary Workers' Rest 172 young women, while 3,800 boys and girls and 2,116 mothers were sent for a day to the country or seaside. The Mizpah Band—with its eight branches and rescue wing—and the Bonar Memorial Mission to the Jews have been at work in hard and difficult fields, yet meeting with much encouragement.

From the chair, Lord Overtoun took the key-note of praise for the goodness of the Lord from Psalm ciii., and traced the different waves of revival which have passed over Scotland since the Reformation, leading up to a personal testimony to the great work which Mr. Moody was used to do in "the seventies." Passing on to speak of the Campaign itself, he emphasized the way in which it had linked together all the churches in

THE SERVICE OF WINNING SOULS.

The 400 missions had included over 3,000 meetings, and 150 prominent evangelists had been enlisted in the work. One of the striking developments had been in the work among the young people. No fewer than 20,000 had been personally dealt with by their own desire. "All the churches have been helped, and those that have specially thrown themselves into the work have received most help and blessing."

Lord Provost Chisholm expressed the deep interest with which, in the midst of civic duties, he had watched the great and widespread effort that had been going on throughout the winter. He had been able to take little actual part, but he looked back to days when he had many times preached the Gospel in the open-air; and, speaking as a municipalist, expressed in the heartiest manner his conviction that no real raising of the sunken masses can be done apart from the preaching of the Gospel.

The report of the hon. treasurer (Mr. Alexander Mackeith) showed that while the whole income had amounted to £24,518 1s. 10d., the expenditure had been £27,383 5s. 11d. The expenses connected with the Campaign had been £5,000, of which £1,000 had not yet been met.

Professor White (of America), who is at present giving a series of Bible lectures in the city, related some interesting experiences during a recent sojourn in India, and declared his belief that God had given blessing to the city because believers in Glasgow have been interested in the call from heathen lands. "In order to save Great Britain, we must in a very real sense save the world."

The closing word was spoken by Rev. John McNeill, who thanked God for being permitted to bear a share in the work of the six months. "We are familiar with united missions, conducted in some large central building, and round some large central man like Mr. Moody; but this has been a new thing in Israel. For once we have removed the reproach that evangelistic work is confined to theatres, music halls, and circuses; in this Campaign the lapsed and the careless have been brought into God's house to hear the Gospel. What has impressed my mind is that this must not be the last movement of the kind; and if we have learned anything for the future it is that to go back into the battlefield we must have more mobility and adaptability. We must allow the ordinary Christian to get looking at the field with his own eyes, and feeling in his own blood the shame, the scandal, and the need. We must let him get striking his own blow from his own shoulder. We must get out of the rut, and into actual contact with the forces of sin. Realizing the conditions of life in our great cities like Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham, not to speak of London itself, we must have a gathering of all the officers, and a reorganizing of Christ's campaign through the Gospel, if we are to win the day for Him."

A special feature of the proceedings consisted of the attractive Gospel songs sung by the Fisk Jubilee Singers, Miss Margaret M. Gladstone, and Mr. J. R. D. McAusland.

Irish Notes.

A MEETING on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes has been held in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, Belfast, under the presidency of Dr. Crawford Johnston. Miss Pryce-Brown gave an interesting account of the work, and said that since July last over sixty Belfast children, one of them being only about four months old, had been sent to the Homes in England.

Belfast City Mission continues to do a good work. During the past month the meetings and Bible classes had an aggregate attendance of 13,960 persons. Moreover several professed to have decided for Christ.

A Methodist Ministers' Union has been formed at Portadown, and at the last meeting, which was largely attended, an excellent paper on "Spiritual Work in the North of Ireland" was read by Rev. J. T. Agnew. The paper was most favourably discussed by those present, and its author was requested to publish it.

Mr. James Dixon has conducted a fruitful Gospel mission in Roscrea Methodist Church, and Mr. William Smyth has held similar missions in Ballybay and Cootehill Methodist Churches.

The Bible in Ireland.

FOR the last forty years the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland has been quietly, steadily, and earnestly circulating the Holy Scriptures, and religious books and periodicals founded on the same, in needy and out-of-the-way districts in Ireland.

During last year the Colporteur Evangelists sold some 36,652 copies of the Scriptures, portions, &c. The agents also act as useful helps to the clergy and ministers in their districts, visiting the sick, reading the Scriptures, conducting cottage meetings, teaching in Sunday schools, &c. At the present time there is a great opening for Christian work in Ireland. The people are more willing and ready to receive the Gospel than they have been hitherto. We could place six additional agents in needy districts and parishes, where they would be welcomed and their work greatly valued; but we are hindered through lack of means, while the fields are "white unto the harvest" and none to "gather in the sheaves."

At the present time we are most anxious to strengthen and extend our work — to take advantage of opportunities presented to us in every province of Ireland. We need at least £500, so that we may be able to occupy some of the spheres open to us. We have faith in God; we have faith in his people. We therefore earnestly and confidently appeal to them to help us in seeking the salvation of our beloved native land by scattering his Word broadcast among its people.

(Rev.) Robert Montgomery, Deputation Secretary.
Stoneleigh House, Dursley, Gloucestershire.

Scottish Notes.

ON Sunday and Monday of last week (April 8 and 9) a Conference in connection with the Student Volunteer Missionary Union was held at Dundee, when the attendances at the various meetings were large. Mr. C. W. Scrimgeour presided over the gatherings of Sunday. In the earlier part of the day Mr. S. A. K. Wilson (Edinburgh University) introduced the subject of "The History of Missions," and Mr. Y. Fukunda, of Japan (Edinburgh University), gave an address on "The Student Volunteer Movement." In the evening Mr. A. G. Fraser (Oxford) spoke on "Evangelization, the Duty of the Individual;" while Mr. Fukunda dealt with "The Systematic Study of Missions."

On Monday, the Rev. George H. Morrison (Free St. John's Church, Dundee) occupied the chair during the morning sederunt, when the subjects taken up were "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation," by Mr. A. G. Fraser (Oxford); and "Holding the Ropes at Home," by Mr. C. W. G. Taylor (Edinburgh University). At the closing gathering in the evening, Professor Sutherland (Dundee University College) presided, and Mr. James Cormack gave a lecture on "China" (from which country he has recently returned), with lime-light illustrations.

At the Glasgow United Presbyterian Presbytery last week much attention was given to the subject of the widespread decrease in the attendance of young people at Sabbath schools and Bible classes, and the striking fact pointed out that alongside this state of affairs the greatest success of the Evangelistic Campaign was among these same classes. The question was seriously asked whether there is not a rising prejudice against Sabbath schools, with a setting in of the old systematic instruction by parents.

Lord Provost Chisholm presided on Tuesday of last week over the annual meeting of the Glasgow Home Mission Union, and delivered a notable address, in which he spoke in the highest terms of the work done during the last seventeen years. He called attention to the practical nature of the Union, in laying down the essential principles of true Christian unity, while at the same time it makes no attempt to obliterate religious differences; and expressed his belief that, if the Christian churches would do their duty, the whole of the city—every street, and lane, and close—would be overtaken, and there would be spread over it such a network of Christian agencies as would make it impossible for anyone to escape being reached, though not necessarily being blessed and saved, for that was not in our hands.

The special Communion Services, under the Hope Trust, with unfermented wine, conducted on old Presbyterian lines, still form a centre to which a numerous body of earnest Christian workers and ardent temperance reformers can repair twice a year. On a recent Sunday, Queen Street Hall, Edinburgh, was filled with a congregation of worshippers, drawn together by the deep spiritual tone of the services, and a desire to advance the Unfermented Wine Movement.

Stornoway.—Mr. J. F. Macfarlane, writing from Stornoway Parish Council Chambers, asks for religious periodicals, tracts and booklets, for distribution among the men (thousands in number) of the large herring fishing fleet now in northern waters. He adds:—"Please request the prayers of your readers for God's blessing upon these messengers." Parcels may be sent to the address given.

East London Poor.—The report for the year 1899 of what is now known as the Evans Hurndall Mission and Relief Work contains many particulars of suffering and privation patiently borne by those who do not make their distress known, but who require searching out. Happily there has been no lack of workers, and while a helping hand has been offered to the deserving poor, no pains have been spared in emphasizing the importance of self-help and self-reliance. Copies of the annual report may be obtained from the treasurer, Mr. Samuel Dean, 320, Roman Road, London, E.

International S.S. Lessons.

April 29, 1900.

"Jesus and John the Baptist" (Luke vii. 18-28).

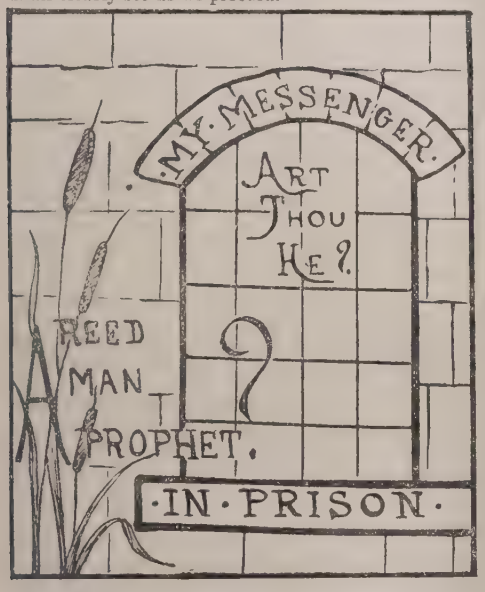
Golden Text.—"He hath done all things well" (Mark vii. 37).

Introduction.

We have two people brought before us to-day to study:—

Jesus and John — Messiah and Messenger.

We learn an important lesson from each which we shall clearly see as we proceed.



Key to Blackboard Plan.—John the Messenger (27), in prison, sends to Jesus the Messiah two of his disciples with a question: "Art Thou He?" Jesus turns to the people and asks them three questions about John.

I. John.

John in prison (Matt. xi. 2) for doing his duty by telling Herod of his sin (Mark vi. 17-19).

Perhaps John grew down-hearted and sad. One thing is evident, doubt began to creep into his mind about Jesus, whether He was the true Messiah or not; so, in verse 19, we read he sent two men to ask Christ if He was indeed the One prophesied about, &c. (Num. xxiv. 17; Zech. ix. 9; Psa. xl. 7).

John was not the only man who can be found in this despondent state (see Elijah, 1 King's xix. 4; Jeremiah, Jer. xx. 7; Thomas, John xx. 24, 25).

The answer to John's question can be found also in John iv. 25, 26; ix. 35, 37.

Although John doubted, Jesus Christ sees through all his circumstances and surroundings that tended to make him so; Jesus knew that John really loved Him and believed in Him, it was but a passing cloud; therefore as soon as John's friends had gone, Jesus turned to the people and gave his faithful servant high praise (24-28).

A reed? So easily shaken by public opinion, is this John? No indeed.

A man decorated for earthly show and pomp? No indeed.

A prophet? Yes, and more even than that. A man as true as steel, honest and humble (John iii. 30). Christ knew all that lay below the surface, as He always does (1 Kings viii. 39; 1 Chron. xxviii. 9; Jer. xvii. 10). Study John's names (Mal. iii. 1; John i. 23; Luke i. 76).

II. Jesus.

Jesus is always to be our example (John xiii. 15; 1 Pet. ii. 21; 1 John ii. 6; and our Golden Text).

Instead of answering John's question by a long message or argument to prove his Messiahship, He simply says to the two men sent by John: "Look, see what I do; go tell John that" (22). By actions, by deeds, by kindness, the question is fully answered. Who but the Saviour of the World, the long-promised Redeemer, could or would do such wonderful things? (Give an example of each from the Gospels.)

"Actions speak louder than words." Many people can talk well and all appears fair from their conversation; but look at the life, see if deeds correspond.

When asked: "Are you a Christian?" if you can say "Yes," then prove it by your actions, prove it by following the example of the meek and lowly Jesus; live Christ (Gal. ii. 20; 1 John v. 12; Phil. i. 21).

Anyone can talk, numbers can write; but to live is the test. Let us examine ourselves, let us test our lives by some of the following references:—Gal. v. 22, 23; James i. 26; 2 Peter i. 5-8; Phil. iv. 8, 9.

Lessons we Learn.

Not to doubt our loving Saviour.

To live the Christ-life, not talk about it only.

The strongest proof of the truth of Christianity is not to be found in ancient MSS. but in its works—changed homes and lives; hospitals, orphanages and Christian missions.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 22.

Serving God Joyously (Matt. xxii. 1-14).

GOD'S servants are entrusted with invitations to the world, calling to the gladness of a marriage feast. In marriage long-severed hearts are united in blessed and indissoluble oneness, amid the congratulations of relatives and friends. "The Friend of the Bridegroom rejoiceth greatly" . . . It will be a happy day when our separation from the Lord Jesus will be at an end, and we shall be for ever with Him. We do not sufficiently set forth to men the joys of religion, here in faith, there in sight; now in fellowship with Him whom, not having seen, we love; presently in the blessed realization of his face. Oh, there is joy in serving Christ! It is like sitting always at a marriage feast, where all who love us and are loved by us gather, in their best array, with unsullied, perfect satisfaction.

In a feast there is satisfaction for the appetite. No good thing is lacking. There is satisfaction for the heart, because beside us sit those whom we know and love; and there is satisfaction for the most unselfish joy in beholding the Bridegroom's face. And if this is so for the guests, how much more for the Bride! Yet the Church is the Bride, the Lamb's wife; and if we believe in Christ we have been married to another, even to Him that was raised from the dead.

Gentiles are invited to God's marriage feast. The Jews, for whom it was first prepared, made light of the invitation, and therefore the invitation has been passed on to us. "Their fall is the riches of the world, and their loss the riches of the Gentiles." Notice that it is equally unreasonable and wicked to make light of the royal invitation as to use violence to the King's messengers. Those that do the one may come ultimately to doing the other. In any case, to do either is to miss the joys of the feast and come under the wrath of the King.

In the highways of the world, we, who are honoured to be of God's messengers, must seek the good, in their apparent religiousness, and the bad, in their hopeless depravity. All alike need the Gospel of God's grace. The righteousnesses of the good are as filthy rags. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." To be an inch below the divine standard is as perilous as to be a foot. Besides, what is good in the sight of man is abomination in the sight of God.

The wedding garment was provided in the eastern house, and not to put it on in the vestibule indicated hostility and disrespect. It was an intentional slight which this unworthy guest offered to the king. Yet he was accosted as a friend, as Judas when he came to betray Christ in the garden; and an opportunity was given him for explanation, apology and amendment. We must turn to Rev. xix., 8, and xxii., 14, as given in R.V., to understand the full significance of the wedding garment. If in the one passage we are told that the pure garment consists of the righteousness of the saints, in the other it is made clear that such have to pass through the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ. We stand before God in his righteousness, which is imputed to all who believe, so that we can appropriate the words of Isa. lxi. 10.

The servants of verse 13 are not the same as of verse 2. They are ministers, and are probably therefore angels, who are ministering spirits (Matt. xiii. 41). But what a fate! The outer darkness of despair, the weeping of hopeless sorrow, the gnashing of teeth of implacable hatred. The farm and merchandise may engross your interest, and give a kind of tepid satisfaction; but the soul is starved, missed its true joy, and is filled with all that hatred to God and love, which is the essence of the fire that is never quenched.

C.E. NOTES.

From 30,000 to 40,000 delegates are expected to attend the World's Convention in July at Alexandra Palace. Some 5,000 of these will encamp in the Park, while others will be lodged in the Palace itself, and the remainder in various boarding-houses and private homes. Among the speakers who have already promised to take part are Rev. C. M. Sheldon, author of "In His Steps," Dr. Lorimer, Dr. Clifford, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. Maltbie Babcock, D.D., Bishop Arnett, Revs. J. G. Greenhough, Hugh Price Hughes, and Dr. Handley Moule. Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., the founder of the Christian Endeavour Movement, will preside.

The arrangements are now assuming definite shape. Two simultaneous meetings will be held each morning in the Great Central Hall, holding 10,000, and tent seating 9,000; whilst in the evening there will be four meetings, the Theatre and Concert Hall being also used.

Dr. Barrett, of Norwich, speaking of the Christian Endeavour Movement the other day, said he regarded it of the greatest promise amidst the movements of the day.

GOOD FRIDAY MUSTER.

Crowds of enthusiastic Endeavourers assembled at both the afternoon and evening meetings held in the City Temple on Good Friday. It was a time of great spiritual refreshing. The speakers for the afternoon were Rev. F. B. Meyer, who based his remarks on Rev. ii. 3; Miss E. M. Weatherley, whose earnest address on "The Endeavourers and the Home" was much appreciated; Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, who, in an eloquent and able address on "The Endeavourer and Bible Study," pointed out that the C.E. Movement was a gigantic Bible and prayer movement, and that every Endeavourer needed to realize the importance of Bible study and prayer, and their mutual dependence one on the other.

The chairman for the evening meeting was Mr. Charles Walters, President of the London Union. Rev. James Mursell, in a powerful address to young men, drew from the life of "Gideon" many helpful lessons. We do not, he said, usually expect to find our "mighty men of valour" threshing corn on the sly; but it was to such a young man that the call of God came. Gideon felt his weakness, but he obeyed the call, and it is only when a young life obeys the call of God and comes out from the ranks that it is clothed with the full glory and splendour of manhood. Gideon built an altar to God, but found it was impossible to keep the old altar to Baal standing as well. One or other must come down. "Arise, fling down the altar of Baal" was the command Gideon received. If a young man would follow Christ, there are altars in his life which must be razed to the ground.

(1) Impurity, for a young man cannot be strong in God while impure thoughts, impure desires are in his heart, eating away at it. Would he serve Jesus Christ, he must be clean hearted and clean handed.

(2) Covetousness. This evil is working in our midst more powerfully than we guess. We can be covetous over pennies as well as pounds. The genius of Christianity is generosity. "Freely ye have received, freely give"; but the covetous man will learn that "whosoever saveth his life shall lose it."

Two results arose from Gideon's stepping out on the Lord's side—(1) he was mocked, received a nickname; (2) he became clothed with the Spirit of the Lord. We need Gideons to-day, who will bear ridicule, and who are clothed with God's spirit, for the Midianites of the drink traffic, gambling, legalizing of vice, the desecration of the day of rest, are still in the land. Men of great faithfulness are wanted rather than men of many talents, for "manhood with courage is a thousand men."

Following the address to young men, came one to young women by Miss Jennie Street, whose pleading appeal must have winged its way to many a young woman's heart. She urged upon her sister Endeavourers the need for thoughtfulness in word, action, and life; helpfulness, for a helpful life has no time to be dull or morbid; happiness, because there is such great need in this world for strong, true, loving women with the sunshine of Christ in their souls, who will scatter that sunshine along the common walks of life, making these beautiful with the gladness of God.

The meeting was brought to a close by an earnest and eloquent address by Rev. F. B. Meyer, who urged upon the Endeavour members the need to stand like a rock for their Endeavour principles. He held that a C.E. Society had better cease altogether than drift into a mere debating or mutual improvement society. Mr. Meyer also spoke of the necessity for whole-hearted consecration—not one little part of the life being consecrated, but the whole being brought under the sway and service of Jesus Christ—for the man who touches God most closely is the man who touches all that is truly human most closely. Not exclusion, but inclusion is the true law of consecration. Young men and women of this day needed, he said, to read more deeply. Trashy literature did them no good either mentally or spiritually; but strong, good books, which would feed their minds and their souls with nourishing food, should be sought after. Then Mr. Meyer spoke of the power of Jesus Christ to both save and keep, giving pathetic examples from his own life, which must have touched many a heart present, filling them with a sense of how far short they had fallen of the glory of God, and firing them with a resolve to love and follow the Lord more faithfully and more whole-heartedly in the coming days.

About Books.

PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD.

IT is a truism that danger attends the investing even of acknowledged truth with a disproportionate importance, or the assigning of a fictitious place thereto in the body of Christian doctrine. Where Scripture is reserved, the Christian should not be too bold; where Scripture is silent, the disciple should hold his tongue. In regard to the state intermediate between death and resurrection, curious inquiry is not content to accept things as revelation leaves them. Hence assumptions that seem innocent, but which, in turn, are made to support others which are fraught with many evil consequences. Spiritualism and Romanism both depend, in a very large degree, upon conclusions which are easily reached by such as are prepared to be wise above what is written regarding the intermediate state. This is shown with much force by Dr. Charles H. H. Wright, in his new book The Intermediate State and Prayers for the Dead: Examined in the Light of Scripture and of Ancient Jewish and Christian Literature. (6s. Nisbet & Co.) The pages are the result of much research, and the contentions of those who would find Scripture authority for prayers for the dead are triumphantly refuted. As a study (within limitations) of the eschatology of the Bible and the Apocrypha, and of early Jewish and Christian writers, this volume is a valuable addition to a singularly attractive branch of literature. Dr. Wright is alive to the grievous developments of error that follow prayers for the dead, including the system of masses; and he here conducts investigations that will prove of great service to those who would join in the denunciation of Romish presumption and perversion, alike as to the death state and as regards prayer for those departed this life.

MISSIONARY BOOKS.

A beautifully illustrated record of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society's work in Fuh-Kien has been compiled by Marion Hook, under the title of Save Some (9d.). The story of the Barrackpore Converts' Home is told by Fanny Good in Gathered Out (6d.). Much interesting information is here given of the Society's work, and the glimpses of native life in China are graphically portrayed. (C.E.Z.M.S., 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.)

An admirable sketch of Friends' Missions in India is given in Samuel Baker of Hoshangabad, by Caroline W. Pumphrey. (3s. 6d. Headley Brothers.) While interesting as a story of life and work, the book has a value as showing that, given the call and the grace of God, it does not need great gifts, so much as patient continuance, to make a good missionary. In the words of the preface: "With its temptations strenuously resisted, the circumstances of even commonplace missionary life are powerful to call out all that is best in any man in the formation of character. No work for God misses its aim, and in missions as elsewhere He leads from small beginnings to great results." This is a story of hearty service nobly rendered. There are excellent portraits and other illustrations.

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier are issuing a series of valuable works on various parts of the great mission field—on the one hand describing countries and their inhabitants, on the other narrating the progress of the Gospel among the nations. In the former class may be placed Village Life in China: A Study in Sociology. (7s. 6d.) It is by Arthur H. Smith, D.D., an American missionary long resident in the Flowery Land, and known in the old and new worlds as the author of "Chinese Characteristics." The pages cover a singularly wide range of topics, dealt with in a generous spirit, and will be read with pleasure and profit, not only by friends of missions, and such as are interested in Chinese institutions and customs, but also by those who study ethnic cults, practices, and folklore. From first to last the book is bright with animated incident, and full of striking facts; and there are many highly-finished engravings. Another volume in the series is Missions in Eden: Glimpses of Life in the Valley of the Euphrates. (3s. 6d.) This is from the pen of Mrs. Crosby H. Wheeler, for forty years a missionary of the American Board in Harpoot, Eastern Turkey. The pages unfold a story of devoted labour—educational, religious, and social—attended with encouraging results. In this region heavy clouds have passed over the scene, and martyr stories are interwoven with the deeply instructive narrative. There are several illustrations, and the book is to be commended as a singularly readable record of work in a field that commands much less than it deserves of prayerful interest and support.

Lizzie Long, by S. H. Parr, is a story of peasant life 150 years ago. The experiences of Lizzie in the Metropolis must prove useful and instructive to girls whose knowledge of the world is not mature. (1s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) Workers in connection with the Church of England will welcome Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence's new book—Confirmation Lectures: Notes on the Church Catechism. (1s. 6d. Nisbet.) It has been prepared for the use of younger clergymen and teachers of advanced Bible classes.

Fundamental truths are set forth with admirable clearness in Quiet Waters of Rest and Refreshing, by the late Henry Heath. Dr. Maclean, of Bath, writes a cordial introduction. Young Christians will find this little book helpful in a high degree. (Cloth, 1s. John Ritchie, Kilmarnock.)

The Church Association (14, Buckingham Street, Strand, W.C.) has issued a pamphlet, entitled A Gross Scandal in the Diocese of York. It gives particulars of Romish practices in the parish of Hensall-cum-Heck, a village in which a wayside crucifix was lately erected.

The Lady Isabel is a tale of social life in the "olden time." It is a breezy, lively, and not improbable story, vividly portraying life among the reckless, though loyal, nobility in the days of the barons. It is full of facts and fancies, reproduced in a sprightly, amusing, and entertaining style. (2s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

The New English Poetry Book, edited by E. E. Speight, is a selection from English poems and ballads—Spenser to Swinburne. (1s. nett. Horace Marshall & Son.) Intended for the use of children from the age of thirteen upwards, this book has been so compiled as to illustrate style as well as promote intellectual development.

Mr. James H. Smith has issued a cheap edition of his deeply instructive book, Our Faithful God: Answers to Prayer. (1s. 6d. J. F. Shaw.) There are details of 150 cases of answered prayer—for temporal needs and spiritual blessings—by Christian workers and others. Many will read this book to the confirmation of their faith.

The Charities Register and Digest for 1900, like its predecessors, is replete with information of general utility. As a work of reference in regard to conditions of admission to the benefits of institutions and societies, this compilation remains unsurpassed. It is the vade mecum of the intelligent philanthropist. (4s. Longmans, Green & Co.)

Dean Stanley's Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold, D.D., is a book that needs no commendation. It is a pleasure, however, to call attention to an edition in every way excellent, and in point of price well within the reach of a very large circle of readers. There is a good portrait, also a number of full-page illustrations. (2s. Ward, Lock & Co.)

In The Passion and Resurrection of our Lord, G. P. H. has consolidated into one narrative the statements given in the Four Gospels. (Elliot Stock.) The text used is the A.V., and as the book is intended for devotional use, no notes are given. The source is indicated in the margin, and there are blank pages for individual notes of the results of private study.

The author of "I think when I read that sweet story of old," has written an intensely interesting little volume, Early Years of my Life. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Those who appreciate the hymn will like to read the story of Mrs. Luke, whose recollections go back to the beginning of the century, and have important points of contact with the great missionary movement.

The "Story of the Nations" series is one of the most useful undertakings of modern times. Already over fifty volumes have been issued. The latest is Modern Italy: 1748-1898, by Pietro Orsi, Professor of History in the R. Liceo Foscarini, Venice. The work has been translated into English by Mary Alice Vialls, and there are many excellent illustrations. In view of the peculiar interest attaching to the subject, this is a specially welcome addition to a very valuable series.

The profession of a nurse is a noble one, and rightly gives those who follow it a position of public esteem. But there are nurses and nurses, and in Mock Nurses of the Latest Fashion, Mr. F. J. Gant, F.R.C.S., exposes various methods by which designing women make the calling a means to evil ends. The author deals very plainly and vigorously with the subject, which, although nauseous, evidently required attention. (3s. Baillière, Tindall & Co.)

The Third Series of A Cloud of Witnesses to Christian Life and Doctrine, by Rev. W. F. Fraser, is directed against Arianism, and is devoted to the story of St. Athanasius. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) The story of the great Father, with his many trials and controversial experiences, is outlined in a readable manner. The author seems disposed to attribute to him the Athanasian Creed, though he gives no reasons other than those which have been generally considered insufficient.

Mr. Mackenzie Bell is "one of the sweetest of our modern poets." So writes Rev. J. J. Nesbitt in the introduction of his latest book, The Taking of the Flag and other recitations. (1s. Thomas Burleigh.) We think the description justified. There are over a score pieces in this book—some patriotic and some pathetic; while the humorous element is also present. This is an admirable selection from Mr. Bell's best poetical work.

Rev. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago, has given us several works of peculiar value on the Scriptures and how to use them. We welcome very cordially the latest—The Divine Origin of the Bible: Its Authority and Power Demonstrated and Difficulties Solved. (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) Having travelled from cold scepticism to implicit faith, the author summarises in these pages the grounds of his confidence. The style is plain and unechnical; the pages are impressive in facts and strong in argument. Such a book was wanted, and it should be a pleasure for Christian people to help its circulation.

Social problems seem ever in the mind of Rev. Hon. James Adderley, and it is not surprising that the Epistle of James should have engaged his attention in the course of popular instruction at Berkeley Chapel. His unconventional commentary has been issued with the title, The Epistle of St. James: with Notes for General Readers. (2s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton, & Co.) It is an unpretentious book, and High Church views are plainly enunciated. Nevertheless, the pages will be helpful to such as require practical suggestion regarding the teaching of a singularly practical portion of Holy Scripture.

The Class and the Desk (four volumes, 1s. each) is a manual for teachers and preachers. The comprehensive and analytical method of Scripture exposition will render this work of special service to many. The Biblical Museum, a companion work (fifteen volumes, at 1s. each), is also issued in a cheap and compact form. Illustrations, apothegms, anecdotes, and quotations from standard writers, serve to explain the text, and assist in the application of its teaching. Each book of both the Old and New Testaments is prefaced by an introduction and synopsis of contents. (Elliot Stock.)

The late Professor Kirk of Edinburgh enjoyed wide popularity as a writer on health questions. His newspaper articles were collected in eleven volumes, which have been largely read. It was his wish to compact the whole for ready reference, but death intervened. At length his purpose has been carried into effect, with the result that we have before us a handy volume entitled Papers on Health, by Professor Kirk, revised and edited by his son, Edward Bruce Kirk. (2s. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) This is not a doctor's book in the ordinary sense of the word; but rather a manual calculated to assist reasonable people in the laudable aim of preserving their health and living lives of greater usefulness and comfort. The contents are presented in alphabetical form, so the book is easy of use for purposes of reference.

A verbatim report of the sixth annual prophetic conference, held at Lansdowne Hall in February, is issued in a substantial pamphlet under the title of When the King Comes. The addresses include words by Dr. Robert Anderson, Pastor Fuller Gooch, Rev. J. Douglas, Colonel Morton, Rev. Archibald Brown, Rev. W. Houghton, and others. The teaching is not so much devoted to points of difference as to matters of agreement among prophetic students. The faith "once for all delivered to the saints" is that for which the speakers earnestly contend, as well as for the promotion of that fellowship in the Spirit which knows no party aim, and the dissemination of that light and truth which comes only through the revelation of Scripture. (1s. Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood.)

May's Pocket Guide to May Meetings is, as usual, a handy and reliable compendium of information. (1d. 68, Fleet Street.)

Down a City Alley is a true story of a wasted life, calculated to make people think on the evils of drink. (Church of England Temperance Society. 4d.)

By Lone Craig-linnie Burn is the title of a new volume of Ulster Idylls, by Archibald McIlroy, which Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish shortly at a popular price.

From the pen of a New Zealand writer comes A Search for a Princess; or, The Uttermost Parts of the Sea. The narrative is told in simple, easy style. (2d. Stoneman.)

"I'm Not Your Way of Thinking" is a conversation between two working men, and embodies many practical suggestions and useful lessons. (6d. per dozen. Partridge.)

A pamphlet which many will be glad to study is: A Synopsis of the Twelve Minor Prophets, with special reference to the national restoration of Israel, by A Student of Prophecy. (6d. George Stoneman.)

The pamphlet containing Three Letters on the Proposal for a Roman Catholic University, addressed to a High Churchman, by W. Blair Neatby, is already in its second edition. (2d. Robert Banks & Son.)

Dean Farrar's new work on the Life of Christ, on which he has been engaged for some years past, is nearly ready for publication. It will be issued by Messrs. Cassell & Company under the title of "The Life of Lives: Fresh Studies in the Life of Christ."

The acceptance of the position of Hon. Colonel of the City of London Imperial Volunteers by Lord Roberts is recorded in the third City Press Souvenir ("City Press" Offices, Aldersgate Street), the frontispiece being an excellent portrait of the popular general. The story of the regiment is continued, and, in addition to the groups and other pictures, there are over 140 portraits of officers and men.

Evangelistic.

Gospel Work at Barry Dock.

WE are deeply thankful to God for the gracious revival which He is granting us to see at this seaport town. We have proved again and again the power of the Gospel. While recently holding our open-air service outside a public-house, a drunkard came up to interrupt. He was spoken to by one of the workers, and induced to attend the service in the Hall. A decided change came over him, and within a week he came boldly out on the Lord's side. His wife and son have also professed faith in Christ. Gerald R. Coultas.

A Village Mission.

A seven-weeks' evangelistic mission in the villages of Melton Mowbray Primitive Methodist circuit has been conducted by Mr. J. Westwood, of Cleethorpes, under the auspices of the District Missionary Committee. Mr. Westwood's labours have been confined to the villages of Sowerby, Thorpe Satchville, and South Croxton. The services have been well-attended, several persons at each place have professed conversion, and the societies have been blessed. At South Croxton the cause had been a source of anxiety to the circuit authorities for many years; but, as a result of the Mission, new life has been infused, and we hope permanent good accomplished. At Thorpe Satchville a Y.P.S.C.E. has been commenced with eighteen members. Mr. Westwood's faithfulness, both in the visitation and in pulpit work, has created a deep impression. T. Tyers, Supt. Minister.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey's Movements.

In the course of his public work, Mr. Ira D. Sankey has of late interested and impressed large congregations in various parts of the United States by a number of addresses on "The Gospel in Song and Story."

At Newark, N.J., Mr. Sankey conducted services, on the 25th ulto., in three churches. In the evening, says the Newark Advertiser, "the doors of the Clinton Avenue Reformed Church were besieged, long before the hour of service, by a great crowd of people eager to see and hear the evangelist. Nearly 2,000 people were packed into the church, and far more than that number must have gone away unable to get in. Mr. Sankey introduced several reminiscences of his associations with Mr. Moody, and related the history of several of the hymns which he sang." Although he spoke for an hour, the large audience remained to the conclusion, and some were deeply affected, especially at the singing of "There were Ninety and Nine."

Referring to this meeting, Rev. D. H. Martin, the pastor, wrote: "There were several thousand people who could not get in to hear you; why not arrange to come again? I expect a great ingathering at the Easter Sunday Communion, and such a service as yours would certainly be the means of great blessing to many who are just halting before crossing the line. I know of many cases in which your address last Sunday evening had the effect of bringing about a decision. On Monday I received a letter from a young lawyer, who said that for many months he had been halting between two opinions; but your story of singing 'The Ninety and Nine' at Northfield, where —— was converted, had decided him to come out for Christ."

Our New York correspondent writes:—"Mr. Sankey has conducted a service at the Bowery Mission, which is located in one of the worst parts of the notorious Bowery. His congregation presented a remarkable contrast to his usual audiences. In introducing Mr. Sankey, the superintendent, Mr. J. G. Hallimond, mentioned that it was through Mr. Sankey's singing and Mr. Moody's preaching at Darlington, as long ago as 1873, that he determined henceforth to be an aggressive evangelistic worker. Mr. Sankey did not content himself with singing to the men. He spoke to them with great earnestness, and then went down to the floor and dealt personally with many. He remained to the very end of a late meeting (and the homeless condition of a large percentage of the congregation makes all the Bowery Mission meetings late in closing, especially on chilly nights), and spoke to each man as he passed out."

Many of our readers will have observed, with satisfaction, the announcement that Mr. Sankey hopes shortly to visit England and Scotland, and will pray that the evangelist's coming may be full of revival blessing.

At Denholme Congregational Church, times of reviving from the presence of the Lord have been experienced, in connection with a ten-days' mission conducted by Rev. J. Jameson, (Yorks. county missioner). There have been large congregations. Several persons yielded to Christ, whilst God's people were strengthened in the faith.

A three-weeks' mission has just been held in connection with the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A., conducted by Rev. James Smith, of Coalsnaughton, and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, of London. On the third day of the mission Mr. Smith was laid aside by illness, and the gatherings were carried on by Mr. J. A. Smith, of the Gordon Mission. The meetings were not large, but several were dealt with each evening. The last week was conducted by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, and was largely attended at each service. Onr correspondent writes, "We believe the mission has been a time of great blessing to many."

Miss Huxtable has conducted eight days' services at Clarendon Mission Hall, Notting Hill. "Her words were blessed to the hearers; sinners sought the Saviour, and workers are going forth with renewed zeal." At Hampden Chapel, Lauriston Road, Hackney, on Sunday last, Rev. J. Spence, of Chelsea, concluded an eight days' mission. A number of persons sought salvation, and Christians reconsecrated themselves. "The heart of the church has been touched," writes a correspondent, "and we are trusting Christ for a useful future. Mr. Thomas Payne has been holding meetings at the Evangelical Mission, Gay Street, Liverpool. Much of the presence and power of God was realized. Mr. Payne has also conducted missions at Parkgate and at Mr. Elam's "Good News" Mission in Liverpool, and on Easter Monday addressed a convention for Christians, held in St. Albans Parish Room by Rev. E. Ince, vicar of St. Albans.

Obituary.

REV. PROFESSOR ROBERTS.

THE death of Rev. Professor Roberts removes a well-known figure from the Baptist body. He died on Monday last at his residence in Folkestone, from a paralytic stroke. Educated at Bristol Baptist College, he took his B.A. degree at London University; and became Principal of Regent's Park College, after acting for a considerable time as pastor of the Notting Hill Baptist Church. In 1892 he was appointed president of the Baptist Union, and since 1878 he had been a member of the council of the Union. During recent years he had suffered much from physical weakness.

REV. DAVID CLARK.

The news of the death of Rev. D. Clark, Dundee, at the age of forty, will be received with regret, especially by Scottish members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Clark, while in Glasgow, was brought under the influence of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and from that time became absorbed in mission work. While on a holiday he preached in Long Wynd Church, Dundee, and the congregation were so impressed with him that they gave him a unanimous call. It was mainly through his energy that the church in Ward Road, Dundee, was opened in 1895. Though cultured and earnest in his pulpit ministrations, Mr. Clark owed much of his general acceptance to the interest he took in the members of his flock individually.

Personalia.

Rev. G. F. Assiter, who has for some years laboured in the United States as pastor and evangelist, is now on his way from New Franklin, Missouri, to England. His London address will be care of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C.

Rev. P. R. Mackay and Mr. Andrew Stewart, of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, are expected to arrive in London on the 24th inst. Mr. Mackay's chief object in returning home for the summer months is to obtain several ministers and evangelists to return with him in October to fill the openings for work which he has found on the railways and in planting districts of India and Ceylon. Mr. Andrew Stewart has travelled widely in India, Australia and New Zealand as an hon. evangelist, and has gained much valuable information for the Society. Several drawing-room meetings have been arranged for their reception in London.

Censuring others is an argument that we do little mind our own case, or consider to what a dreadful judgment we do stand obnoxious. Did we think of that, we should see cause to employ our leisure and care in stating our own accounts, rather than in examining those of others. We should not be forward to carp at anything; we should scarce have the heart to condemn any man. This, St. Paul seemeth to imply when he argueth, "Why dost thou judge thy brother, or why dost thou set at nought thy brother. We shall all stand at the judgment seat of Christ." That is, why do any of us judge others, seeing we must all be judged ourselves?—Isaac Barrow.

The Bible Carriage and Gospel Tent Mission, which is superintended by Mr. James A. Vicary, continues to make much progress in towns and villages where inadequate provision is made for the spiritual needs of the community. Four tents were utilized during last season; but as two of these are now worn out, it will be necessary to provide others. The Bible carriages have covered a larger area than formerly, the workers accompanying the vans visiting from house to house with Bibles, Testaments, &c., and preaching in the evening. Mr. Vicary's address is: Wallington Lodge, 63, Ashley Road, Bristol.

What If Christ Comes to us in person as a poor, helpless stranger? What if we saw Him destitute of food and raiment, or in want of any other necessaries of life? Should we not contend for it as an honour which of us should receive Him into our houses, which of us should entertain Him at our table, which of us should even strip ourselves of our clothing to give it to Him? And yet he tells us (Matt. xxv. 40) that He is in effect with us in his poor members; and we invent a thousand cold excuses for neglecting to assist Him, and send our compassionate Saviour away empty! Is this the temper of a Christian? Is this the temper in which we should wish to be found at the judgment day?—Dr. Doddridge.

The Churches.

Church of England.

The death of Lord Harrowby left vacant the Presidency of St. John's Hall, Highbury. At the unanimous request of the Council, Rev. A. Peache (who, with the late Miss Peache, founded the Hall) has accepted the office of President. Mr. J. Round, M.P., has been asked to fill the vacant seat on the Council.

Rev. Dr. Wright, of the Protestant Reformation Society, has been conducting services in the eastern districts of London. At St. Mark's, Victoria Park, he spoke on "The Bible and the Church," and also gave an afternoon address to some 200 of the senior Bible classes on "After Death" and "Paradise." At Leyton Parish Church Dr. Wright has delivered a course of sermons, the final one being a timely and instructive discourse on "Prayers for the Dead."

A circular, signed by the Bishop of Shrewsbury, announcing a convention for the deepening of spiritual life, to be held at Stoke-on-Trent, May 14-18, says: "The challenge with which the world meets us on every hand is this, 'What effect does your Christian faith have upon your daily life?' The great masses of our fellow-countrymen in the large cities of the land will never be won to real belief in our Saviour Himself until they see far more manifestly than at present the effect of his salvation upon our lives."

In the discussion on the Confessional which is proceeding in the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, a correspondent challenged the Vicar of Heeley to say what he would do in case a sick person desired absolution. To this Rev. W. Odom replied that during a ministry of twenty-three years he had visited nearly 2,000 sick persons. "It has often been my privilege," he added, "to give spiritual counsel and advice, and should anyone come to me with a view to receive absolution I should point him to Holy Scripture, tell him that the only true confessional is the Throne of Grace, and that the only absolution worth the having is that of our great High Priest, the Son of God."

The church at Brierley Hill, of which Rev. H. H. Dibben is Rector has been reopened. The interior has been transformed, the cost being upwards of £5,000, of which £2,500 was given by Mr. John Corbet. Three times in the day, on the 8th inst., the church was thronged. In the afternoon, at least 600 or 700 men filled the whole body of the church, whilst the galleries were crowded with women and children. The workmen who had done the work in the church were nearly all present, and wore rosettes as a token of the work they had done. The sermon was preached by Rev. George Everard, on the words, "The righteous shall flourish like a palm tree." The preacher dwelt on the beauty and glory of a faithful Christian life.

Congregational.

At Hope Chapel, Clifton, Bristol, the new pastor, Rev. F. W. Bryan, having settled, all branches of the work are making very satisfactory progress. From April 1 to 9 a temperance mission was held, which resulted in a temperance society being formed, and about fifty pledges being taken.

At the stone-laying in connection with the new mission hall of Finsbury Park Church, Rev. Ll. H. Parsons stated that the building would consist of lecture hall, club-room, and also a coffee-bar, the latter greatly needed as a counter-attraction to the public-houses. The Marquis of Northampton, in the course of an earnest address, said that until the last quarter of a century home missions had been much neglected.

Among the directors of the London Missionary Society some acute difference of opinion is manifesting itself as to the future policy of the society. The position of affairs, financially, is disturbing. A deficit of between £23,000 and £26,000 will have to be faced on the year's accounts, while just at this juncture there come from China and India urgent appeals for extension work, which will, if undertaken, involve considerable further outlay.

Dr. Chavasse has sent a letter to Rev. Stanley Rogers, as secretary of the Liverpool auxiliary of the London Missionary Society, expressing his sympathy with the work of the Society. "I most heartily wish your L.M.S. anniversary God-speed," he wrote. "I trust my firm allegiance to the Church of England will never prevent me from appreciating the good work of the Nonconformist Churches, and of lovingly admiring many of their members."

Baptist.

Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, has left for America. On the eve of his departure he left behind him a twofold suggestion—first, that the Baptist Union should next year meet in Edinburgh, and second, that when it thus meets Dr. McLaren should preside.

The twenty-first anniversary of the foundation of the Church now worshipping in West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, was celebrated on April 11. A sermon was preached in the afternoon by Rev. D. J. Hiley, of Bristol; followed by a tea and public meeting. The pastor, Rev. G. D. Hooper, reported that there was a present membership of 269. £85 was raised towards the building fund.

The report of the Baptist Deaconesses' Home and Mission, 59, Doughty Street, W.C., is a carefully-drawn and well-illustrated pamphlet, telling in simple and eloquent language the story of a work in every way admirable among the London poor. Rev. W. Brock having retired through ill-health, Rev. E. Henderson is now superintendent of the work, and Rev. A. B. Middleditch hon secretary.

At a district meeting of the Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association, at Liverpool, Rev. Charles Green introduced the subject, "Why does our denomination increase so slowly?" In the first place, he stated that all Christian churches suffered, as the Baptist church did, from the lukewarmness and want of spirituality among many professing Christians. The working classes, and others also, found the atmosphere of the church repellant; class distinctions were carried into the House of God; clothes had much to do with the regard paid to the attendant; and wealth commanded undue and wicked homage. Many ministers, too, conceived it to be their duty to deal with the current topics of conversation and of interest.

Removal.—Rev. G. W. Humphreys, late of Wellington, Somerset, has removed to 4, South Parade, Clifton.

Methodist.

Mr. Samuel Chadwick, of Rochdale, belonging to the United Methodist Free Church, has promised £500 to be devoted to the building of a new wing of the Children's Home at Alverstoke. This will enable the committee to enlarge its plans, and do much more efficiently what needs to be done for the afflicted children.

The Committee of the West London Mission have been compelled to make arrangements for the appointment of an additional minister, so that Rev. Mark Guy Pearse may be free, in the interest of both his health and the work of God, to pay long-anticipated visits to various countries abroad. The new minister is to be Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, of Brighton, who will join the mission staff next year.

The Manchester and Bolton Wesleyan Districts intend holding a Foreign Missionary Loan Exhibition. It will be opened on May Day, and will continue to the end of May 5. The huge St. James's Hall, in Oxford Street, Manchester, has been secured. On the last Sunday evening in the present month a foreign missionary meeting is to be held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, and on the evening before a similar meeting in the new Victoria Hall, Bolton.

The Sunday evening services conducted by Revs. G. R. Graham and F. J. Murrell, inaugurated at the beginning of the winter in the Queen's Theatre, Swindon, have been fruitful. During four months this building, holding over 2,000 people, has been crowded every Sunday evening. A testimony to the impression created is given by the Superintendent of the Swindon police force, who states that since the services were started the streets have been cleared of young people, leaving the police nothing to do. So gratified is he at this ideal state of affairs that he gratuitously supplies two constables to assist as doorkeepers at the services.

At the last monthly meeting of London Wesleyan ministers, Rev. John Bond gave an address on Present Day Methodism. He deeply regretted the decline in family worship, and said that in many cases men of feeble religious life were put into official position in their churches. As regarded public worship, one service a week had to do for many of their people, the number of "half-timers" being largely on the increase. If to-day they had broader views, higher education, and the like, they lacked the hearty enthusiasm which characterized their fathers. If there was no fire in the preachers, there would be none in their church officers, nor in the congregation. Speaking of the conduct of public worship, Mr. Bond avowed disapproval of an anthem after the sermon. Their sermons, too, must not be abstruse. They must get back to intense evangelical preaching, and their chapels would be filled.

Presbyterian.

Rev. J. B. Meharry has had a cordial welcome in Sydney, and has been asked to occupy the Woollahra pulpit for nine months. Mr. Meharry has asked his Presbytery and the Crouch Hill congregation to agree to this.

Miss Graham, who before going to China as a missionary was a member of Regent Square Church, has, together with her sisters, given £500, the sum needed to build the women's hospital at Chinchew, in memory of their mother.

The question of the exclusion of Presbyterian troops from cantonment churches in India, built at the public expense, will come before the Synod by overture from the South London Presbytery. There is considerable feeling on the subject in Presbyterian circles.

Rev. Dr. Baxter has retired from the pastoral charge of Loughborough Road U.P. Church, Kirkcaldy. It was remarked at the Presbytery meeting that Dr. Baxter would be remembered, not simply as the first minister of the church, but as the minister to whom it might be said the congregation owed its existence.

In Edinburgh Rev. Principal Rainy, and in Aberdeen Rev. Principal Salmond, in delivering the valedictory addresses at the Free Church colleges, naturally referred to the impending changes which union with the United Presbyterian Church will bring. When the colleges reopen in the autumn the "United Free Church of Scotland" will, it is anticipated, be an accomplished fact, and thus the colleges will belong to a larger Church, with an augmented staff of professors, and with additional subjects included in their course of study.

Dr. John Gillespie, convener of the Smaller Livings Scheme of the Scotch Established Church, speaking at Dundee, made a strong appeal on behalf of the underpaid ministers of the Church. At present, he mentioned, there were still 200 parishes with a stipend under £200. A sum of £7,000 annually would yet be required to raise them to the desired minimum, and it would only take 2½d. per head of the communicants of the Church to find the amount. He believed in Church extension, but they must give the minister a living wage, so that he might be free from great anxiety.

Society of Friends.

A series of meetings, extending over a week, and conducted by W. Liddell, has been held in the meeting-house at Oxford, and on week-nights in the mission room. Whilst the attendance of the general public was small, members and attenders of the meeting came up well, and several speak of the spiritual help this special effort has been to them.

The new meeting-house at Hartney, Manitoba, has been a blessing to the neighbourhood. The congregations have kept up remarkably well, and have grown considerably since the opening. This is largely due to the stable in connection with the meeting-house, for if the horses are not comfortable the people cannot enjoy the meetings. The stable is twenty-four feet by thirty-six feet, and it is filled with horses standing close together, rigs always being left outside.

At the London and Middlesex quarterly meeting, William Tallack referred to the need of organizing our work of oversight as well as the ministry of the Word. Frederick Taylor pointed out how little Friends knew of each other in some of the London suburbs. It is often a matter of surprise to those who think themselves isolated to discover how many Friends are really living in the neighbourhood. Friends were also encouraged to simple faithfulness in following the guidance of the Spirit in all directions, and to remember the twofold work of the Church—extension and consolidation, evangelization and edification.

Salvation Army.

The results of Self Denial Week are reported to promise well as compared with the efforts of previous years. It is expected that the total proceeds will amount to nearly £30,000.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. CHARLES ANDERSON, M.A., session clerk of Ealing Presbyterian congregation (Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson's), and a member of that church from its foundation. Mr. Anderson never held a pastorate, but was for many years Principal of the South African School and College at Stellenbosch.—The oldest Sunday-school worker in Lincoln Free Methodist Circuit has passed away by the death of Mrs. LILLY, a teacher for sixty-five years.—Elder JONATHAN VAN CLEAVE, of Indiana, at the age of ninety-four. For sixty years he acted as Baptist pastor at Crawfordsville, preaching three sermons a week. He also preached throughout Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri.—Mr. E. CARR-DEAKIN, one of the most prominent supporters of Egerton Congregational Church, Bolton.—Mr. THOMAS PALMER, for many years a highly-esteemed and active deacon of Latimer Congregational Church, East London.—At Milford, co. Donegal, Rev. J. F. BECK, M.A., M.D., Reformed Presbyterian Minister.—At Derryluskan, co. Tipperary, Mr. J. ASHMORE, an earnest Christian worker, aged seventy-eight years.—Miss TAYLOR, sister of Mrs. General Anderson, of Plumstead.

Notes & Comments

"AND continued all night in prayer to God." These words are written of our Lord. His repeated action in this ministry of dependence upon God is most instructive and precious. He is thus revealed as the perfect servant in his submission, as well as "the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." What an example to us for all time the Lord has become! "Power from on high" is the divine result which comes of "continuing instant in prayer." Human helplessness and weakness stand in his presence possessed of divine strength and sufficiency. "He cannot deny Himself."

The Noon Prayer Meeting at 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C., will be addressed from Monday, April 30, to Friday, May 4, and from Monday, May 7, to Wednesday, the 9th, by many of the workers in the approaching Tent Campaign. Messrs. H. Varley, Leonard Weaver, W. Grove, J. T. Vine, and others, are taking part in these preparatory gatherings, which it is hoped may stimulate Christian workers to united and sustained prayer on behalf of this grand effort to reach the unsaved masses of London.

We deeply regret to learn that Rev. Geo. H. C. Macgregor is very seriously ill and lying in great weakness. A member of his congregation mentions that he has recently been preaching with remarkable power; and his ministry in other departments has been very abundant, and has proved a blessing to many believers. His family and friends will greatly value the prayers of our readers on behalf of this young and zealous servant of Christ.

It will be a source of satisfaction to our readers that Rev. William Cuff, the esteemed pastor of Shoreditch Tabernacle, has succeeded to the presidency of the Baptist Union. Mr. Cuff's address to the Union on Monday last was a stirring appeal for whole-hearted and faithful service:

> Thousands of books (he said) are on our shelves, but what is wanted is a ministry charged with the Holy Ghost, and a Church baptized into and filled with the Holy Ghost. This is the most pressing urgent need of England to-day. There is no need for fear, but there is great need of more prayer and stronger faith.

The re-election of Rev. Dr. Maclaren to the vice-presidency, which carries with it the presidency for the following year, speaks well for the sustained energy and devotion of the venerable Manchester pastor.

We are full of joy and thankfulness for the overwhelming reception given by Ireland to our beloved Queen, whose love and tact have been manifested in consistency with all her past. For loving consideration of others is the source of tact, which is touch. The heart of Queen Victoria has always been in touch with her people, especially with the suffering and sorrowful, and her messages and her actions prove her to be in touch with God.

The Queen's visit to Ireland has been in every sense a success. It seems to have been thoroughly enjoyed by Her Majesty, and everywhere she has been received by the people with unbounded loyalty and enthusiasm. She was unable, for precautionary reasons of health, to extend her visit to Belfast. The physical well-being of our beloved Sovereign is too precious to be risked for any reason, the cause of peace and goodwill and brotherhood among the nations being centred in her venerable person in a way that has never before been realized by any monarch. So far, she seems to have benefited by her activities during the sojourn in Dublin. The whole world watches her simple and self-forgetful life with affectionate pride, and all true patriots pray that she may yet live for many years to be the mother of her people, and to guide their destinies with her wise and gentle presence.

Among many revelations made during the past bitter months, not the least is this exhibition of the true feeling of our sister nation, Ireland. Now we know that the animosity expressed by disunited bands of agitators represents themselves, or at best a minor section of the Irish people.

The opening of the Paris Exhibition has been, from the commercial and international point of view, a great success. There is a good deal to be said for the panegyrics uttered at the opening ceremony in praise of these world-wide exhibitions as a binding and pacifying force among the nations. Perhaps we British owe more to the fact that this huge display of commercial and industrial output was going to be held than we shall ever know, for in the heated Anglophobe temper of a section of the French nation there is no knowing what might have happened but for this powerful restraining influence. The certainty that a European war would have ruined the Exhibition has profoundly affected international politics during the past year or two. By the time it is over, we must pray that some other equally "valid" interests, as well as the true peace sentiment of the world, will continue to safeguard it.

There was indeed one glaring omission in the opening ceremony of the Exhibition; there was no reference whatever, in word or deed, to religion. Science was glorified as "the secret of the material and moral greatness of communities;" altruism, "which aims at lessening in every nation the repulsive inequalities springing from nature or the social system;" and industry, "liberating and sacred industry." All this would be very fine if it were true, but it is to the sorrow and the shame of France in the midst of her unquestionable industrial and artistic greatness.

The delegates at the National Union of Teachers at York took up a significant attitude on the question of "private doles to schools." In most of the national schools the "grant in aid" has been wisely and properly administered; but in others it has been used for other than its proper purpose of increasing the efficiency of schools. The teachers themselves hope that > at no distant date the schools of the country may be rendered independent of the charity of the few, and may look for adequate support under forms of government which will bespeak national confidence.

In his presidential address, Mr. Marshall Jackman also claimed for primary school teachers—> as public servants, working in public schools, paid for wholly, and in very great part, out of public funds—that their tenure of office should depend only on the fulfilment of their duties, and not on matters entirely outside their school work—an unmistakable reference to the way in which ecclesiastical managers sometimes demand other than educational services from teachers. The general trend of opinion among teachers is evidently against the voluntary school system, which is not likely to survive for long in the face of the gradual loss of confidence shown in so many directions.

Among the social problems of the day, the well-being of the shop-assistant holds a prominent place. At the annual meeting of the "National Union of Shop Assistants" a strong protest was made against the "living-in" system, which it was generally agreed, was bad for the young people, "mentally, morally, and physically." A protest was also made against the pressure put upon them to "live in" by making their board and lodging a compulsory part of their pay. Sunday labour was also strenuously denounced, as well as "overtime work." On the whole our shop-assistants form a highly respectable and deserving part of the community, and wise and sympathetic employers will do well to meet the spirit of reasonable reform among them by such concession as may be possible. These young people, by their steadiness, industry, and almost unfailing courtesy, deserve well of the public also, who can do a great deal by kindness and thoughtfulness to lighten their sometimes hard and monotonous lot.

Some very interesting results emerge from the recent Socialist and Labour Conference convened at Glasgow. In the first place, instead of the old-fashioned spirit of unreasoning iconoclasm, shown by the working-men delegates, there was a very practical attitude taken up towards many of the sore problems that affect our working-class communities, a disposition to show up the vices that are the root of so much industrial and social misery, and a fruitful batch of suggestions for reform as regards the poor-laws, the housing problem, and many other questions. The reports not only furnish excellent and instructive reading, but mark a new and promising departure in practical social science. As soon as the working classes give themselves to study the real causes of well-being, and to open their minds to the part they can play in their own social improvement, we shall begin a fresh chapter of progress. This conference gives some hope that this may soon take place.

The Œcumenical Missionary Conference in New York, opened on Saturday last. Mr. Harrison, ex-President of the United States, presided at the inaugural meeting, in the Carnegie Hall, which was attended by some 2,000 delegates, among whom were many British and German ministers and other workers. The delegates were welcomed by President McKinley and Mr. Roosevelt. The President paid a high tribute to missionaries, saying he classed them with the world's heroes, although they wielded only the sword of the Spirit. We hope to give an account of the proceedings in future issues.

Ominous news comes across the Atlantic of a campaign of Anglophobia which is being fomented by the Bryanites under the form of advocating the Boer cause. The relations between the two countries have been improving so steadily during the last two years that it will be a calamity if this movement effects its immediate purpose of embittering the feelings of the two peoples—it can scarcely have an appreciable influence on the issue of the present war. To make this one of the test questions in the forthcoming Presidential election is a most mischievous step, and can breed nothing but evil. On our side it calls for great temperance of feeling and speech, for to go back to the condition of things before the Cuban War would be a blow to all that is hopeful and progressive in the present situation. It takes two to make a quarrel, and this is as true of nations as of individuals.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in speaking on the importance of safeguarding "the position of the Church" in the new movement for properly developing secondary education, committed himself to the extraordinary statement that "religious equality is in practice interpreted to mean religious non-existence." Such crude and misleading generalisations do great harm. It is not true, as regards the "unsectarian teachings" in our primary Board Schools, that religious equality means "religious non-existence." It is not true of our colonies, or of the United States, that "religious equality" means "religious non-existence." "Religious *in*equality" is a term that bears its own condemnation on its face.

Cheery and encouraging accounts have come to hand of the results of the recent amalgamation of the various Methodist communities in South Australia. Hitherto there had been three forms of Methodism in the Colony—Wesleyan, Bible Christian, and Primitive. Since January 1 these three have been organically united in one church. Reports of the first united conference bear witness to the hearty spirit of brotherhood that marks the combined churches, to the business-like ability with which delicate questions of adjustment have been mastered, and to the devout and spiritual tone of the gatherings. Our colonies are giving us some valuable lessons in more directions than one. This practical experiment in Christian reunion is an object-lesson that should not be lost on our home churches. There may be some difficulties peculiar to this country that are not found elsewhere; but there are several converging paths of reunion that ought to lead to their natural end ere long, and this happy instance of union accomplished ought to hasten the time.

The (Roman) Catholic Times announces that the remains of Dr. St. George Mivart have been deposited in the catacombs at Kensal Green without any religious ceremony, part of the inscription upon the coffin being the words, "Ex umbris et imaginibus in veritatem." Another Romanist journal, generally less diplomatic in its utterances, says:

> The ceremony was no ceremony at all, strictly speaking; but in accordance with the requirements of sanitation it was necessary to transfer the body of the late scientist from his home to some place licensed and approved by the civil authorities. There, pending the decision of Rome on the matter as to whether Doctor Mivart can be buried as a Catholic, the body must for the present remain.

The decision doubtless will be looked for with much interest by the thousands of Romanists in England who, it was stated by a Roman Catholic writer in one of the daily journals a week ago, hold similar views to Dr. Mivart's in regard to the dogmatic claims of Rome.

The organ of the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, the Zerkovni Viestnik, makes some startling admissions in dealing with the Nonconformist communities of Russia. The cruel persecution waged against them, which took the form of deportation to Siberia, just as though they were on a par with the vilest criminals, is pronounced an entire failure as well as cruelly intolerant; and it calls for the abrogation of the law that makes such treatment possible. More than this, a hearty tribute is paid to the exemplary life and character of the Nonconformists, which is commended to the emulation of the "faithful," and to the heroism which rapidly fills up the gaps caused by the transportation of those thus persecuted for their faith. All this augurs a better day for religion in Russia, where the principle of toleration has been very slow indeed to manifest itself.

The law which prohibits dramatic performances upon Good Friday might reasonably and with justice be extended to other entertainments of a kind quite inconsistent with the solemnity of that day. A performance, as near a prize-fight as the law allows, was announced for Good Friday last by a club in the South of London, one of the reasons given being that it was an "off night" as regards numbers of men. Surely if our legislators considered it to be right, and it is right, that the theatre should be closed, disreputable carnivals such as the one in question ought also to be made illegal. We hope some Christian members of Parliament will take up the matter, with a view to the suppression of so grave a scandal.

The "personality of Satan" has long been thought to be a thoroughly discredited theory in "cultured" circles. It would appear, however, that even advanced theologians are beginning to return to the undoubted teaching of the New Testament on this important question. Canon Gore, in one of his Lenten addresses on the 1st Epistle of John, has spoken with no uncertain voice on the matter.

> Why do we believe in a kingdom of evil? [he asks] Because we see, behind all the good efforts of individuals, something which plainly gives it continuity and connection; so that all goes on from age to age with a certain unity and continuity. Think of the vast organizations of evil in the world, and of their continuity; think of all the lives, of all the wrong love of money, and of all the tyranny of money. Surely there is something more than a mere accident of an individual sinner here. Evil has its kingdom and its king too.

"After the last returns the first." The great doctrines have a way of reasserting themselves; after a period of neglect or repudiation, they return and conquer by the sheer weight of their evidence and manifest truth. Thus belief is no mere academic theory, it is interwoven with the whole tissue of the evangelic faith. Christ came to "destroy the works of the devil."

It is gratifying to observe that a Bill has been introduced into the French Chamber prohibiting tradesmen from employing their assistants more than six days per week; and we sincerely trust that the measure will soon become law. Apart from higher considerations, the breaking of the Sabbath always has meant to the working man seven days' work for six days' wages; and if, as is now proposed in the Bill in question, a limit is placed upon the number of days, it will soon be found to be in the interest of the employer to exclude from them that one which God has graciously provided to be a day of holy rest.

A Condition of Blessing.

Blessing and iniquity never can co-exist in the same heart. The iniquity must go, then the blessing will come. The wickedness must depart, and then angels will hasten into the soul. Let us know, believe, and say with the frankest speech, that no man can really be blessed who has not been turned from his iniquities. —Dr. Parker.

The Power of Christ.

Christ is able—(1) To forgive sins (Mark ii. 9-11); (2) To save to the uttermost (Heb. vii. 25); (3) To keep (2 Tim. i. 12); (4) To succour the tempted (Heb. ii. 18); (5) To act beyond our thought (Eph. iii. 20); (6) To make all grace abound (2 Cor. ix. 8); (7) To subdue all things (Phil. iii. 21).

A Worker's Prayer.

Oh that I could lie lower! then should I rise higher! Could I take deeper root downwards, then should I bear more fruit upwards. I want to be poor in spirit. I want to be meek and lowly in heart. I want to have the whole mind that was in Christ Jesus. Blessed be his Name for what He has given me already. Blessed be his Name, that out of his fulness I receive grace for grace. Oh that my heart was Christ's library! I would not have one thief to lodge in my Redeemer's temple. "Lord, scourge out every thief," is the daily language of my heart. The Lord will hear my prayer. —George Whitefield.

Successful Prayer.

(Mark xi. 24.)

"What things soever" has limitations. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my Name" (John xiv. 13). The text indicates three steps, and gives a blessed assurance:

I. The Desire in the heart; a desire so strong as to override all others, and to carry compliance with all conditions.

II. Prayer—"when ye pray." God will be "inquired of." He says—"Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find."

III. Faith—"believe that ye receive them." Doubt paralyses prayer. "Without faith it is impossible to please God" (Heb. xi. 6).

The Assurance follows: "Ye shall have them."

Blessed and Tragic Unconsciousness.

(1) Beauty and strength come from communion with God.

(2) The bearer of the radiance is unconscious of it. (a) Let us try to lose ourselves in Jesus Christ. (b) Let us think constantly and longingly of the unattained. (c) Let us cultivate a clear sense of our own imperfections.

(3) The strong man made weak is unconscious of his weakness. Christian people may lose their strength, because they let go their hold upon God, and know nothing about it! (a) Let us watch ourselves very narrowly. (b) Let us ask God's help: "Search me, O God, and try me."

Let us keep near to Jesus Christ, near enough to feel his touch, hear his voice, see his face; that we may carry with us a radiance which will tell even the world that we have been up where the Light lives and reigns. Dr. Maclaren.

*A Roused Temperance Sentiment.—II.

By J. GLYN DAVIES, Newport, Mon.

THE growing power of the drink traffic is an appalling feature of British life. (1) In England and Wales there are 125,944 licensed houses—one to every 243 inhabitants. True, the number has been reduced. But the reduction is balanced out and out by the rebuilding, the enlargement, the decoration of those that remain. While temperance reformers are trying to reduce the number, the Trade is busy increasing the size, the attractiveness, the snariness, and, generally, the capacity for doing mischief. (2) We have 8,686 licensed brewers, a class of men of whom it is difficult to speak with moderation. They make their money, build their mansions, rise to honour—through the blood of their fooled fellows. O that the British workman understood the British brewer! Great God, do Thou open his eyes!

(3) At least £230,000,000 is invested in the Trade. And under the company system, this is distributed among many. In Guinness alone there are 9,000 shareholders, without including debenture-holders! Of these, 178 are "Revs." How the thing ramifies all society! What a hindrance to reform there is in this crowd of shareholders!

(4) There are 3,990 drinking clubs, with a membership of nearly 1,000,000. These are very dens of vice, opposed for ever to all that is pure and true.

What a power we have in our midst. Think of it. Go round it. Mark well its bulwarks. Then answer the question, is there no need of a roused temperance sentiment?

5. The drink traffic is now taking its part in political and municipal life. The "Trade" is their one motto, their one end and aim. The "Trade" is their politics. The "Trade" is their civic creed. Not the good of the nation, not the welfare of the community, but the "Trade"! Public-houses are becoming schools of politics, and through them, the 125,000 of them, the Trade, an elaborate, rich, determined, organized force, is a factor in all imperial and municipal elections. There is no doubt that the great Conservative victory of 1895 was secured by it. Sir William Harcourt's Bill brought out all its determination, all its ferocity, all its energy. A desperate enthusiasm was created that went to all lengths. All that experience could suggest, all that skill could devise, all that money could procure, all that activity could realize—all was done, not for the Commonwealth, not for the State, not for man, but for the "Trade."

Truly said Lord Rosebery, "If the State does not soon control the traffic, the traffic will soon control the State." In the face of this menace to healthy politics, this interference, as unwarrantable as it is shameless, in civic and imperial control—in the face of it, honestly and without prejudice, is there no need of a roused temperance sentiment?

6. The drink traffic is a Sabbath breaker. The unlicensed, irresponsible shebeens, nearly 4,000 strong, open their doors all the Sabbath long. They are packed, if report be true, with drinkers, loafers, and others of that ugly ilk. In England, the pity it is, the public-houses, for certain hours of the Sabbath, are sharers with the shebeens in this guilty work. These open doors are an incalculable help to that drift of desecration which is now menacing our Sabbath rest. Moreover, the traffic employs 300,000 people seven days a week. No rest for these poor slaves all the week! It is a traffic that and death at a frightful pace. Is there any true man who can say a good word for it?

Let these facts sink into the mind. Ponder them well. As we value our Sabbath rest, as we stand for the rights of God, as well as of man, is there no need of a roused temperance sentiment?

7. Religion is suffering. The Church of Christ is weakened, wounded, insulted, pained beyond words. For every minister of the Gospel, we have three licensed houses! Bishops and presbyters lay solemn hands on ministers, and send them out to save their fellows. The State at the same time gives licence to publicans, and sends them out with the ministers, three to one! For every primary school we have six licensed houses! Schoolmasters are trained, certificated, and sent out to educate and lift the young. The State at the same time gives licences to publicans, and sends them out with the schoolmasters, six to one! What chance has the minister or the schoolmaster?

Is there a greater, bitterer foe to the Church of Christ, to the cause of man, than this State-licensed drink traffic? A mocker of the pulpit! A scorner of the truth! A destroyer of souls! Need? There is need, never was greater need, of a roused temperance sentiment. A sentiment coming from the very soul of the Church! A sentiment that will permeate society, senate, and school! A sentiment that will weld all sections of the community into one undivided, unbeaten force! A sentiment that will be work, hard work, brave work, long work!

The foe is busy. The fight is hard. The issues are great. We need to be roused—all that is intelligent and tender, all that is human, all that is Christlike, in us—roused to earnest action. We rest our cause upon God and good. Then, as the Lord liveth, let us arise. To dare! To do! To strive! And to win!

Our Will and God's Word.

ONE of the sad facts in connection with the life of most Christians is the mistakes so often made as to what is the will of God concerning them. Personal bias and desires are often in the ascendancy when least expected. The human will is so strong, and so easily mistaken for the guidance of God; and when failure results we learn our error.

Often one is tempted to wish one lived in the times when God's people, guided by the pillar of fire and of cloud, could not possibly err in their movements (Num. ix. 15-23), though many would find it irksome to have to go forward or halt whether they willed or no. But we have a word of prophecy more sure; whereunto we do well to take heed (2 Pet. i. 19). In God's written Word we have our true guide-book, and we may always be assured that the Lord's will for us never runs counter to his will as revealed to us in the Bible.

Our Bibles must not be used as fate-books turned over in a haphazard way, and guidance taken from isolated texts or parts of texts; passage must be compared with passage, and the times and circumstances of those to whom it was first addressed taken into consideration.

A young woman well known to us, a real child of God, had lived years in a Christian family where she was much valued. Wearying rather of the daily routine, she conceived the idea that God wished her to make a change; she said she was guided by God's Word, for again and again she had let her Bible fall open before her, and it always showed her the same passage which told her to go. She went, but soon found out that it had been a mistake.

A very devoted Christian girl, the sole comfort to an aged father, after attending a missionary meeting, was sure she was called by God to go abroad; and, in spite of remonstrance from friends, left the old man to droop, and gave herself to the fresh and more congenial work. Had she studied God's Word, we doubt not she would have learned more clearly

HIS WILL IN ALL DUTY.

An earnest Christian worker, of somewhat erratic and restless disposition, thought it God's will that she should leave husband and family, and go off for several years and visit mission stations. It was her own strong desire to do a great work for the Master, but surely God's Word would teach that since He had placed her in a home, duties to husband and family stood first. A Sunday school teacher, who was gaining great influence over his boys, thought himself called to a much higher work, in village preaching, and the class was often neglected and the lads scattered.

Examples might be multiplied. Surely we need the exhortation of St. Paul, "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Happy are they who follow the leadings of God's providence as explained by the directions in God's Word.

I would not have the restless will
That hurries to and fro,
Seeking for some great thing to do,
Or secret thing to know;
I would be treated as a child,
And guided where I go.

April's Call to the Woodlands.

O come forth, ye woodland children, spring is here!
That bright, happy, holy thing,
Dropt from heaven, whose name is Spring—
The sweet childhood of the innocent young year.

O come forth, ye woodland children! climb the stile;
And lo! veiled in withered grasses,
Some alone and some in masses,
Baby buds are breaking open with a smile.

O come forth, ye woodland children, come abroad!
All the solitary places
Are alive with new-born faces,
Watching Nature writing down the thoughts of God.

O come forth, ye woodland children! come and ponder,
How through death life forced its way,
And its progress none could stay
Till the soul is filled with wonder, filled with wonder.

But remember, O remember in your youth,
How alone against the world
The first snowdrop stood unfurled,
Like another Athanasius for the truth.

O the fair, fair risen life, the risen life!
While the world is filled with clangour
Of the nations in their anger,
There comes healing, healing, healing midst the strife!

O come forth, ye woodland children! dance and sing,
For all the world is singing,
And Love's fairy bells are ringing;
Birds, and butterflies, and bees are on the wing.

But O hush! ye woodland children, halt a minute,
In yon thorn-bush, screened with care,
There's a nest all moss and hair,
And three lovely mottled eggs are lying in it!

O come forth, ye woodland children! earth is ours,
The delicious old green earth,
With its rainbows and its mirth,
And, like fairies' swinging censers, come the flowers!

Then come forth, ye woodland children! Heaven's come down,
And through copses wet with rains
Angels cleave their soft green lanes,
And all Eden shines encamped about the town!

John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Prophet of the Highest.

"THOU, child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Most High"—thus Zacharias addressed his infant son, as he lay in the midst of that group of wondering neighbours and friends. What a thrill of ecstasy quivered in the words! A long period, computed at 400 years, had passed since the last great Hebrew prophet had uttered the words of the Highest. Reaching back from him to the days of Moses, had been a long line of prophets, who had passed down the lighted torch from hand to hand.

But as the voice of Old Testament prophecy ceased, with its last breath it foretold that it would be followed, in the after-time, by a new and glorious revival of the noblest traditions of the prophetic office. "Behold," so God spake by Malachi, "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." (Mal. iv. 5, 6). Consider—

I.—The Formative Influences by which the Baptist's Prophetic Nature was Moulded.—Amongst these we must place in the foremost place the Prophecies, which had given a forecast of his career. From his childhood and upwards they had been reiterated in his ear by his parents, who would never weary in reciting them. He would ponder the reference to himself in the great Messianic prediction—"Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people, saith your God. . . . The voice of one that crieth, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight in the desert a highway for our God . . ." There was no doubt as to the relevance of those words to himself (Luke i. 76; Matt. iii. 3). And it must have unconsciously wrought mightily in the influence it wielded over his character and ministry.

There was, also, that striking anticipation by Malachi which suggested Elijah as his model. Had not Gabriel himself alluded to it, when he foretold that the predicted child would go before the Messiah, in the spirit and power of Elijah (Luke i. 17)? And again his statement was confirmed by our Lord in Matt. xi. 14.

Thus the great figure of Elijah was ever before the mind of the growing youth, as his model and inspiration. He found himself perpetually asking, How did Elijah act, and what would he do here and now? And there is little doubt that his choice of the lonely wilderness, of the mantle of rough camel's hair, of the abrupt and arousing form of address, was suggested by that village of Thisbe in the land of Gilead, and those personal characteristics which were so familiar in the Prophet of Fire.

But the mind of the Forerunner must also have been greatly exercised by the Lawlessness and Crime which involved all classes of his countrymen in a common condemnation. The death of Herod, occurring when John was yet a child, dependent on the care of the good Elisabeth, had led to disturbances which afforded an excuse for the Roman occupation of Jerusalem. The sceptre had departed from Judah, and the lawgiver from between his feet. The High Priesthood was a mere forfeit in the deals of Idumæan tetrarchs and Roman governors. The publicans were notorious for their exactions, their covetousness, their cheating and oppression of the people. Soldiers filled the country with violence, extortion, and discontent. The priests were hirelings; the Pharisees were hypocrites; the ruling classes had set aside their primitive simplicity and purity, and were given up to the voluptuousness and licence of the Empire. "Brood of vipers" was apparently not too strong a phrase to use of the foremost religious leaders of the day—at least, when used, its relevance passed without challenge.

Tidings of the evil that was overflowing the land like a deluge of ink were constantly coming to the ears of this eager soul, filling it with horror and dismay; and to this must be traced much of the austerity which arrested the attention of his contemporaries. The idea, which lies beneath the fasting and privation of so many of God's servants, has been that of an overwhelming sorrow, which has taken away all taste for the pleasures and comforts of life. And this was the thought by which John was penetrated. On the one hand, there was his deep and agonizing conviction of the sin of Israel; and on the other, the belief that the Messiah must be nigh, even at the doors. Thus the pressure of the burden increased on him till he was forced to give utterance to the cry it extorted from his soul: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

But in addition to these, we must add the Vision of God, which must have been specially vouchsafed to him whilst he sojourned in those lonely wilds. He spoke once of Him "who sent him to baptize." Evidently he had become accustomed to detect his presence and to hear his voice. This is the characteristic of the true prophet. He has been a seer. He has spoken, because he has beheld with his eyes, looked upon, and handled the very Word of God. The Divine Prophet, speaking for all that had preceded Him, said: "We speak that which we know, and testify that we have seen."

In this we may have some share. Let us remember that we are to be God's witnesses in the Jerusalem of the home, the Judæa of our immediate neighbours, and to the uttermost parts of the earth of our profession or daily calling. God demands not advocates, but witnesses; and we must see for ourselves before we can bear witness to others, the glory of that light still flushing our faces, and the accent of conviction minted in our speech.

These are the three signs of a prophet: vision; a deep conviction of sin and impending judgment; and the gushing forth of moving and eloquent speech; and each of these was apparent, in an exalted and extreme degree, in John the son of Zacharias.

II.—An Illustrative and Remarkable Parallel.—As John came in the spirit and power of Elijah, so, 400 years ago, in the lovely city of Florence, a man was sent from God to testify against the sins of his age, who, in many particulars, so exactly corresponds with our Lord's forerunner that the one recalls the other.

Who can read of Savonarola's saintly life,* over which even the breath of calumny has never cast a stain—of his depriving himself of every indulgence, content with the hardest couch and roughest clothing, and just enough of the plainest food to support life—without remembering the camel's cloth, the locusts and wild honey of the Baptist?

If John's lot was cast on evil days, when religion suffered most in the house of her friends, so was it with Savonarola. The fourteenth and fifteenth centuries witnessed the increasing corruption and licentiousness of popes and clergy. The offices of cardinal and bishop were put up to auction, and sold to the highest bidder. The bishop extorted money from the priests, and these robbed the people. The grossest immorality was prevalent in all ranks of the Church, and without concealment.

The herald of Jesus possessed a marvellous eloquence, beneath which the whole land was moved; and so it was with Savonarola. During the eight years that he preached in the cathedral, it was thronged with vast crowds; and as he pleaded for purity of life and simplicity of manners, "women threw aside jewels and finery, libertines were transformed into sober citizens, bankers and tradesmen restored their ill-gotten gains."

What Herod was to John the Baptist, the Pope and the magnificent Lorenzo di Medici were to Savonarola. The latter seems to have felt a strange fascination towards the eloquent preacher, tried to attach him to his court, was frequent in his attendances at San Marco, and gave largely to his offertories. To use the words of the New Testament, he feared him, "knowing that he was a righteous man, and a holy" (Mark vi. 20). But Savonarola took care to avoid any sign of compliance or compromise, declined to pay homage to Lorenzo for promotion to high ecclesiastical functions, returned his gold from the offertories, and when they ran to tell him that Lorenzo was walking in the garden, answered, "If he has not asked for me, do not disturb his meditations or mine."

Like John, Savonarola was unceasing in his denunciation of the hypocritical religion which satisfied itself with outward observances. "I tell you," he said, "that the Lord willeth not that ye fast on such a day or at such an hour; but willeth that ye avoid sin all the days of your life."

The fate of martyrdom that befell John was awarded also to Savonarola. Thrust into a loathsome dungeon; languishing there, amid every indignity and torture, for some weeks, on May 23, 1498, he was led forth to die. When the commissioners of the Pope arrived at his trial, they brought with them express orders that he was to die, "even though he were a second John the Baptist." It is thus that the Apostate Church has always dealt with her noblest sons. But Truth, struck to the ground, revives. Hers are the eternal years. Within a few years, Luther was nailing his theses at the door of the church at Wittenberg, and the Reformation was on its way.

There is a legend, which at least contains a true suggestion, that when Savonarola was on his way to Florence from Genoa, as a young man, his strength failed him as he was crossing the Apennines, but that a mysterious stranger appeared to him, restored his courage, led him to a hospice, compelled him to take food, and afterwards accompanied him to his destination; but on reaching the San Gallo gate he vanished, with the words, Remember to do that for which God hath sent thee!

The story recalls forcibly the words with which the Evangelist John introduces his notice of the Forerunner—"There was a man, sent from God, whose name was John." Men are always coming, sent from God, specially adapted to their age, and entrusted with the message which the times demand. See to it that thou too realise thy divine mission; for Jesus said, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." Every true life is a mission from God.

And when we read the words of the Apostle Paul about John "fulfilling his course," we may well ask for grace that we may fill up to the brim the measure of our opportunities, that we may realize to the full God's meaning and intention in creating us: and so our lives shall mate with the Divine Ideal, like sublime words with some heavenly strain, each completing the other.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 29. Psa. lxxv.

THERE are high moments in the soul, when we feel that God's name is near. The room in which we sit becomes holy ground; the atmosphere is the thin veil behind which trembles the very presence of the Eternal. Then we give thanks, we give thanks. What is life without God? But when He is near, summer is in our hearts, and all the trees are filled with singing birds.

The godly man must not be content with praising God, great and good as that work is. He must be prepared to take his part in bearing up the social fabric. The more especially in times of chaos and dissolution, he must be prepared to assume responsibility in directing and influencing the course of events. I gravely question if the Church of God is exerting a sufficient influence at the present crisis. We may do much, not only by our prayers, but by breathing the spirit of our Master in social circles.

What fret it takes out of the life to know that our promotion in the world to positions of trust and influence does not depend on our plannings and strivings, but that God is the source of all. He who lives for God, and whom God can trust, shall be placed in positions of trust. He who will use his influence for God shall be dowered with influence. He who is faithful over talents shall be allowed to try his hand on cities. Let the arrogant and wicked say and do as they like; with God is the ultimate decision, and He can interfere on the behalf of his saints. The horn is always the symbol of strength. The horns of the wicked may sprout, but they shall be cut off by the saw of the divine judgment, whilst those of the righteous shall be exalted.

MONDAY, April 30. Psa. lxxvi.

In the second verse "tabernacle" may be rendered covert, and "dwelling-place" lair (see R.V. margin). God is compared to the lion, the dreaded monarch of beasts, which finds his home in a den, on which no inferior animal dares intrude. How secure then must Salem and Zion be! No weapons that are formed against them shall prosper; they are all snapped and broken by his power. As the mountains are full of prey to the young lion, so the hills around Jerusalem, where Sennacherib pitched his camp, were full of spoil to the armies of the Lion of the tribe of Judah. The stout-hearted captains of Assyria slept their last sleep. Both chariot and horsemen were overwhelmed in the sleep of death.

For the Angel of God laid his wings on the blast,
And breathed on the face of the foe as he passed.

Some of the meek of the earth may read these lines. Humble towards God, they are meek towards their fellow man. They do not avenge themselves. Weak and helpless, they turn their eyes to God; and He cannot fail. He will cause his sentence to be heard from heaven, and when the earth hears, it will be still. He will arise in judgment and save all the meek of the earth. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

There is a "thus far and no farther" to human wrath. God will not let it go beyond certain limits, and it is remarkable how He is able to make it subserve his own purposes. Pharaoh's wrath, Nebuchadnezzar's wrath, Herod's wrath, have really been used to effect what otherwise God would have brought about by holier means. Bring Him gifts and presents, O meek souls. Fear not ye; but let the proud Roman soldiers quake and become as dead men (11, 12).

TUESDAY, May 1. Psa. lxxvii.

Yes, it is well to cry with your voice in the day of your trouble. It is a mistake to lock your secret anguish in your heart. Better a hundred times to let it forth. Even in the night, stretch out your hand; it will touch another Hand. Take no comfort from any lower source; not from Christian work, not from the diversions of society, not from a proud steeling of your nature against the brunt of tribulation—no, refuse to be comforted, till God has pressed the poison from your wound and comforted you Himself.

Go back on the past. Consider the way in which He has stood by his saints in the days of old, the years of ancient time. Recall his dealings with thee in the days that are gone. He cannot cast off. When once He sets his love He never takes it back. There may be the temporary shadow, as of the dark tunnel, but thy life shall shoot out into the brilliant sunshine again. His mercy and promise are the inalienable possession of the soul. It is thy infirmity which makes thee question thus. Like John the Baptist, thou art enclosed in a dungeon cell of some kind, and this depresses thee, but oh, remember "the years of the right hand of the Most High." Has it ever faltered? Has it ever been withdrawn? And think who sits there, exalted to his right hand, a Prince and a Saviour!

No. Betake thee to the sanctuary. Recount the wonders of the Red Sea, and the wilderness. Remember how tenderly God led his people, as a shepherd his flock. And He is thine, and thou art his, for ever.

WEDNESDAY, May 2. Psa. lxxviii.

Hymns like this were learnt by children and young people in the old Hebrew homes, that they might set their hope on God, and not forget his works. It is a good custom to store the young mind with hymns and words of Scripture. They will often return in after life. Parents might do so much for their children if they would sow their memories thick with the seed-germs of God's Word.

What a story is told here of the waywardness of the human heart! Notwithstanding all that God has done, we are perpetually asking: Can God? "Can God prepare a table in the wilderness? Can He give bread?" Nothing is more detrimental to our peace and prosperity. God will do anything we can trust Him for, but directly we begin to question, we tie his hands. His anger is kindled against those who do not trust in his salvation.

Sometimes God gives men what they lust after, because He sees their hearts are fully set on it, and that He may teach them the hollowness and unreality of all below these skies. But, in spite of all his beneficence, the human heart will continue its rebellion, turning to Him in moments of despair, and following its own wild way when prosperity returns.

The story of the Book of Judges and 1 Samuel is told with graphic force in vv. 55-64; and it is very fine to hear of the divine awakening of v. 65. There have been many times in the history of religion when God has seemed to sleep. Sin and evil have held, apparently, uninterrupted sway. Then a time of revival has carried all before it. Some man has been raised up—a Luther, a Spurgeon, a Moody. God send us such times again!

THURSDAY, May 3. Psa. lxxix.

A cry of mingled agony and surprise! It seemed almost incredible that the heathen (who probably stand for Nebuchadnezzar and his officers) should be allowed to enter the holy city, defiling the Temple, and laying Jerusalem waste. Yet so it had been. The streets were choked with the slain, and the watercourses had run blood. The Psalm in many respects closely resembles the Book of Lamentations, with which it should be compared. The same horror, the same agony, the same pitiful entreaty to God to interpose, the same intense hatred against the victors.

There is a sense in which we may apply the Psalm to our own life. How often the heathen force their way into the inner temple of the Spirit—heathen thoughts and imaginations, unholy and malicious passions, hurtful and deceitful lusts! Sometimes we have beheld this intrusion into the hearts and lives of those who are dear to us as our own souls! Young hearts, which were intended to be the city and temple of God, invaded by strange and foreign enemies to their peace and blessedness.

Does it seem as though God were angry with you, and that your life is laid waste by the fire of his indignation? Are you brought very low, and as it were appointed to death? Is the reproach of the enemy ever in your ears, saying, Where is your God? Then, turn first to inquire whether there may not be some sin which lies between God and your soul. Confess it, and put it away. And then turn to God with a free and glad heart. Ask that his tender mercies may prevent, and his help succour, for the glory of his name. And your sighing will come before Him, and He will deliver and keep you as the sheep of his pasture, purging away your sins.

FRIDAY, May 4. Psa. lxxx.

Like the preceding, this Psalm probably dates from the time of the devastations perpetrated by Nebuchadnezzar and his generals. Thus the pious Israelite bewailed the low estate of his people. The conception of the Psalm, mentioning especially Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Manasseh, the three tribes which, in the olden line of march through the desert, followed the sacred vessels of the sanctuary, evidently suggests that God is still leading his pilgrim hosts through the desert to the Land of Promised Rest. Notice the special reference to Joseph, who stands for the ten tribes of Israel, as though, in this time of trouble, the ancient antagonism between the northern and southern kingdoms was abolished: and ponder on the tender refrain with which each stanza closes (3, 7, 14, 19).

We may turn this ancient litany into a prayer for the Church of Christ in these days. There is considerable reason for anxiety. Larger masses of people stand aloof from her than at any period in the closing century. On the one hand, there is an alarming increase of sacramentarianism, and on the other a terrible prevalence of mere intellectualism; the reign of higher criticism is at its height in many pulpits, whilst worldliness and infatuation for amusement obtain in the pews. If ever there was a moment when God's children needed to pray for revival, it is the present. God's vine is burned with fire, it is cut down—is it not time for us to plead with Him to turn again and save us, to lift on us the light of his face, to quicken us again, that we may call upon his name?

If we are willing to be turned, we have already commenced to turn, and presently the twilight will brighten into the perfect daylight. If we want to be saved, we are already being saved.

SATURDAY, May 5. Psa. lxxxi.

Ah, how much we miss because we do not open our mouths wide enough (v. 10). We are not straitened in God, but in our own limited and straitened faith. There is no good thing that He will withhold from us if we walk uprightly.

Think of what God has done! Has He not delivered us from Egypt, our shoulder from the burden, and our hands from the basket of our taskmasters? Has He not delivered us in trouble, and answered us in the secret place of thunder? Has He not brought us through the Red Sea, and strewn its shores with the dead bodies of our foes? And will He not continue to supply all our need out of his riches in glory by Christ Jesus? He that spared not his own Son, but freely gave Him up to the death for us all, will He not with Him also freely give us all things?

Alas, that we have not hearkened to his voice, and that we have preferred our own ways and energies and resources. If only we could die absolutely to these! If only we could write the death-sentence on all that belongs to our own natures! If only we could learn to be dead indeed to the "I" principle, that we might live only and wholly to God!

Then He would subdue our enemies and turn his hand against our adversaries. He would cause our time to endure for ever. He would feed us with the finest of the wheat, and satisfy us with honey from the Rock. Let us turn to Him with purpose of heart, being divested of all confidence in ourselves, and satisfied to receive all from the Hand of God, our strength and our salvation.

*The General's Story.

A BOY'S SACRIFICE.

IT was during my Indian service—stirring times, too, ripe with mutiny and murder.

At that time I had in my regiment a little bugler. I had often noticed him as being too fragile and delicate for the life he had to lead; but he was born in the regiment, and we were bound to make the best of him. His father, as brave a man as ever lived, had been killed in action, and his mother had just drooped and died six months later.

She was the daughter of a Scripture reader, a delicate, refined-looking creature, and had brought up the boy strictly, according to her lights. In spite of her chapel-going propensities, she was generally liked and respected, and the boy was her image; but, as he liked better going to prayer-meetings with her than joining in the horse-play of the other boys, he was not popular, and suffered from many a coarse taunt and mocking gibe.

After his mother died—I heard all this afterwards—his life was made a misery to him by the scoffing sneers and ribald jokes of the men whose butt he was.

About two years later, when Willie Holt was fourteen years old, the regiment was bivouacking some miles from camp for rifle practice. I had intended leaving the lad behind, thinking him too delicate for such work—the ground was swampy and unhealthy—but my sergeant-major begged hard 'to take him along.'

"There is mischief in the air, Colonel,' he said; "and, rough as they treat the lad—and they do lead him a life—his pluck and his patience tells on 'em, for the boy is a saint, sir; he is, indeed."

I had a rough lot of recruits just then, and before we had been out a fortnight, several acts of insubordination had been brought to my notice—those were ticklish times—and I had sworn to make an example of the very next offence, by

HAVING THE CULPRIT FLOGGED.

One morning it was reported to me that, during the night, the butts, or targets, had been thrown down and otherwise mutilated, and the usual practice could not take place. This was serious indeed, and on investigation, the rascally act was traced to a man or men in the very tent where Willie Holt was billeted, two of them being the worst characters in the regiment. The whole lot were instantly put under arrest, to be tried by court-martial, when enough evidence was produced to prove conclusively that one or more of the prisoners were guilty of the crime. In vain were they appealed to to produce the men, and at last I spoke:—

"We have all heard the evidence that proves the perpetrator of last night's dastardly act to be one of the men before us."—then turning to the prisoners I added:—

"If any one of you who slept in No. 4 tent last night will come forward and take his punishment like a man, the rest will get off free; but if not, there remains no alternative but to punish you all, each man in turn to receive ten strokes of the cat."

For the space of a couple of minutes dead silence followed; then, from the midst of the prisoners, where his slight form had been completely hidden, Willie Holt came forward.

He advanced to within a couple of yards from where I sat, his face was very pale, a fixed intensity of purpose stamped on every line of it, and his steadfast, shining eyes met mine clear and full.

"Colonel," said he, "you have passed your word that if any one of those who slept in No. 4 tent last night comes forward to take his punishment, the rest shall get off scot free. I am ready, sir, and please may I take it now?"

For a moment I was speechless, so utterly was I taken by surprise; then, in a fury of anger and disgust, turned upon the prisoners.

"Is there no man among you worthy of the name? Are you all cowards enough to let this lad suffer for your sins? for that he is guiltless you know as well as I." But sullen and silent they stood, with never a word.

Then I turned to the boy, whose patient pleading eyes were fixed on my face, and never in all my life have I found myself so painfully situated. I knew my word must stand, and the lad knew it too, as he repeated once more, "I am ready, sir."

"Sick at heart, I gave the order, and he was led away for punishment.

Bravely he stood, with back bared, as one—two—three strokes descended. At the fourth a faint moan escaped his white lips, but ere the fifth fell a hoarse cry burst from the group of prisoners who had been forced to witness the scene, and with one bound, Jim Sykes, the black sheep of the regiment, seized the cat as with choking, gasping utterance he shouted:

"Stop it, Colonel, stop it, and tie me up instead. He never did it, but I did," and with convulsed and anguished face he flung his arms round the boy.

Fainting and almost speechless, Willie lifted his eyes to the man's face and smiled—such a smile—"No, Jim," he whispered, "you are safe now; the Colonel's word will stand."—His head fell forward—he had fainted.

The next day as I was making for the hospital tent where the boy lay, I met the doctor. "How is the lad?" I asked. "Sinking, Colonel," he said quietly. "What!" I ejaculated, horrified and startled past words.

"Yes, the shock of yesterday was too much for his feeble strength. I have known for some months it was only a question of time," he added; "this affair has only hastened matters,"—then gruffly—"he is more fit for heaven than earth;" and with a suspicious moisture in his kind old eyes, he stood aside while I passed into the tent.

The dying lad lay propped up on the pillows, and half kneeling, half crouching at his side was Jim Sykes. The change in the boy's face startled me; it was deathly white, but his great eyes were strangely sweet. The kneeling man lifted his head, and I saw the drops of sweat standing on his brow as he muttered brokenly,

"Why did ye do it, lad? Why did ye do it?"

"Because I wanted to take it for you, Jim," Willie's weak voice answered tenderly. "I thought if I did it might help you to understand a little bit why Christ died for you."

"Why Christ died for me!" the man repeated listlessly.

"Yes, He died for you because He loved you, as I do, Jim; only Christ loves you much more. I only suffered for one sin, but Christ took the punishment of all the sins you have ever committed. The punishment of all your sins was death, Jim, and Christ died for you."

"Christ has naught to do with such as me, lad; I'm one of the bad 'uns, you ought to know that."

"But He died to save the bad ones, just them. He says 'I came not to call the righteous but sinners.' 'Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though red like crimson, they shall be as wool.' Dear Jim," the earnest voice pleaded passionately, "shall thy Lord have died in vain? Listen; He is calling you. He has poured out his precious life blood for you. He is knocking at the door of your heart. Won't you let Him in? Oh! you must, and then, we shall meet again."

The lad's voice failed him, but he laid his hand gently on the man's bowed head.

A choking sob was the only answer, and for a few minutes there was silence.

Standing there in the shadow I felt my own heart strangely stirred. I had heard such things once, long, long ago. Thoughts of the mother I had idolised came floating back out of the dead past, and the words seemed a faint echo of her own.

How long I stood there I know not, but I was roused by a hoarse cry from the man, and then I saw that Willie had fallen back on his pillow, fainting. I thought he was gone, but a few drops of cordial from the table at his side revived him. He opened his eyes, but they were dim and sightless. "Sing to me, Mother," he whispered, "'The Gates of Pearl,' I am so tired." In a flash the words came back to me. I had heard them often in that shadowy past, and I found myself repeating them softly to the dying boy:—

Though the day be never so long
It ringeth at length to evensong,
And the weary worker goes to his rest
With words of peace and pardon blest.
Though the path be never so steep,
And rough to walk on and hard to keep,
It will lead, when the weary road is trod,
To the Gates of Pearl—the City of God.

"Thank you, Colonel," he whispered, "I shall soon be there."

His tone of glad confidence seemed so strange to me, I said, involuntarily, "Where?"

"Why, heaven, Colonel. The roll call has sounded for me; the gates are open, the price is paid." Then softly, dreamily he repeated as if to himself:

Just as I am without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God—I come.

Then once more he lifted his eyes to mine: "You will help him, sir?" he breathed, laying his hand feebly on the head of the man still crouching at his side; "you will show him the way to—the—Gates—of—Pearl."

As each word fell haltingly, fainter and yet fainter came the breath from between his parted lips. Suddenly a glorious light flashed into his dying eyes, and with a radiant, happy cry, he flung out his arms as if in welcome: "Mother! —mother!"

His voice rang out, thrilling the heart of every man who heard it. Then gradually the weak arms drooped, the light faded from the shining eyes, and the brave spirit of the martyred boy had fled to God."

The Home of Industry.

IT has been an exceptionally trying winter for our needy and aged widows, but we have been enabled to supply both medicine and nourishment to the sick and feeble. The weekly sewing class and free tea have continued regularly, with the much-valued message from God's Word.

Our hearts have been kept tender as we thought of the relatives of our poor and aged away at the front in South Africa—husbands, fathers, and sons. Their prayer-meetings have been most touching. We have listened to first a mother, then a sister, and then a wife, pleading most pathetically that their loved ones might be preserved, and that if it were God's will the war might soon cease. The sorrow and starvation in India were not forgotten, and when our women heard how help was needed, they gathered their pence, and 15s. was the result of their self-denial.

Another branch of our privileged service for the Master has been the gathering in of the children. For many months our Training Home has been bright with a happy family party; their elementary education has been continued day by day, enlivened by their sweet hymns, action songs, and healthy walks in Victoria Park.

But now this our seventy-sixth family is being fitted out, and hopes to sail in the Tunisian on May 10. The Lord has supplied the means, and the readers of this record have supplied many of the garments. Thus we send them forth—some wee ones to be pets, others to be helps, in the homes of plenty in Canada. We know from our past thirty years' experience they will be treated with kindness, and in return give hearty service with gratitude and obedience.

Those who have shared in thus caring for the lambs once neglected, and in danger, take comfort from "Thus saith the Lord, refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears, for thy work shall be rewarded."

A souvenir of the outcome of the work amongst the little ones can be had if a stamp is sent to the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green Road, E.

Other Lands.

From Florida.

IF we sighed with disappointment when entering first the State whose name is so suggestive of flowers and beauty, it was with regret that, after a sojourn of five days at Orlando, Florida, we said farewell to a little band of saints who had welcomed in us members of the one Body of Christ, and whose prayers and blessings followed us on our way to the night train.

Here, as well as in Havana and Nassau, my husband enjoyed the privilege of bearing witness to the mighty power of the Word of God, and his expositions met with ready hearers and kind acceptance among various congregations: Baptists (English and Cuban), Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists, "Disciples," Christian Alliance. Owing to his introduction to Principal Ward of the by Mrs. Drury Lowe, a worthy daughter of a noble mother (Lady Beauchamp), he was also given the opportunity of addressing an assembly of students and Christians at that College.

This institution was founded under a special charter from the State of Florida in 1885, and opened during the same year with the object of promoting the general interests of Christian education, and of qualifying its students for the various duties of life.

Latterly the College has received a number of Cuban students, many from families made destitute by the war, and who consequently had to be assisted financially. Rev. G. M. Ward believes that the best way to settle Cuba is to educate her people in American ways and up to American standards. Another feature of the work is that they are brought under the influence of Bible teaching. Though nominally Roman Catholics, a great majority have shown a strong aversion to that system. About two-thirds of the students have been regular attendants at the Protestant churches and the Christian Endeavour meetings in the towns. Principal Ward consented to give free tuition to two Cubans, to be selected by the Cuban Educational Society.

We arrived at Orlando one Thursday afternoon. While taking a walk in the evening through the unknown city, we found ourselves before an open meeting room, and, lifting up our eyes, read W.C.T.U., and beneath, The Christian Alliance. A lady was just speaking, her face shining with transfiguring joy as of one who dwells in heaven and looks down upon the earth. Three souls were given her that evening—father, mother, and son, coming out to confess their Redeemer. We learned afterwards that Mrs. Palmer was from Syracuse, N.Y., and that she had passed through the furnace of sorrow and bodily affliction until she became, according to her own expression,

A BUNDLE OF DISEASE.

When the doctors despaired, she turned to her God, and proved that her extremity was his opportunity. She is now well and rejoicing, and on an errand of love at Orlando.

The members of the Christian Alliance belong to different churches. They have united together for active service, and carry the Gospel into out-of-the-way places, holding meetings in cottages, log-cabins, or barns; visiting prisoners and sick ones, and praising the Saviour in constant expectation of his coming. The work is not without a reward even now. The other day a young man in the prison became converted, so manifestly that none who went to see him doubted it.

Colonel and Mrs. Drury Lowe keep in touch with the different Christian agencies. Their attitude rather puzzles some who would like to find out their denomination. They are also warm friends of the negroes, not discussing but acting. The longer we are in the South the more we are convinced that arguing the race-problem with Southern citizens will not advance its solution, but rather repress it. The white man is born and bred in the prejudice; only the grace of God can make him deny what has become a part of his nature. Christians, whose sincerity we would not doubt for a moment, confess to it, and ministers of the Gospel of the meek and gentle Jesus, who said: "I am among you as He who serveth," will expect every coloured visitor to come by the back door, no matter what his social position is, and consider it a condescension to address a man of Booker T. Washington's intelligence and education as "Mister." Generally we find that those who speak with the greatest know nothing of his achievements. They have never read a book from the pen of a coloured author, nor inquired into their institutions, nor taken the trouble of ameliorating their filthy conditions where they exist. Ostracism no doubt is the nightmare that frightens many a kind-hearted man and woman.

Mrs. Drury Lowe took her stand from the very first, and has remained a faithful advocate of the principle of brotherhood and sisterhood in Christ Jesus, never grudging a kind smile or a handshake to the dark-skinned child of God. Once a week she gathers the mothers at the Afro-American Episcopal Methodist Church, Orlando, reading and expounding the Bible to them. Following the mothers' meeting is a children's class. I had the pleasure of being present at both of the meetings. How these harassed women's eyes hang on their teacher's lips, and how attentive and well disciplined the children seem! "We do love her," said one; "We would not know what to do without her," said another; and "Hulloh, Mrs. Drulow," cried the children, waving their hands as we drove past their cottages. A seven years' experience like that of Mrs. Drury Lowe might well refute any assertion as to the negro being a hopeless case.

Her mission work is more emphatic still at her own home. The servants under her care are taught to read and write, and in order to reward their painstaking a geography lesson is given them now and then. At family prayer the Colonel takes the trouble to break up the assigned portions of Scripture into fragments that can be taken and assimilated, if need be, by babes. By these means they grow in knowledge and grace. In compliance with their own request, Mrs. Drury Lowe arranged a Sunday class for them, after dismissing the little ones, whom she gathers around her every Sunday afternoon. Their residence is three miles out of Orlando, and about one mile from Winter Park—a charming spot in a region of lakes, especially at this time of the year, when with blossoms, and the air is laden with their fragrance. Our first call happened on the Colonel's sixteenth spiritual birthday. This led to comparing our respective experiences and instances connected in each case with that happy, happy day. The conversation turned, as one would expect, to Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, who, as well as the lady who is now the Colonel's wife, were factors in fulfilling the sainted mother's prayers for his conversion.

Then we talked of the country, of the war, and our beloved Queen; and at last we walked out into the grounds. In spite of palmettos, palms, and magnolias, I could not shake off the impression that we were in an English park. This was due to the art of the proprietor, who had contrived to transform the primary wilderness into a scene of cultivated loveliness. The grounds slope down to a lake, which is seen from the verandah, and in which, on bright evenings, the setting sun is reflected. We were often charmed with the sunsets on our journeys, and often reminded of Wordsworth's beautiful lines:—

Fair as a star when only one
Is shining in the sky.

An old Negro is busy clearing the grounds from the fallen leaves, and Mrs. Drury Lowe introduces me to him, saying, "I know you like to know the Lord's children. This lady is one of them."

"Yes, I do, I do, Missys," said "Billy," grasping my hand. And then with an illuminated face he related his past experience, how the Colonel used to talk to him of God and the Bible, and how he refused to believe, until he was quite miserable, and wanted to die and not to speak to anybody again. But instead of dying, he began to live again a life so new—oh, it was grand—and now he cannot help talking of Jesus, no matter to whom and where. He must talk of Him, because he knows what He has done for him. This somewhat incoherent testimony was touching to hear. He cannot read, and for some time his brain seemed incapable of taking in the teaching of master and mistress. In his intense desire to know he used to pray: "O God, sense into me wha, the Missys teaches." And the Lord answered his prayer.

AMERICAN SYMPATHY.

OUR American cousins have practically shown their sympathy in our hour of trial in sending to South Africa the well-equipped hospital ship Maine. Actions like these help to bring out the unity of the Anglo-Saxon race, and to wipe away any misunderstanding or strained relationships which might have existed in the past.

It was most touching to see the tender care the doctors and their orderlies showed to our poor wounded soldier lads on board the Maine. We had received a very cordial response to our request to visit the wounded and distribute the specially-bound our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Menzies, have sent us for this purpose. The convalescents on deck crowded round us, eagerly requesting us to give them one; and as we left them we found not a few settling down again in their comfortable deck chairs, looking at the marked texts.

The wards below were spotlessly clean, and the cots with their spring mattresses and fittings helped to bring out the inventive genius of our American friends. Money was not spared to make the wounded and sick comfortable. We passed from cot to cot distributing God's Word, and giving a message as we moved about amongst them. One bright-faced man in the Middlesex Regiment drew our attention to the fact that John iii. 16 was well marked. "What do you know about it?" we asked. "I am saved and have everlasting life," was the response. A short season of fellowship and we passed on to his neighbour, who had turned to the same text, but as one who was seeking. Words of assurance were spoken, and we left him with his Testament still open at that wonderful chapter.

Passing on from ward to ward, we found on all sides the eagerness of the men for a marked Testament, and although 120 were given away we still needed fifty more, so that every wounded man should get one. One or two Christians were met with, and their experiences seemed to have brought them out all the brighter.

The U.S.S. Co.'s tug, Natal, came alongside on her way to the hospital ship Nubia, to leave eighteen wounded men to fill up the vacant cots. Stretchers were brought out, and it was touching to see the true sympathy of the Americans as they so tenderly up the ladder, across the deck, and down into the wards, or directed those who could walk to some chair, while the worst cases were being attended to.

Fresh from the recent war in Cuba, those on board the Maine arrived in our midst with newly acquired and valuable experience. The Lismore Castle and Spartan have both returned from Cape Town after leaving their freights of wounded and sick, and already we hear nearly 100 have arrived on the former and more to follow. More visits will be paid, and the Testaments distributed before they steam away on another visit to Cape Town. We are counting upon the prayers of friends in England.

Soldiers at the Front.

NEWS FROM ELANDSLAAGTE.

IN the camp at Elandslaagte we are having blessing. Many of the soldiers are giving themselves to Jesus. There are two of us in the Fourth Brigade conducting Gospel work.

On Sunday last (March 18), as there is no Presbyterian minister, I did service for the Presbyterians; also any other duty such as burying the dead. Every night of the week—unless when fighting or marching prohibits—we have a Gospel meeting among the tents where the men are. There are four regiments in the brigade, so we occupy the space which is generally between the different corps, and which just allows us accommodation to stand. The Christian men off duty gather round us, then we strike up a hymn, and as soon as the soldiers hear they come and form a circle round us; and, as the nights are nice and warm, they will lie on the ground singing Sankey hymns as long as the daylight permits. Moreover, these listen while we tell them of the wonderful salvation God has provided for us in the Lord Jesus Christ. We have simply put the way before the men. The Spirit has shown it them; and at the end of the meeting many have come and told us that they have decided for Jesus. Night and day before their comrades they are witnessing a good confession. We are having a good deal of sickness breaking out now amongst us, especially dysentery and fever, and our hospital is getting large.

HOSPITAL VISITATION.

Some evangelists who are labouring in connection with the work which is represented at home by Mr. T. McLaren, of Glasgow, give particulars of visitation work in the hospital at Woodstock: "Some of the soldiers particularly ask for Testaments, and we trust the reading the same may lead them to the Lord. The tales they tell from the front are very pitiful. Enteric fever and rheumatism have claimed many—the men having had to stand, walk, and even sleep in wet clothes and in pools of water. The Romanists are very attentive to the men; nuns meet the transports, and give to any who will accept them, small crucifixes, with two or three charms to wear near the heart, as a preservative against danger while in the war. We ask for prayer that many may be saved."

Nature.

"The earth was full of his praise."

The vault of blue and fleecy cloud,
With lofty hill-tops girt around,
Proclaim the hand of God aloud,
Although the worldlings catch no sound.

The bird, upborne on pinion strong,
And circling in the ambient air,
Outpours its praise in happy song,
And warbles tender notes of prayer.

The flower-bed, in its splendid bloom
Of varied tints and hues of green,
Exults with colour and perfume,
Though act of homage be not seen.

The murmur of the sad sea wave,
And maddened ocean's mighty roar,
As cradle soft, or stormy grave,
The waters, in all moods, adore.

When Nature all around him breathes
A tuneful, or unuttered prayer,
And for her God a garland wreathes
Of praise, on land, in sea, and air;

Shall man alone, creation's crown,
The great Creator-God ignore?
Ah, no, but fall submissive down,
And from his very heart adore.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

THE famine continues to increase in intensity, and, although the Government and the various missionary agencies are doing much, it is clear that enlarged financial support must be forthcoming in order to cope with the terrible need.

We have received a number of letters from workers to whom remittances have been sent. Rev. J. Hawthornthwaite, of St. John's College, Agra, writes: "One of our missionaries is feeding hundreds of extreme cases daily. He is one of three or four Englishmen in a large district inhabited by thousands of Bheels. As there is no Government organization possible, there being no Government officials, the people upon such famine relief as the missionaries are able to give. They are remote from railway facilities, and the price of grain has long been prohibitive.

The following is from Rev. Albert Norton, of the Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, Poona: "We have now fifty-two orphan and destitute boys, nearly all of them from high-caste Hindu families. The boys are bright, cheerful, and affectionate. They also send their grateful thanks to all the kind friends who have helped to rescue them. We are now giving relief to more than 200 daily." Mr. Norton again refers to the need for blankets, of which articles he is buying and distributing many, and for sarees. The saree is the Hindu woman's chief article of clothing; she wraps it around her as a skirt, then about the waist, and finally over the head. Many women are in rags, and both blankets and sarees are required in large numbers.

In the course of a letter dealing with the outlook, Rev. C. B. Ward, of Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions, writes:—"In spite of all, there is famine-suffering that no relief measures can reach, which missionaries must do. More Christians are affected in this than in any previous famine. The chief call for help from or through the missionaries will come later on, when the unclaimed and orphan children must be provided for, poor cultivators supplied with seed-grain, tools, cattle, and the famished sick and aged fed, after Government relief ends, with the coming of rain. Let Christians in favoured lands who have missionary friends in India help to hold up their hands by timely and generous help. It will be needed, sorely needed, as soon as it can reach India. Terrible months are ahead of us.

THOUSANDS OF WIDOWS,

orphans, lepers, blind, crippled, sick, and infirm will come from these stricken millions. It is for distinctively Christian sympathy to embrace these in their valley of weeping. More than ever before do missionaries feel that in these dark hours in history it is Christ-like to show in practical fashion their love for the suffering."

Dr. Colin Valentine, of the Agra Medical Missionary Training Institution, writes:—The numbers attending our Beggars' Church have become so great that we do not attempt to count them—upwards of 5,000 every Sabbath morning. By and by we will require to have them twice or thrice a week. My attention has of late been directed to the rescuing of famine children and Hindu widows. We have no arrangement for keeping them ourselves, but I do my best to assist those who do so. I have a list of orphanages prepared to receive these helpless ones, and have a concession along several lines to have the children sent forward to refuges for half-fare. In some cases I held myself responsible for the payment of the other half." Dr. Valentine goes on to illustrate the value of wells, by referring to the case of "a friend who has for the last eighteen or twenty years systematically dug wells, with the result that in every part of his extensive estates there is not a corner left uncultivated. Both proprietor and cultivators are increasing in wealth, while others in the same position are starving."

THE PREVENTION OF FAMINE.

Speaking in the Legislative Council at Calcutta on March 28, Lord Curzon dwelt at some length on the question of irrigation in connection with the prevention of famine. In the course of his remarks the Viceroy said: "I am so much in agreement with the general proposition, which has received a good deal of support from many quarters in the course of the present debate, that irrigation should be encouraged, both because of the extension thereby given to the growth of food supplies, and because, in the case of what are known as productive works, of the extraordinarily remunerative character of the capital outlay, that I have inaugurated a definite extension of our irrigation programme. In my predecessor's time the annual irrigation grant amounted to 75 lakhs. In the year just expired we have spent 90 lakhs; while during the forthcoming year, in spite of the general curtailment of our programme owing to the famine, the irrigation grant is fixed at 100 lakhs."

THE DESPATCH OF FOOD.

Referring to the announcements made in recent issues of the despatch to the famine districts of large consignments of various foods, meat extracts, &c., we are glad to state that the first shipment goes to-day (Thursday) by P and O steamer, that company having generously undertaken to deliver the goods freight free. The arrangements for shipping have been carried out by Messrs. Wm. Watson and Co., of 7, Waterloo Place, S.W., and we hope next week to give a statement of the goods sent, as well as to report in reference to the progress of a second consignment going out on an early date.

PROPOSALS OF CORRESPONDENTS.

A lady correspondent, writing over the signature "M.," with respect to the appeal of Mr. G. S. Eddy in our issue of the 12th inst., says: "The piteous appeal has caused the words, 'What owest thou to my Lord?' to come with force into my mind. Two pounds is much to many of us—it is much to me; but will nine others join me by sending £2 each to raise the £20 necessary for building a small orphanage, as mentioned by Mr. Eddy?"

An esteemed correspondent at home suggests the "appointment of a 'Famine Sunday' by the churches generally, throughout England, in order to emphasize the need of contributions, and secure a larger number of them. It is clear that England, largely absorbed in the present war, has not yet realized the magnitude of a famine which, by the most recent accounts, is affecting more than one-fourth of the whole population of India, and which has reduced immense tracts of country to a desert, without vegetation of any kind; wherein all the great reservoirs are dry, and the channels of all but the greatest rivers are waterless."

Stay now Thine Hand.

Stay now thine hand! O Father, sheathe the sword,
As by the threshing floor Thou didst of old!
It is enough; stay now, stay now thine hand;
Speak Thou the word, and bid the slaughter cease!
We own our nation's sins against Thee, Lord,
And merit nothing but thy just rebuke,—
Yet stay thy righteous anger, and forgive!
Look on the widows' hearts, the mothers' tears,
The homes made desolate through mortal strife,
And let thy judgments bring us to our knees!
Break down the need—remove the curse of war—
Give nations wisdom rightly to decide
Conflicting questions, not by deadly strife,
But by calm reason and by earnest prayer,
Leaving results to Thee, our God and King!

On the Zambesi.

In the latest issue of News from Barotsiland Rev. F. Coillard relates the experiences of his recent journey from Sesheke to Lealuyi, giving many interesting details of the development of the mission stations en route.

"Lemonja, the Christian chief who had been appointed by the King to travel with me on the river, behaved admirably, watching and guessing what he could do for my personal comfort. I had not the slightest difficulty with the men, although to feed so many mouths (180 every day) was a puzzle which I could not always solve either to my satisfaction or to theirs. They had been as much as two days without food, but they knew I could not get it at any price; and when we killed some big game they freely took their revenge, and ate to their hearts' content all the night through, and on they paddled cheerfully."

At Lenanga, M. and Madame Boiteux have commenced a new station, which has been wonderfully prospered. Mr. Coillard says: "It took us all by surprise, and especially myself. I knew the place well. Often I had camped there, tried to gather the people, to preach and sing, when it seemed that my voice was LOST IN THE WILDERNESS.

Now I found, under the shadow of a few rough shelters, hastily put up, a beautiful school, that welcomed us when we landed with the cheerful song, 'Jesus shall reign,' which sounded like a prophecy for this dark part of the country, and moved me almost to tears. The people flocked from all sides to come and greet us, and on the Lord's Day we had a gathering of some 300, mostly men. This promises to become an important centre of work in the mission. At Nalolo, there was a great display of bunting and flags of all the nations represented in our mission, and the banks of the river were lined. As we neared, a hymn burst from the crowd; it was still the same, 'Jesus shall reign,' and in a moment we were in the arms of our brethren. "Arriving at Lealuyi, the party were received with a great demonstration. The King who had been awaiting their arrival at the station, became impatient and marched out with the men of the village to meet them. The place was swarming with people, and thundering with salutation. "It was a trying day, so was the next, and more so the Sunday, when I preached to overflowing congregations of more than 800 packed in the church."

Unfortunately, at Lealuyi a sad accident befel Mr. Coillard. It appears that Mrs. Mann was seizing her and leaping towards her baby. Without reflecting, M. Lienard went to the rescue, the dog immediately rushed upon him, and bit his thigh. Mrs. Mann escaped without any injury, but the child had two horrible wounds. Mr. Coillard brought a bottle of ammonia which had been exposed to the rays of the sun. Having removed the stopper, the whole of the contents spurted into his face. Uttering a shriek of agony, our friend staggered into his room. For some time he could only utter moans of pain. His sight decreased rapidly and disappeared. For some time the patient was without his sight, but according to the latest details he has now happily recovered the use of both eyes, and it is believed that no permanent injury will remain. The other victims are reported to be progressing favourably.

The news from other stations is most reassuring, although the semi-nomadic habits of the Barotsi render mission work extremely difficult.

Sunday Rest in Venice.

TRAVELLERS in Venice are struck with the progress the city has made in the observance of Sunday. Once, and that but a few years ago, every shop was open the whole day; now almost every shop, at any-rate in the chief thoroughfares, is closed at mid-day, if it takes down its shutters at all. The change has not been brought about but at the expense of time and labour.

The movement is entirely a lay one. It was begun a few years ago, in a desire to work six days, as well as to rest the seventh. Indeed, these two things hang together. The one is the complement of the other. As Mr. Ruskin has said, "If we would keep the seventh day in imitation of God's rest, we must keep the other six days in imitation of God's work."

The people had thus a double work to do. They had to cast overboard the observance of saints' days, which were too numerous to allow of steady work being done, and they had to secure Sunday cessation from toil. In both these sides of work they have succeeded. The city was canvassed, and the opinions of the shopkeepers ascertained, and after some persuasion and time, almost all agreed to close on Sunday, and on festival days recognised by the State. It so happens that some national festivals are also Church festivals, but this decision really did away with the observance of all festivals on the authority of the Church, as those retained were henceforth observed not because of the authority of the Church, but of the State. Then Sunday was observed to a large extent in spite of the influence of the Church.

To see that the shopkeepers who undertook to close on Sundays really kept to their promise, a committee of young men patrolled the city every Sunday, and if they found any shops open that ought to have been closed they there and then put up its shutters. Some weeks ago, at whose instigation I cannot say, although I am afraid the clericals had a hand in it, the committee of young men was stopped in the streets and broken up. Technically, the law permitted this, as processions are not allowed unless by special permit.

This incident caused the Sunday Closing Committee to adopt new tactics. It pasted up on the shutters of all the shops whose owners had undertaken to close them bills in four languages—English, French, German, and Italian—asking the public to help them in their endeavours to secure Sunday closing by practically boycotting those shops that were open. The words of the bill ran thus: "The Sunday Rest Association begs you to give your valid support by abstaining from making purchases in any shop open on Sunday after mid-day." Since these appeared, slips have also been put up all over the city with the two words only, "Sunday Rest, Sunday Rest."

The Sunday Rest Association (in which Jews take a prominent part) is forming itself into a permanent organization, as I see it is arranging to have banners with appropriate mottoes, and so to carry on the agitation till its object is perfectly secured. I believe the Government is coming to its assistance by closing its public works, and by in part closing its public offices. The postmen, too, who go their rounds on Sunday, as on any other day, are loud in their demands for a day's rest. As things are, they are often hardest worked on a Sunday, as for example, at this time of the year, when Easter greetings are largely exchanged. A. R.

Opening in South China.

IN and around the large district of Hui-an, north of Amoy, there are about a million people without a doctor. The points of interest in all these Chinese are very marked. They are well inclined to us. Some have given money to provide rooms for a doctor's residence. The mandarin promised sympathy and help. More than this, we already have the ground for a hospital. The Hui-anites are a fine people, terribly earnest in their heathen life, and equally resolute as Christians. Many of our pastors and preachers come from this region.

The care of the health of a hundred pupils in schools, and all the women and children of between twenty and thirty Christian communities, weighs heavily on the one lady worker who lives amongst them. The missionary, in his circuit, is oppressed by the many sufferings of the people, specially by the ravages of the plague.

The L.M.S. desire to meet the need, but are unable. Seeing the urgency of the case, and its various merits, it has been suggested that a few special friends should take up the matter as their concern. It will be a component part of L.M.S. work. The general income will not be interfered with. The present will be a small auxiliary effort.

The sum needed to meet a doctor's salary, Chinese helpers, medicines, and rent of hospital, will be £300 per annum. Two friends have started a £25 yearly subscription, and it is hoped that others will follow. J. Sadler.

Social Reforms in Canada.

THREE great moral questions are prominently to the front in Canada. The first of these is temperance, and the results are satisfactory to its promoters. In Manitoba, Premier Macdonald has promised to introduce a prohibitory measure at the next session of the Legislature. Premier Moreland, of Quebec, has also been waited upon by a deputation, who urged the separation of the liquor from the grocery business, local option on the question of licence, and the reduction of licences in towns with less than 4,000 of a population. The special changes sought in Ontario are the inspection of so-called temperance houses, and the yearly tenure of the licence system. The Dominion Alliance is also making an active campaign to secure 100,000 pledged prohibition voters at the next general elections.

Sunday observance is also actively prosecuted. The most recent act of the Ontario Lord's Day Alliance has been to place a secretary in the field who shall devote himself wholly to this work. The need of such an official has been gradually declaring itself. Though Canada is one of the best Sunday-observing countries in the world, yet there are constant encroachments on the Day of Rest. Sunday street cars are much more common than they were a few years ago, while other forms of Sunday toil and pleasure have increased. There is great reason for satisfaction that the day is so generally observed as it is.

Prison Reform is the third great question which is pressing for a solution. At present gaols and prisons are very faulty, inasmuch as first offenders are brought in touch with old and hardened criminals. It is proposed to remedy this evil. Indeterminate sentences and the parole system are being constantly urged. A reformatory for inebriates instead of the county gaol, and the reorganization of the women's and boys' reformatories, and the girls' refuge, are other improvements that are sought. J. P. G.

Genoa.—The Ospizio Cristiano, or Christian Pension for Strangers, is much frequented by English visitors. The institution was founded by Pastor Wettstein, with the object of providing comfortable residence for missionaries and ladies who are travelling, and to afford protection against the extortionate changes which are often imposed in Italy. The pension is conducted on the principles of a Christian home, and is situated in the Palazza of the Prince of Centurione, No. 12, via Caffaro, Genoa.

A South African Veteran.

The Late Rev. ROGER PRICE (Kuruman).

THE London Missionary Society received, with extreme regret, the news of the death of its veteran missionary stationed at Kuruman, Rev. Roger Price. The death took place on January 21. In November last Mr. Price had a severe illness, which left him in a state of great prostration. He was arranging to go down to the Cape for change and medical advice when the Boers captured Kuruman. So far as is known, they did not molest the Mission station or the missionary, but the proposed visit to the Cape was thus rendered impossible, and Mr. Price succumbed not long afterwards.

The death of Mr. Price severs another link in the chain which binds us to the days of Livingstone and Moffat, for the deceased missionary was a son-in-law of the latter and brother-in-law of the former. Born in the county of Brecon in 1834, Mr. Price was within a few days of his sixty-sixth birthday at the time of his death. A curious story is told of his early childhood. It seems that Roger and a brother of his were seriously ill at the same time. The brother died, and the doctor who was attending them gave no hope of Roger's recovery and advised the parents to prepare two graves, which was actually done. Happily God spared the life of the second boy, having great work for him to do in South Africa.

Showing signs of strong Christian character and ability, Mr. Price entered Western College, Plymouth, and in due course offered himself to the London Missionary Society. He was accepted, and was forthwith appointed to the Makololo Mission. This was in 1858, the same year which saw the appointment of another missionary destined to play a prominent part in the history of South Africa—the late John Mackenzie, the "statesman-missionary of South Africa," whose death preceded that of his colleague by less than ten months.

The new mission party was met at Capetown by Robert Moffat, who brought them in safety to Kuruman by the last day of the year (1858). After a few months' rest to make the necessary preparations for their further journey, Mr. and Mrs. Price, with Mr. and Mrs. Helmore and their four young children, set out for their destined station a thousand miles into the interior. After suffering many hardships during the eight months' journey, they reached their destination, and settled down at Linyanti, the town of an important chief named Sekeletu. Then began a tragedy almost unparalleled in the history of missions. The whole party was prostrated with fever (or, as was afterwards thought, with poison); first, two of Mr. Helmore's children died, soon to be followed by their mother and Mrs. Price's little baby. Then Mr. Helmore himself received the summons, and of the original mission party of nine only four were left. The survivors were cruelly treated by the natives, who robbed them of all they possessed, including most of their means of transport. Finally, they managed to escape, but before they had been a fortnight on the way Mr. Price had the unspeakable sorrow of leaving his own wife in a lonely grave. It was in June, 1860, that they left Linyanti; not till February, 1861, did Mr. Price and the two surviving children of Mr. Helmore reach Kuruman again, less than two years since they had left, with hearts full of hope and courage.

This was a sad beginning to the young missionary's career, but his enthusiasm was not quenched. After taking the two children down to Cape Town and seeing them safely off for England, he returned to Kuruman. There, a year and a half later, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert and Mary Moffat, who for nearly forty years has shared her husband's joys and sorrows and is now left to mourn his loss.

From 1862 to 1866, Mr. and Mrs. Price laboured at Shoshong, the capital of a chief whose son, Khama, has borne so honourable a part in the history of South African missions. In 1867 their work was transferred to Logageng (now Molepolole), where a mission had been begun twenty years earlier by David Livingstone. After eight years of faithful work here, Mr. and Mrs. Price took a well-earned furlough to England, which Mr. Price had not seen for seventeen years. When the directors of the London Missionary Society projected their mission to Lake Tanganyika, they commissioned Mr. Price to make full inquiries as to the best route and other arrangements. He not only did this, but accompanied the new mission party a long way on their journey.

In 1879 he settled down to his old work at Molepolole, where he remained till, in 1884, he was appointed to succeed Rev. John Mackenzie as tutor at the Moffat Institute for training native evangelists, situated at the old historic station of Kuruman. There he remained, save for two furloughs to England, until the end, dying like a brave soldier at his post, finishing his course at the same place where he had entered on his work forty-one years previously.

Mr. Price was a true missionary, energetic and enterprising, full of love for Christ and for the souls for whom He died. Kuruman had for some years been declining in importance, being off the line of the new railway. But before the war broke out there was talk of connecting the town with the railway, and Mr. Price was looking forward to a revival of its old importance. He was a clever linguist, and his last great work was the completion, in 1896, of a new translation of the Old Testament into the Sechwana language from the revised English version. Whether Kuruman regains its old importance or not, it will always hold a high place in the history of missions, bound up so closely as it is with the work of Livingstone and Moffat; nor will the quieter but equally honourable work of Roger Price be soon forgotten.

The National Refuges.—A booklet, entitled "For Queen and Country," has been issued gratis by the committee of the National Refuges and Training ships Arethusa and Chichester, 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C. It states that over 12,000 poor boys of good character have benefited by the Society, which has a great number of "old boys" in the army, some of them at the front in South Africa. Arethusa "old boys" are to be found in nearly all the ships in the British Navy. The booklet is bright and well illustrated.

Spreading out in Germany.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

CHRISTIANS in England will rejoice to hear of blessing enjoyed by Christians in Saxony, and other parts of Germany, in connection with efforts for the revival of spiritual life and the spread of the Gospel among the unsaved. The course of recent events in Saxony has led to Pastor Mascher resigning the pastorate of the Baptist Church in Dresden, to take up the work of missioner on evangelical lines in any part of Saxony, as well as in other districts where doors are open for special effort.

Friends interested in the movement have undertaken the support of our brother for two years in order that he may be free for such labour in the Lord's service. It would be a great blessing if several other brethren could be united with him in work on similar lines, but at present the way has not been made clear for this. Since January Pastor Mascher, assisted by various local and other workers, has held meetings in Gorlitz, Chemnitz, Halle, Schmollen, Planitz, Leipzig, Cainsdorf, Selkra, and other places. The Lord has abundantly confirmed these services with his blessing, many testimonies having been given to the Word of his grace, both

AMONG SAVED AND UNSAVED.

Invitations come from all sides to go and conduct series of meetings, and engagements are made up to July, and some also for the autumn and winter months. The aim is to work wherever possible on lines in which all Evangelical Christians can rejoice, seeking only to bring together the children of God and to win souls for Christ. If means were forthcoming, other workers could be found, and many towns and villages be reached; the desire for Gospel truth being wakened in many places. The travelling and other expenses involved must, however, be mainly borne by outside help, the people among whom the bulk of the work is carried on being poor, and the difficulties in some cases being great.

Drawing-room meetings conducted by Pastor Mascher and others have for some time been held regularly in the houses of Christian workers in Dresden, and have been the means of much happy and profitable fellowship in the study of God's Word. The Evangelical Alliance is also prosecuting its valuable work with manifest results, beneficial alike to the spread of unity among the people of God and while many pastors and workers are being filled with fresh energy and holy impulse.

Conferences such as those held at Blankenburg, Blankenese, and elsewhere, are bringing forth much fruit, and not a few are feeling an incoming tide of grace full of promise for further and blessed results. The Conference held last week at Blankenese, in the vicinity of Hamburg, was attended by Dr. Gritton and Pastor Fuller Gooch, as English speakers, a number of German pastors being also present, and was the scene of very hallowed fellowship; a spirit of intense earnestness as well as of prayer and praise pervaded the well-attended gatherings.

English Christians can do much by brotherly aid to encourage their brethren on the Continent, and to knit together in one the children of God scattered abroad. Help for Gospel work in Saxony and elsewhere will still be gladly received at the office of The Christian, or by either of the brethren whose names are mentioned above. Earnest and continued prayer is asked of all who bear on their hearts the work of God throughout the world, that showers of blessing may fall upon all in Germany who are labouring for Christ.

RIGHT REV.

F. J. Chavasse, D.D.,

BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL.

FROM the time it became evident that the veteran Bishop Ryle would soon be compelled, by increasing weakness and ill-health, to resign the bishopric of Liverpool, very many, both inside and outside of the Church of England, began to take a keen and prayerful interest in the choice of a fit successor. It was almost instinctively felt that no High Churchman could possibly be acceptable to so Protestant a city as Liverpool; while the special atmosphere of public opinion created by the "Church crisis" tended to confirm the conviction that an Evangelical would be offered the bishopric. Rumour was, of course, busy with several names, from the time of the announcement of Bishop Ryle's resignation, but, to the surprise of most people, none of these names was selected, and the bishopric was offered to, and accepted by, Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford. The appointment has been hailed with delight by everybody who knows Dr. Chavasse, and it is pretty certain that the hopes centred in him will, by God's goodness, be fully realised.

Dr. Chavasse is the son of a Birmingham physician, and was born in 1846. He was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and graduated in 1869 with a First Class in the Honours School of Law and Modern History. He was ordained by Bishop Fraser, of Manchester, in 1870, and commenced life as curate of St. Paul's, Preston. There he made his mark rapidly, so that in three years' time he was acceptable to the vicarage of St. Paul's, Upper Holloway, London. Again success stamped him as a man of power and promise, and in 1878 he followed the revered Canon Linton as rector of the important central parish of St. Peter-le-Bailey, Oxford.

Since then Oxford has been his home, and there the main work of his life has, thus far, been accomplished. The circumstances of his parish happily allowed him time and opportunity for direct work among undergraduates; indeed, it was mainly for this that the appointment was made. The history of Evangelical Churchmanship at Oxford, if ever it comes to be written, will prove of intense interest, and is, to those who know it, a record of marvellous personal power blessed by the grace of God. The names of Edward Hathaway, A. M. W. Christopher, and Henry Linton are among the pioneers, and the advent of F. J. Chavasse worthily maintained and increased the influence of the tradition. It was a fresh voice and a new power in Oxford, distinctly Evangelical, definitely Scriptural, but withal expressed in newer terms and modes. His Sunday evening services were soon crowded with townsmen and gownsmen, while a Sunday evening Greek Testament class, commenced by Bishop French, was continued by Dr. Chavasse with increasing acceptance and blessing.

In all this he was a model pastor, diligent in visiting, overflowing with sympathy, the friend and guide of an attached people. Thus he laboured for eleven fruitful and happy years, becoming meanwhile an increasing power to successive generations of undergraduates and a real influence in the whole of Oxford life.

During the early years of his incumbency, the Evangelical movement was started which led to the foundation of Wycliffe Hall at Oxford, and Ridley Hall at Cambridge. The need of an Evangelical Theological College was only too evident, and the first principal was Canon Girdlestone, who retained his leadership until 1889. On his resignation one man was designated by popular choice, and then by the unanimous decision of the trustees, as successor, and that was Dr. Chavasse; and it was with great joy and satisfaction that Evangelicals heard that he had accepted the principalship. For eleven years he has occupied the position with conspicuous success and has proved his capacity as a leader, teacher, guide, and friend of men. The Hall rapidly filled, and is now more than full, even after enlargement, so that additional accommodation has had to be provided.

Dr. Chavasse is a man of singularly charming character, quiet, unobtrusive, and humble to a fault. He has not been seen much in public, nor has his name often appeared on the lists of annual meetings; but if his influence has not been extensive it has assuredly been intensive, for he has made Wycliffe Hall a great power in Oxford and in the Church of England. "The little man," as his old students affectionately (but privately!) call him, has made his Master's mark (not his own) deep on many a life, and the ministry of the Church of England is rich to-day in lives that owe almost everything to him.

From Photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W.

Dr. Chavasse has had several offers of preferment. He declined the rectory of Stepney while still at St. Peter-le-Bailey, and, later on, refused a canonry at Exeter rather than leave his work at Oxford. He was also one of three named for the Primacy of Australia, but the offer did not actually reach him. That he has now accepted the bishopric of Liverpool is only due to the strong pressure of some of his closest and most valued friends, who felt that the call was to a greater work even than that at Wycliffe Hall, and could not be refused.

Dr. Chavasse is well-known and thoroughly trusted in the councils of Evangelical Churchmen and Evangelical Societies. He has preached the annual sermon of the Church Pastoral Aid Society, and would have preached the annual sermon of the C.M.S. this year but for the appointment to Liverpool, which compelled his withdrawal. He will doubtless preach the sermon as Bishop before very long.

Some of the truest men have gone out from Wycliffe Hall to the foreign field, such as Rev. W. A. C. Fremantle, Rev. J. S. Callis, and Rev. W. S. Cox, all of whom are now at rest after service in India and Africa. The vicars and curates labouring at home who rejoice to call themselves "Wycliffe men" are far too numerous to mention, but many of these are occupying prominent positions.

Dr. Chavasse is an undoubted Evangelical, but of a different type from his revered predecessor in the bishopric. He has as deep convictions as any Evangelical, but wider sympathies than most, and he has not taken any part in any of the controversial methods of working which characterise, and rightly characterise, some Evangelical work. "Many men, many methods," and Dr. Chavasse has had his own work to do, and has done it in his own way. As a well-known clergyman connected with the Church Association once said in conversation, "I am thankful Chavasse has never joined the Church Association; it would have halved his influence in Oxford"—a sentiment that does infinite credit to the wise and large-hearted Protestantism of the speaker. Undergraduates, many of whom have but unfledged convictions, tend to abjure religious controversy and need positive guidance, and this they have assuredly had in Dr. Chavasse. It must not, however, for an instant be thought that he has hidden his Protestantism under a bushel, for on many occasions his Sunday evening sermons have rung out unmistakably, and only a year or so ago he preached a course of sermons, on current Church questions, full of clear, wise, strong guidance, which have since been published.

He is one of the few Evangelica members of the Christian Social Union, which, however, does not meanl "Socialism," as that vague term is often used, but the study of all social questions from a Christian standpoint. It is the misfortune, and perhaps the fault, of Evangelicals that more of their number are not members of the C.S.U. The modern outlook of the Bishop may also be gauged from the fact that he is a member of the Church Reform League, which laudably aims at greater self-government for the Church.

Dr. Chavasse is not a man of profound scholarship, or a theologian of the first rank; but he has the more practical and personal gifts that will make him an ideal bishop. He will be a true "father in God" to his clergy, and may be depended upon not to allow the incessant calls and inevitable routine of a bishop's life to interfere with that spiritual influence that he has wielded wherever he has hitherto been.

The spirit in which the new Bishop looks forward to his work may best be seen from his letter to Archdeacon Madden at the time of his appointment. The man himself is in every line of it:—

> It is with a heavy heart, and with strong misgiving, that I have decided to go to Liverpool; but after my Bishop and eight of my wisest friends assured me, independently, that, whatever ties Oxford had for me, it was my duty to go, I had no alternative. I can only cast myself upon God, whose bidding means enabling, and face the future, which I know must be full of peculiar anxieties and difficulties, in dependence upon Him. It is an unspeakable comfort to know that you and so many others are so ready to welcome one who is so unworthy of the post, and that you are remembering me before God in prayer. God help me never to disappoint you. God grant that his Church may never take hurt or hindrance through my ministry. One thing I desire—to be your fellow in the Lord Jesus.

It is already known with what joy and satisfaction Bishop Ryle has hailed the appointment of his successor; and, as we take leave of the veteran warrior who will go down to posterity as the first Bishop of Liverpool, we thank God that the (true and only) "apostolic succession" will be so worthily maintained in the second occupant of the See. Entering on his great work at the age of fifty-four, in the vigour of manhood and the maturity of ministerial experience, the Church may have, if the Lord tarry, twenty years of service from the new Bishop, than whom there could be no one more eminently fitted to help to guide the Church of England in the dark, difficult, and dangerous days that seem to be before her.

"Questions for the Times."

THIS was the general topic of a Convention held in Bethesda Free Chapel, Sunderland, on April 16-19. The meetings were attended by Christians of all denominations, and great interest was evinced in the questions, as was shown by the crowds who came together.

Two of the meetings stand out with special prominence, because of the manifest presence of the Lord, and these were those of Tuesday and Thursday evenings. On the first, Mr. Macgregor spoke of "The Enduement of the Holy Spirit for Service;" and on the latter, Mr. Urquhart urged "The Accuracy and Inerrancy of the Scriptures." Needless to say, these are topics in dealing with which the respective speakers were well at home.

Rev. J. S. Rae, in answering the question, "Why did Christ die?" gave a fourfold answer. (1) Christ died to bring us to God (1 Pet. iii. 18). (2) To exhibit the love of God (Rom. v. 8). (3) To redeem us from all iniquity (Titus ii. 14). (4) To bring forth much fruit (John xii. 24).

Rev. J. Wilkinson dwelt upon two points in answering the question, "What is the mission of the Church?" namely, (1) To be. (2) To do.

THERE ARE FOUR THINGS

among others, which believers are to be—a light to reveal the character of Christ, salt to prevent corruption, epistles to make known, and loving to the brethren. There are many who rejoice in John iii. 16, who do not carry out 1 John iii. 16. (2) To do. The mission of the Church is to spread the Gospel. To tell out all the Gospel, to all people.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor gave a five-fold definition of holiness, in replying to the question, "What is holiness?" (1) Separation from sin. (2) Dedication to God. (3) Appropriation by God. (4) Transformation to Christ. (5) Manifestation of Christ.

In the evening Lieutenant-Colonel Roberts had for his subject "Are there Signs which indicate and called attention to the chronological, geographical, historical, and social signs which are manifest to every student of the prophetic Word.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor followed with a powerful address upon "What are the Conditions of Spiritual Power?" He first reminded us of the source of the power, Christ Himself; and then the nature of the power, the Person of the Holy Spirit; and, lastly, the conditions to be observed in order to experience the power—namely (1) Tarry, (2) Ask, (3) Receive.

The second day of the Conference was opened by the Rev. J. Urquhart, who answered the question, "Are the Scriptures the Word of God?"

Dr. McKilliam followed with an address on "What is the Hope of the Believer's Calling?" and pointed out that the essence of the hope is that Christ will have us in his glory, and we shall have Him. Many other questions were dwelt upon and answered.

Thoughts on Gladness.

By Pastor F. E. Marsh, Sunderland.

THERE are many ministers to the believer's gladness in Christ. Let us consider—in the light of the Greek word chairo ("to rejoice")—seven feeders to the river of the joy which flows through the nature of God's children.

1. Reconciliation. "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad" (Luke xv. 32), is the rebuke of the Father to the elder son, who grumbles at the rejoicing occasioned by the prodigal's return. We are glad in the Father's gladness in being welcomed to his heart, hearth, and home, for they speak of his love, and care, and protection, and the joy He has in blessing us.

2. Registration. "Rejoice, because your names are written in heaven" (Luke x. 20). Love inscribed our names in the Lamb's book of life. This registration, not only tells of the security of the believer in Christ, but it also proclaims the individual interest He takes in each believer, as Billy Bray used to say, "The Lord knows my name, and where I live."

3. Redemption. "He went on his way rejoicing" (Acts viii. 39). The eunuch had found release from sin's penalty and power; hence, joy filled his heart after he had confessed his faith in Christ as his Emancipator. The meaning of the word Redemption, is being "set at liberty by virtue of a price paid." This is aptly illustrated in the experience of the eunuch.

4. Reciprocation. "Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings" (1 Peter iv. 13). Thus the Apostle comforts, the suffering saints; Christ bids us do the same (Matt. v. 13), and the early Christians exemplify it (Acts v. 4). The keen edge of suffering is removed where there is this mutuality in suffering; yea, He suffers in us (Col. i. 24; Acts ix. 4), and we bear his marks (Gal. vi. 17).

5. Reflection. "I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth" (2 John 4; 3 John 3). The consistent life of a believer as it corresponds with the truth brings a four-fold benefit, for it honours the God of Truth to his glory, it strengthens the walker in truth to his betterment, it influences others to a corresponding action, and gladdens those who are going the same way.

6. Recognition. "When he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad" (Acts xi. 23). Barnabas recognised the working of God's grace in the conversion of those who had believed in Christ at Antioch. As the flowers, in their variegated beauty, proclaim the properties of the artistic sun; so, wherever the sun of God's grace shines into the heart, its properties are seen in the graces of the Spirit, which adorn the life.

7. Recollection. "Then were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord" (John xx. 20). The cause of their gladness was the uplifted hands of Christ. What a host of recollections would crowd into their minds, as those pierced hands were shown to them, for those hands not only reminded them of his living presence, but of his consummated work on Calvary. We may well be glad in having Him, for He is the secret of joy, the spring of gladness, the substance of rejoicing, and the source of all blessing.

The Cripple Chorister.

WHAT pitiful sights are seen by the gate-porter of a London hospital! Here comes a little lass lame for life; it was her mother's one grief. That she had to work hard for herself and her child was no hardship. But this was a new trouble, the crutch had slipped on the greasy paving of the court. There was broken glass, and her hand, the hand that held the crutch was badly cut. Too well she knew the way to the hospital, and she hastened to take it.

"I won't hurt her much," said the doctor, as he took the little hand in his. "Indeed, it might do her good to have a little cry. I wouldn't mind, if she will only hold her hand still."

The child looked up, and quietly said, "I would rather sing, if I may!" So while the doctor's deft fingers were putting in the stitches, her voice resounded through the ward:—

Learn to live!
Learn to live!
Life's the gift of God.
Learn to give!
Learn to give!
Giving comes from God.

Learn to pray!
Learn to pray!
Prayer comes from God.
Sinner, say,
Sinner, say:—
"Father, Father, God!"

Learn to see!
Learn to see!
Sight's the gift of God.
Patient be!
Patient be!
Pity comes from God.

You may die!
You may die!
Death's the gift of God.
"Welcome home!
Welcome home!"
Hark, the voice of God.

The doctor had encouraged this effort for a special purpose, and now it was accomplished. The lacerated hand had been bound up without pain. Now the patient must be kept quiet.

I am not going to weary you with the varying conditions of this little lass; but she did not hasten to convalescence. Sometimes she would have a bright spell, and nurse would allow her to talk a little. What wonderful things she had to tell of one whom she called, after the manner of her court, "my lydy." It would appear as if this friend had all the qualities of a fairy god-mother, in addition to those of noble womanhood.

Who was she? you ask. She was one of the honorary visitors of the Shaftesbury Society, whose aim it is to find a personal friend for every poor little cripple child in the metropolis.

What precious confidences the nurse received—how the "lydy" had lent her picture books, and given her toys; how she had taken her in a pram, with other cripple children, to a place where there was only grass and trees, and a great arch of blue sky—a day ever to be remembered.

Another day the talk would turn to a place called "Our Parlour." A place appointed for cripples, and cripples only. Why, there was in it a carpet and a piano, and more fun was made there than any sound children ever knew.

But "Our Choir" was the climax; she and Nelly Smith and Ada Jones, cripples, went to a room filled with children, cripples all, where they were taught to sing. Sometimes the choir would be asked out, and she had always to sing her song. And then she would ask leave to sing it to nurse that very moment, and nurse would say: "No, dear, not now."

It was difficult for nurse to realize how any child could enjoy life as did this little lass, who had always had a crutch for a companion. Why, she had actually been to the Lord Mayor's Show, a sight described as grander than the Queen upon her throne. What a day that had been! The Cripples' Alderman had invited them, and supplied them with unlimited sandwiches and lemonade. The same Alderman had sent a "hamper" at Christmas to every cripple child in London; and when she began to tell all what it contained, she became so excited that nurse found that she was needed elsewhere.

One day her temperature rose; she became delirious; she lived her choir life all over again.

"It's my turn next," she whispered; and then she sang. The tears that were shed now were those of sorrow and sympathy. Softly came the lines:—

You may die!
You may die!
Death's the gift of God.

Then with all her might:—

"Welcome home!
Welcome home!"
Hark, the voice of God.

She took a long rest, and then said, "I'm so tired to-night, mother, do you think you might carry me home?"

That night the nurse sent out two letters, and the morning brought the mother and the "lydy." The screen was round the bed: a sign that all understood.

How tender last moments are! Messages were whispered for cripple companions. She had no others. Then she spoke with her eyes, and other eyes answered, until the little head drooped.

* * * * *

A few years ago cripple children in London, as a class, were unknown. The poor mothers nursed their children and their sorrows alone and in silence. Now they are known to exist by the thousand. Their names and addresses, their needs and their ailments, are all tabulated, and visits are paid to them in an organized fashion. Sympathetic visitors knock regularly at the door to link the cripple prisoner to companionship and a wider world. This work has been planned by the Shaftesbury Society and Ragged School Mission, 32, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.; and, seeing its schools and missions are established in the most congested districts of the city, they form admirable centres for cripple discovery and ministration. There is no part of the work of this energetic Society which bears richer promise. W. M.

Personal.

I acknowledge with many thanks the flowers received last week. I hope those who can gather any flowers during the summer months will remember the little children and poor sick people who cannot get them.

Alfred Cocking, Janet Robinson.—I am glad to welcome you as new "searchers," and hope the study will prove interesting and useful.

Edith Purkiss, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Eric St. George, Mansfield White.—I am sorry to hear you have been ill, and hope you will soon be quite well again.

Hilda Von Greisheim.—If you would like to send your answers to me written in German, you may do so. You must always write out the responses.

Gracie Winn.—Most of your little cousins like to do Bible Clocks. You must write out the verses.

Joan Dunsford.—Thank you for your contribution to the Indian Famine. It was kind of you to save your farthings for the poor little children.

Douglas Stevens.—I am sorry you have to discontinue the "Searcher," but hope that, later on, you may find time again.

Laura Finch.—Thank you for your letter. I am sorry you have had to say goodbye to your friend, Mr. Fred Rowcliffe, because he has gone to South Africa, but hope with you that this war will speedily come to an end, and that your friend may be spared to return home again.

Uncle Tom.

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 29.

"What is God's due"? (Luke xx. 19-26.)

OUR Lord had so little of this world's goods, that He must needs borrow the coin, which was to be his object lesson. What a text for his discourse!

The trap was cunningly devised. The power of Rome was at that time dominant over Palestine. Roman governors, officials, soldiers, were everywhere. But familiarity with their presence did not lessen the stern resentment and antipathy of the subject race. On the contrary, the fire burnt underground with an ever intenser glow, and the one desire of every Jew was to rid the land of the foreign element, which was slowly changing the aspect of the national life. If our Lord decided that it was right to give tribute to Cæsar, He would alienate a large number of his followers, who were animated by a patriotism of which Judas Maccabæus and his brothers had been the foremost representatives. If, on the other hand, He decided that it was not right, they would be able to accuse Him to Pilate, as hostile to the Roman domination, which would bring Him at once under the rule and authority of the governor. It was a cleverly conceived dilemma.

But with marvellous astuteness the Lord answered their attack. The coin which He held in his hand represented, not only the power of the conqueror, but the advantages of good order and commercial prosperity, which his rule had inaugurated and was maintaining. "Surely," said Christ in effect, "as long as you enjoy the advantages of the good government and order which Cæsar gives you, you should be prepared to give him a percentage of tribute for the maintenance of his administration. Give to Cæsar what is legitimately his."

These words of our Lord teach us that we should be loyal to the Government under which we elect to live, so long as it maintains good order and provides for the uninterrupted prosecution of our life-work. Perhaps we may extend his words to imply that we must be prepared to give more than tribute, and that our personal service may be required. It is well when Christian people yield their voluntary service in posts of public administration. As long as a government fulfils its office we should render our tribute of various forms, though this does not exclude our trying to improve it by legitimate means.

Our Lord's words imply also that Cæsar has no right to intrude into God's domain. Directly he enters the sacred province of conscience we have a right to remonstrate and refuse our tribute. These are not the things of Cæsar. Our conscience, our religious convictions, our method of worship are not for any earthly tribunal to interfere with. They are God's.

We should learn also to give God his own, and to do so as punctiliously and zealously as the men of the world give Cæsar his. See how the soldier and the volunteer will leave love, and lucrative employment, and bewitching surroundings, in order to serve their sovereign: how sedulously the statesman and politician will expend themselves on the behalf of the commonwealth: how the young civil servant will prepare laboriously to pass stiff examinations! All these render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's in a way that contrasts very unfavourably with our zeal in rendering to God the things that are God's.

Our nature is like a coin, with God's name and superscription written on it. In some cases the legend is a little obliterated. But it is not impossible to decipher the image and likeness of our Creator, the A.D., the F.D., the Rex, and other marks. Give that nature to God. Then the money you own, your health, your time, your circumstances, your talents—are not all these inscribed with the Divine insignia? Render them all to God. Be yourself a coin, minted in heaven, passing from hand to hand through the world, always reminding men of the divine kingdom, always ringing true whenever tested, always representing good value, until, worn with use, God calls you in.

C.E. NOTES.

The Presidential tour in Scotland has been followed with much blessing. There have been crowded gatherings in each centre, and an earnest, deep tone in each meeting. Members of the Scotch Executive accompanied Mr. Meyer to each place.

* * *

The opening meeting of the Scottish National Convention was held at Paisley on Saturday afternoon. It was a junior rally, and the addresses were given by Miss Young, of Greenock, and Rev. Mr. Weir, of Coatbridge, both of whom riveted the attention of the large audience.

"Jesus warning and inviting" (Matt. xi. 20-30).

GOLDEN TEXT.

"Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. xi. 28).

INTRODUCTION.

JESUS has to warn as well as invite. We so often do wrong, so often fail in duty, that it is quite necessary for us all to know that if we wilfully sin we must be punished. But it is with a deep, strong love and tenderness the Saviour invites us to throw in our lot with Him, and accept his yoke in faith and obedience, so that we may be kept from wilfully sinning, and be led by Him, if we willingly accept his great invitation.

Key to Blackboard Plan.—A yoke is for two; used for oxen in ploughing, so that they may be kept close to each other, go the same way step by step, and thus share the work. The three keys to Christ's invitation are: "Come," "Take," "Learn." Read it also—"All ye come," "take," and "of me learn." There is a double "rest" in the invitation (28, 29) given by Christ. See also the "Christ-character" (meek and lowly) of the yoke-bearer.

1. WARNING.

Upbraid—Rebuke, reprove: "Woe unto you" (20, 21). The reason for this—No repentance.

Repentance is a subject that runs all through the Bible; it is a thing God must have; "all have sinned" (Rom. iii. 23), and all must repent. Trace this subject in the history of the Israelites. The cities mentioned in the portion are all cities of sin, and they are wonderful pictures of individuals.

"Chorazin," near the Lake of Gennesareth.
"Bethsaida," on the banks of the Sea of Galilee.
"Tyre and Sidon," two seaside towns.
"Capernaum," neat the Sea of Galilee.
"Sodom," generally coupled with Gomorrah (Gen. xiv. 8).

It was the three towns Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum that Christ rebuked (21, 23). All had seen his mighty works, had heard his words, had lived near Him, especially Capernaum; and yet they rejected Him, they would have none of Him, they cannot go unpunished for so great sin.

It was those wise in their own eyes who inhabited these cities (25), and Christ warns us that those who know about Him, and about God, but will not repent of sin, will not be humbled as little children (25, "babes"), cannot be blessed.

"Woe" is the opposite to "blessed."

2. INVITATION.

Mr. Moody says of the grand invitation (vv. 28-30):—

Something to do: "Come unto Me."
Something to take: His yoke.
Something to leave: Your burden.
Something to find: Rest.

Let us examine this invitation by asking three questions:—

Who is invited?
What invited to?
How invited?
WHO IS INVITED?

All (28).—Everyone, anyone (John iii. 16).

Ye.—You and me, individuals (John iii. 3).

Those who labour.—Try hard to do right (Rom. x. 3, 4).

The heavy laden.—Those who feel for their sins (Is. liii. 6).

Burdened ones.—See Luke xi. 46. Christ's burden nothing compared with this.

WHAT INVITED TO?

A yoke.—To a life of service with Jesus. "My yoke" (see note on "Yoke" under blackboard plan).

A lowly life.—Like that which Christ Himself lived (Zech. ix. 9; Phil. ii. 5-7; 1 Pet. ii. 21).

Rest.—A double rest. The first (28) is rest for sins forgiven, the second (29) is rest of Christ's own peace that passeth all understanding (John xiv. 27 Phil. iv .7).

Work out this beautiful gift of "rest" in Isa. xi. 10; Jer. vi. 16; Heb. iv. 3, 9; Isa. xxviii. 12; xxxii. 18; Jer. l. 6.

HOW INVITED?

No force, no command, no threatening; but with gentle tenderness Christ speaks: "Come, take, learn"—come by faith; take by obedience; learn with humility. Shall we not obey his call?

"Come unto Me,
Take My yoke,
Learn of Me."

LESSONS TO GATHER.

1. Listen to Christ's warnings, for all need them.
2. Accept his invitation and follow Him.

Feeding the Little Ones.

SIR,—In November, 1899, I made an appeal to your readers for aid to enable the committee of the Destitute Children's Dinners Society to open their dining rooms somewhat earlier than usual. War and the winter were upon us, with sorrow and distress inevitable. The committee wished to strain every nerve to obtain all the support and comfort for the children which their dining rooms could offer. Since then I need not recite what the war and the winter have been, nor how the nation has sprung up to minister to every sore sorrow and bind up every wound.

I feel very anxious to thank that generous public for its help, and, now that at Easter, 1900, our dining rooms are closing later than usual, to invoke its continued bounty to us. The subscribers and donors will, I think, be pleased to learn that the children they have so liberally aided have been thoroughly well supplied with food, eaten in warm cleanly rooms, which always adds so much to their comfort, and among friends who sympathized with their sorrows this sad year from the deadly war and wasting sickness.

Our benevolent supporters—more than likely sufferers themselves—may gather consolation in their grief from the assurance that many and great have been the comforts they have provided. As a committee we feel and wish to express our gratitude. The treasurer of the Society is Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East.—Your obedient servant,

BURDETT-COUTTS.

Children's Fresh-Air Mission.—Through the instrumentality of this Mission last year 3,171 poor and ailing children enjoyed a country holiday. The benefit derived by these little occupants of crowded homes in a close street or alley is not merely temporary, for in many cases delicate children, to all appearance weak and stunted in growth, have greatly improved in health; and the fresh air and congenial surroundings of country life have not infrequently proved to be the turning point in their physical development. The services of friends resident in country villages, where suitable homes for the children can be found, will be greatly appreciated. Copies of the annual report will be forwarded on application to Miss Rowley, Secretary, St. Peter's Schools, Onslow Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

The Ministering Children's League has an encouraging record of practical usefulness. The Countess of Meath, writing from Egypt, says:—"The Industrial School at Alexandria promises to do most useful and much-needed work in giving employment to the blind. Although the sightless victims of ophthalmia abound in Egypt; yet, strange to say, not a single institution for their benefit had been successfully established. Good and central rooms have been secured, and as there is no shop in Alexandria where baskets are made to order and English goods are sold, there is likely to be no lack of customers. There are eight branches in and near Alexandria." A seaside Home is to be opened shortly in England, a Refuge for children is to be established in Tasmania, and an institution in West Australia is being considerably enlarged. Further particulars of this interesting Society may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., 83, Lancaster Gate, London, W.

Home Missions.

English Village Children.

THE Caravan Mission to Village Children is undoubtedly one of the most promising branches of the Children's Special Service Mission. The eighth annual report mentions numerous cheering indications of its progress and utility. Seeking the children invariably opens up a way by which the parents also are reached. Wherever these efforts in the interests of the young have been made, they have received the cordial sympathy of Christians of all denominations. In some cases villages were revisited after several years' interval, and those who professed to receive Christ had proved by their continuance that they had been born from above.

In the counties of Somerset, Suffolk, Sussex, Kent, Essex, and Bedford gracious results have followed the work, and the seed sown in the young hearts has given evidence of growth and the yielding of an abundant harvest.

Further information may be had from Mr. S. J. Hewlett, Ewhurst, Redhill Common, Surrey, who will also be pleased to hear of any young men desirous of spending their holidays in the work.

The Bedford Institute.

THE past year marked the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of Quaker Street School, from which this Institute claims its origin. This proved the germ from which mission work of Friends in London has radiated. The school, though held on Sundays, was not for children of any religious congregation, but was organized on the lines of a ragged school, and sought to reach the children of the district who were otherwise uncared for, both as to education on week-days and religious instruction on the Sabbath. It was at first intended for boys only, but in the succeeding year a school for girls was established, and some 200 children were soon brought under instruction in reading, writing, and Scripture teaching.

No more striking testimony could be borne to the development of the movement than the number of agencies which are now known under the title of the Bedford Institute First Day School and Home Mission Association, and the number of enterprising organisations which have arisen out of it; to say nothing of the many workers who have gone forth into the Home and Foreign Mission field. Its centres are: the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields; the Friends' Hall, Bethnal Green; Ratcliff Meeting House and Mission Institute; Peel Meeting House, Clerkenwell; Deptford Meeting House, Bunhill Memorial Buildings, Barking Meeting House, and Hoxton Hall. The various departments of religious and philanthropic effort continue to be vigorously maintained, and the Bands of Hope, Social Circles, and Temperance Societies, &c., give evidence of increasing activity and usefulness. The same earnestness of spirit and patient devotion characterise the labours at all the centres, and the loving interest of the workers in the spiritual and temporal welfare of the poor and needy is being abundantly rewarded.

Pathetic experiences have been the lot of the promoters of the mothers' meetings—gatherings which, perhaps, present but little interest to outsiders, and yet the joys and sorrows of some eighty-two women (who assemble at one of the eight centres week by week) are certainly no matter of insignificance. The congregation of mothers having assembled, all who are anxious to hear press towards the front, those who want to talk declining towards the back. There are widows in deep mourning, young wives with tiny babies, the three-year-old baby boy of a Salvation Army drummer, full of music, whose hands respond to the singing, and whose face flushes pinker and pinker as a kind friend plays the concertina—every one full of their own special interest. Many kind visitors brighten the meetings by speech and song—giving untold instruction and pleasure, and directing the thoughts of poor distracted mothers to the Great Burden Bearer of the world, the never failing source of help and consolation.

Copies of the report of these organizations, and other information, will be forwarded by the secretary, Mr. R. A. Slader, the Bedford Institute, Spitalfields, E.

The Leysian Mission.

THIS Mission, situated in a district of poor tenements occupied chiefly by the coster class, has proved that in this rough ground of London life, hardy virtues come to sturdy growth. Those who live, with sympathy and observation, among the poor only know how much heroism and chivalry are trampled upon and unrecognised in the daily struggle for existence.

The Mission is especially one from the young to the young. They are gathered together in the Sunday school, but this, of course, is of itself inadequate to meet the needs of the children, who have to be cared for day by day; for every neglected little life requires the tending that only personal love can bestow. As the children grow up, the girls join the Girls' Parlour, and the boys the Boys' Brigade. The Young People's Choir is an interesting and delightful means of advancing the musical education of the young, and all the senior members are engaged in some form of Christian service. The Snowdrop Band keeps before the thoughts of the girls and young women the pure ideal of a blameless life. There are now some 200 members who have taken the pledge. The Medical Department continues to afford valuable assistance to the suffering poor, and has inspired confidence in the Mission workers, and a sense of human

SYMPATHY AND FELLOWSHIP.

The Mothers' Meetings and Working Men's Club are conducted with patient and steady perseverance. The directly religious side of the Mission has shown signs of advancement, especially the open-air services. Some 30,000 visits were paid to the homes of the people, with invitations to attend the meetings.

There is always a valuable contingent to the body of workers from Moulton House—a commercial settlement for young men engaged in business houses in the city. Here is a comfortable, well-furnished house, where young men can live co-operatively, and so receive a far greater degree of comfort for their outlay. At present the house is full, and an extension of the settlement is needful, to cope with the increasing demands for accommodation. The head-quarters of the Leysian Mission are at Errol Street, Whitecross Street, London, E.C. The hon. secretary, Mr. W. P. Taylor, Moulton House, Weston-super-Mare, will forward copies of the fourteenth annual report, or further particulars of the mission.

Hampshire Village Mission. —Every year witnesses the extension of the area affected by this Mission. The need of a small tent for conducting services in isolated districts is again felt, and it is hoped to supply this necessity as early as funds will allow. The superintendent is Mr. J. Hasell Charlton, Fareham, Hants.

Theatrical Employees.—Through the kindness of Sir George and Lady Williams, a gathering of theatrical employés was held, as in so many former years, on Good Friday. The meeting was held at Shoreditch Town Hall. About 600 employés were present. After a repast the chair was taken by Mr. Victor Buxton. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Trevor Fielder, M.A., of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow; and Vallence Cook, of the Wesleyan Church, Dalston. Mr. H. Ehrlich and other friends took part. A parcel of books to each person attending was given by the Religious Tract Society, and a bouquet from the Bible Flower Mission. Hearty greetings were sent by telegram to Sir George and Lady Williams at Mentone. The meeting was arranged under the auspices of the Special Religious Services' Committee, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.

Prayer for Revival.

A MEMORABLE TIME.

IN the spirit of the Master, who "continued all night in prayer to God," thirty brethren came together on Wednesday night last week to an upper room at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street. It was purposely a private gathering, with the definite object of an "all night with our Lord in prayer;" and a memorable time, a night of crisis, a season of real humbling, resulted. Anything more informal and simple scarcely could be. "The Lord is here, He presides, and we wait before Him," said one of the company as the meeting began. Better than Jacob's experience was ours: "Surely God was in that chamber, and we knew it."

Heartfelt confession of sin, of weakness, of personal failures marked the first hours. The want of fervency and earnest purpose, the lack of that deep pity which led the Lord to weep over sinners, were deplored, with brokenness of heart concerning much of past service, and earnest longing that the time to come should more than make up for the evil which had been wrought. Strong men wept and spoke with a pathos impossible to put into words.

There were alternations for praise and brief intervals of silence, but fervency in prayer held the flow of the successive hours. Never did night pass more rapidly in the experience of the brethren than this.

Strong cries for enduement at the hands of the Holy Ghost poured forth as a flood. Burdened hearts yearning for unsaved relatives and friends found ready expression, and the joy of his salvation braced the mind and filled the heart. It was a night of intercession, thanksgiving, and effectual fervent prayer. London's deep spiritual need possessed all minds, and the coming Tent Campaign weighted with intensity of feeling the might of prayer. It was with special reference to this important work that the meeting was convened. Many men of God recognize that if a real and abiding success is to attend the Tent Campaign, "the weapons of warfare must not be carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."

It was past six a.m. when we became aware that the night had passed. It remains to be seen to what extent real submission was made, and whose names were changed from "Jacob, the supplanter" to that of "Israel, a prince," having henceforth increase of power with God and man.

ONE WHO WAS PRESENT.

FOR WORLD-WIDE BLESSING.

Will you please ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to pray for us here in Chicago at this time? We are at a time of crisis. God has been drawing out our hearts in prayer for a great revival. People are beginning to long for and expect such an outpouring as we have never had in this city. Many cottage prayer meetings have been going on for some weeks, and the yearning for a world-wide refreshing is deepening constantly. After our Tuesday night Bible-class at Mr. Moody's Church, those who are deeply burdened for this great thing retire to the lecture-room of the Bible Institute, just at hand, and spend a season of crying to God for nothing else but this one mighty boon. Before each of our four other weekly classes is held a prayer meeting for the same object.

We feel the need of the fellowship of the Christians in Great Britain very much in this time of supplication. We are about to have a conference during the whole month of May in the Bible Institute, which will be attended by hundreds of people from Chicago and vicinity. One great aim of this Conference will be to pray for a world-wide revival; to study those conditions on our part which make it possible for God to give us such a revival; and to open our hearts for Him to begin the work at once, with us who are in the Conference.

The Lord has been steadily deepening his work in the hearts of those who have been studying his Word here this winter. Hundreds of Christians have been brought by the Spirit of God into a life of surrender, trust, and power never known before. For these things we praise God. But we are profoundly convinced that there is something very remarkable just ahead for us; and the fact that this conviction is increasing, both in depth and extent, is a constant encouragement to our faith.

We long for such a mighty manifestation of the Holy Ghost's power in Christendom as will drive back the floods of rationalism, worldliness, and general ungodliness that have almost engulfed us the last few years. We believe it is coming, and we call for the help of our brethren and sisters in prayer. We care not where it begins, but only that it come in all fulness, and come speedily. Our Lord's coming is our first desire; but if He tarry, we must have a mighty evival. We beg readers of THE CHRISTIAN to unite with us. WILLIAM R. NEWELL.

Dublin Medical Mission.

THE annual meeting of this useful organization was recently held at Dublin. A number of ministers and friends interested in the work took part.

Dr. Pigott, one of the medical workers, mentioned a remarkable case, of a young woman for whom he had asked prayer last year. He believed that efforts made on her behalf had been blessed. She had lived in a corner of the city where women, unable to obtain as much whisky as they wished, drank methylated spirits. The girl herself called it "a den of iniquity." She had been ill-used by the brutal father of her two children, was forced to borrow clothes in order to attend the dispensary, and was too ill to work. Confessing that indulgence in strong drink had led to her ruin, she expressed her desire to begin a new life. When dealt with she broke down completely. She was placed in an English refuge and the little ones in a home for destitute children. The matron of the refuge had written, subsequently: "We have been much pleased with ——, a typical rescue case. Her gratitude knows no bounds. She delights in the hymns, and you should see her rapt face of eager interest at the Bible class."

This girl, Dr. Pigott said, is now in a good situation, giving evidence of a new life within. Her great desire is to rescue her sister, whose case is even worse than her own. The workers have got into touch with the sister, who has now signed the pledge, and promised to enter the same refuge.

Dr. Pigott related other pathetic cases in which the Mission's care for the spiritual and physical needs of the very poor had proved helpful. The workers are encouraged at times by the testimonies of patients. One man, rapidly dying of consumption, when asked "Had he any fear of death?" replied, with tears in his eyes, "'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' I am just trying to wait patiently for Him." Many who attend have to bear persecution. A girl had been much tormented because she said she had "found Jesus" at the Mission. The priest's last words to her were, "You are drinking their medicine, and damning your soul." In another instance, a woman remarked of the change in a young fellow related to her, who had become converted:—"Whatever yez are, yez made a saint of Pat Murphy, and he was a bad man."

After a few words from Rev. S. Prenter, expressing satisfaction with the work, Mr. Bolton, of the China Inland Mission, testified that the training he had received in the Mission had been of great value to him in the foreign mission field. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Mrs. E. E. Figgis, 6, Chancery Place, Dublin.

Talbot Hall Mission.

THE year 1899 will be a memorable one in the history of the mission connected with the Talbot Tabernacle, as it marked the removal from the Cornwall Hall to the Talbot Hall. Needless to say this transition has involved a considerable outlay, which probably accounts for the deficit in the funds. On the other hand, the change of halls has led to a great increase in the number of scholars attending the Sunday school; one of the classrooms, fitted up with a gallery for infants, is already filled with little ones. The soup kitchen is widely appreciated. Through the winter months hundreds of the poor avail themselves of the cheap dinners. The mothers' meetings and Gospel Total Abstinence Society continue to be well maintained; and the efforts put forth in every department of the mission work have been abundantly fruitful. The preaching of the Gospel has been greatly blessed, and quite a thousand families have had the glad tidings conveyed to their homes through the house-to-house visitation of the workers, under the able superintendence of Pastor N. H. Patrick. The hon. secretary is Mr. H. G. Shears, 66, Linden Avenue, W.

Irish Notes.

REFERRING to the prospects of evangelization in Ireland, a correspondent writes:—"Christian friends outside Ireland often fail to realize that about three-fourths of the country are under a system which can fairly be described as one of error, superstition, and terror. The part which can be described as Protestant is but a small corner on the north-east of the map. It is little wonder we sometimes ask, 'What are we among so many?' The great mass of Roman Catholics are little more than touched by evangelical influences. We have, thank God, many agencies, all aiming for the spiritual enlightenment and well-being of Roman Catholics, so far as that is possible in the face of stern difficulties.

"The Church of Rome just now seems in a marked way losing sympathy with the great mass of the people. Her clergy are clamouring for power and position on every hand—largely on political lines—seeking place on boards and societies likely to furnish their ends. You cannot fail to observe how solidly the priesthood work together, considering very little the interests of the people. The people are feeling it keenly, realizing that their shepherds are working for the establishment of the iron rule of Rome, and have little to say in the way of help and encouragement for those over whom they are placed.

"This separation of priest and people, undoubtedly growing, is a certain call to action on the part of Christians. The people are waiting and longing for something better than Rome can give; the aching void in their languishing hearts may be filled by the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

The Presbyterian Orphan Society continues to flourish. Its income for the past year was over £17,000, being £500 in advance of the income of any previous year, while it is just about to receive bequests amounting to £25,000 additional. It has 2,777 children on its roll, and since the Society was started, thirty-four years ago, 12,634 children have been upon its books. The Society has been a great blessing to the poor in the North of Ireland.

Miss Carnegie, of Dublin, who went out to Jerusalem some months ago to take the place in the hospital there of Miss Ellison, is returning home, and will resume her Dublin work.

In Grangegorman Church, Dublin, in connection with the recent Easter vestry meeting, all the Ritualists were turned out of office, and representatives of the Evangelical party were elected in their stead.

At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Synod of Belfast, a conference was held on "Present-day Hindrances to the Progress of Religion;" and among the hindrances named were pride, worldliness, impurity, trashy literature, Sabbath desecration, and intemperance. Revs. William Park, Henry Montgomery, and others took part in the proceedings.

The total amount received last year in voluntary contributions by the Irish Church Representative Body was about £130,000, or nearly £40,000 less than in the previous year. This reduction arises mainly from the fact that landlords have met with such reductions of rent in recent times that they cannot afford to contribute so liberally as formerly to ecclesiastical objects.

"Aged Pilgrim" Votes.—If any of our readers have votes for the forthcoming election not yet disposed of, we shall be glad to hear from them.

The Howard Association, instituted for the promotion of the best methods for the treatment and prevention of crime and pauperism, has from time to time aroused the public conscience to a realization of the need of united and determined effort in this direction. To the publication of pamphlets dealing with subjects of vital importance in the interest of social reform may be attributed much of the success of the Association. Two of these, just published—"The Housing of the Poor and its Amelioration" and "Christianity amongst Prisoners"—contain much information, authoritative and reliable, respecting the conditions which render the solution of such problems increasingly difficult. The offices of the Association are at 5, Bishopsgate Street Without, London, E.C. The secretary is Mr. Wm. Tallack.

Scottish Notes.

AT the forty-fifth annual meeting of the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. held a few days ago, the report which was presented showed a slight decrease in membership as compared with the previous year. Special reference was made to heavy losses sustained through the death of honorary subscribers. Dr. Carment was re-elected president.

The members of the Evangelical Union held their annual spring conference in Edinburgh on April 16, Rev. John Kirk (president) occupying the chair. Mr. Robert Stoddart read a paper on "The Evangelical Union and True Temperance Reform," in which the position was firmly taken up that the Church must have clean hands in relation to the whole system of drink and drinking, because there can be no room for two opinions as to the duty of total abstinence. A paper on "The Doctrines of the Evangelical Union and the Practical Religious Life" was afterwards submitted by Rev. Lewis C. Hammond, Newington E.U. Mission.

The annual report of the Glasgow Sailors' Orphans Society shows that during the past year fifty-nine children were admitted to the Home, bringing up the number cared for in that period to 486. In addition, 991 children received help in their own homes.

On the occasion of Rev. F. B. Meyer's recent visit to Dunfermline, a series of meetings was held in Canmore Street Congregational Church. Rev. Alexander Maclennan (Dunfermline) and Miss Macarthur (Pollokshields) gave addresses on "Evangelistic Endeavour." An evening public meeting was held under the presidency of Rev. James Gilmour (Cowdenbeath), when addresses were given by Mr. Meyer and other speakers.

Speaking in Edinburgh last week at the annual gathering of the Scottish Reformation Society, the Earl of Moray said that some who are watching public movements very narrowly, have a strong suspicion, if not a conviction, that the cunning hand of the Jesuits can be traced in the steps which led up to the war in South Africa, and called attention to the significance of the connection of Dr. Leyds with the Roman Catholic Church. The Society is fully alive to the dangers which would attend the national establishment of a Roman Catholic University in Ireland, and a motion was passed pledging the members to resist any measure brought forward with such an object. The opinion was strongly expressed that the establishment of such a college under the control of the priests would bring about the destruction of the whole system of higher education.

Through the exertions of Pastor Langenau, a mission hall has just been opened in connection with the German Seamen's Mission at Methil, in Fifeshire. The port is visited annually by about 6,000 German sailors, and the necessity for such a centre of work among them has long been felt.

Some plain speaking was done by Mr. James McKillop, M.P., in an address at Falkirk about a week ago. Referring to the prevalence of intemperance and gambling, he declared that the Christian Church seemed to be not only powerless, but, in a surprising degree, unconscious of the appalling extent of the danger, and of its own duty to remedy the state of matters.

City Police Institute.—The first annual meeting in connection with the City of London Christian Police Institute was held on the mission premises, 5, Sussex Place, Leadenhall Street, on Monday afternoon last, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. The annual report, prepared by Mr. H. Leng, hon. secretary, who has organised the work, describes the undertaking as an unsectarian mission of policemen to policemen, and states that the Christian policeman always secures in the long run the respect of his comrades and the good opinion of his superiors. Bible and educational classes are regularly held at the Institute, as well as special meetings to brighten the lot of the policemen's lives. The Chairman, after pointing out that policemen were subject to special difficulties and temptations, spoke in kindly terms of the value of the various departments of work maintained in connection with the Institute.

The Churches.

Church of England.

Dr. Chavasse, in a letter to the Liverpool Secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, says:—"I will gladly take the place of Bishop Ryle as a Vice-President of Dr. Barnardo's Society for Reclaiming Destitute Children."

The large wooden crucifix which was erected near Hensall Church, Goole, by the late vicar, Rev. E. H. Bryan, has been cut down by some person or persons unknown. The crucifix had gained a certain notoriety from the recent protest of Mr. Kensit.

The Bishop of Manchester lately held a service, at which five hundred young persons presented themselves for Confirmation. They came from about forty churches in Manchester, Salford, and the adjacent districts. The Bishop delivered an impressive address, directing attention to the circumstances under which the Lord's Supper was established and the example of self-sacrifice which Christ set his disciples.

In an Easter sermon at St. Alban's, Holborn, Rev. A. H. Stanton said: "How sorry I am that we cannot worship Him this Easter as we would, with incense at the altar! Woe is me that I am constrained to dwell in the Mesech of the establishment, and to have my habitation among the tents of Protestantism! We would not omit a single ceremony or a single grain of incense on Easter Day. It is our will, our wish, our worship. We ask Christ to take that worship, even though we cannot give it to Him in kind."

The Bishop-Designate of Liverpool preached his farewell sermon at St. Peter-le-Bailey Church, Oxford, on Sunday evening last. In the course of his discourse Dr. Chavasse said the Bible was passing to-day through a time of fierce controversy. So far as he knew, there never had been a time when the Bible had not been the object of some kind of attack or other, and they might rest perfectly sure that the Bible, which had passed through so many fiery trials before, would not suffer at all in that through which it was passing at the present time.

St. Faith's Church, at Waterloo, near Liverpool, was consecrated by the Archbishop of York on Saturday in the presence of a large congregation. The ceremony attracted a good deal of local interest, not only from the presence of the Archbishop, but also because of the hostile attitude of ultra-Protestants. As the congregation left the church, Mr. George Wise, of the British Protestant Union, stood on a pile of stones on land opposite, and there delivered a speech, in which he declared that St. Faith's Church had been erected for the specific purpose of carrying out the practices of ritualism, and challenged any clergyman to prove from the Prayer-book the superstitious doctrines of High Churchmen.

Congregational.

By invitation of Rev. J. W. Atkinson, of Latimer Chapel, East London, a helpful conference of delegates and officers of the churches of the district has been held. The subject was the present condition and prospect of Congregational work in East London.

One of the oldest of Welsh Congregational ministers with a pastorate, Rev. George Owen, of Trevil, Rhymney, who has attained the age of eighty-six, preached recently at a meeting of the Monmouthshire Association, and with effect, in spite of his age.

As the outcome of services commenced about twelve years ago in a cottage at Deane, near Bolton, a new Congregational church and school are about to be erected. Towards the cost the Lancashire and Cheshire Chapel Building Society has made a grant of £200, and Mr. W. H. Lever has promised a subscription of £500.

The London mid-day services, in connection with the Congregational Young People's Union, at Falcon Square Church, E.C., are to be continued. On May 9, Rev. J. D. Jones, of Bournemouth, will conduct the service; and on May 23, Rev. John Hunter, of Glasgow, will give the address. The services are held on Wednesdays from 1 p.m. to 1.30 p.m.

Rev. Dr. Talmage fulfilled his first engagement in his present visit to this country on Sunday morning last, when he preached at Cavendish Congregational Chapel, Manchester, to about 2,000 persons. Some hundreds of people were unable to obtain admission. Dr. Talmage preached from Rev. xvi. 16: "And He gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon," and pictured in vivid terms the final conflict between the powers of good and of evil.

Baptist.

Memorial stones of a new hall and class-rooms are being laid this week at Chatsworth Road Church, West Norwood [Rev. Archibald G. Brown).

The four-and-a-half years' ministry of Rev. H. J. Knight at Peckham Rye Tabernacle has been of a fruitful character. At a recent gathering, Mr. Knight received at the hands of the members and congregation a token of their cordial recognition of his labours.

On Thursday evening last week there were large meetings of Baptists in five London centres. Addresses were delivered on the obligations and opportunities of the opening century, and from all quarters one learns that a high tone prevailed in the words spoken.

Methodist.

Over 71,000 guineas have now been promised towards the Twentieth Century Fund recently inaugurated by the Methodist Free Churches.

The Methodist Free Churches have taken the lead this year in the anniversary gatherings. A hearty welcome was given to Rev. James Roberts on returning from Jamaica. Mr. Roberts gave an encouraging report of improvements in the morals of the coloured people in that colony.

The Norman Road Wesleyan Chapel, St. Leonards, has been totally destroyed by fire. After two services on Good Friday, the chapel was closed, and left—as was supposed—in a state of security. The fire was discovered early on the Saturday morning by a policeman, who immediately gave the alarm. The fire brigade were on the spot within seven minutes and worked most vigorously, but all their efforts to save the building were in vain.

The Wesleyan Methodist Union for Biblical and Homiletic Study held its annual council meeting recently. This useful institution is a Correspondence College for Christian workers. It started its work only a few years ago, on the initiative of Rev. A. E. Gregory, for local preachers only. There are now twelve different classes, in which such widely different subjects as Homiletics, Church history, grammar, theology, composition, and Bible study, are taken up through the post. The whole of the tuition is given practically without any fee.

A combined Methodist service has been held at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Wesleyan, Free Methodist, and New Connexion ministers taking part. Rev. J. R. Abel preached, and Mr. James Guthrie in some concluding remarks said, that as Christians they had been too much apart. He pointed out that in the liquor trade men organized huge combinations to carry out a ruinous traffic, and he argued that Christians ought to display the same wisdom by joining their forces against the powers of darkness.

Presbyterian.

A week's special services have been held in St. Andrew's Church, Cheltenham. Short addresses were given each day by Rev. J. Burns, B.A. The services were held at noon, and were well attended both by members of the congregation and by friends from other churches.

Rev. Robert Strang, of Paisley, at the Free Church Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, submitted the report on Religion and Morals, in which he remarked there was not a little to depress and sadden, as well as much to encourage and gladden the heart. Mr. Thomson (elder), of Greenock North, lamented the growing custom of dancing at the close of church social meetings; and Rev. Dr. Stalker spoke in strong deprecation of the fact that in Glasgow hundreds of ice-cream shops, kept by foreigners, are opened on Sundays.

In the Free and United Presbyterian College arrangements it seems that Professor Denney will be transferred from the Chair of Systematic Theology to that of New Testament Exegesis in Glasgow College, and that Professor Orr, from the Edinburgh United Presbyterian College, will occupy the Chair of Divinity at Glasgow. Professor Johnston, of the United Presbyterian Hall, will go to Aberdeen as Professor of New Testament Exegesis; Professor Paterson will be colleague to Professor A. B. Davidson in the Hebrew Chair at New College.

Society of Friends.

Numerous letters of thanks continue to be received from different groups of Dukhobortsi in their villages in Canada. One of these, received by Philadelphia friends, says:—"You saw us in grief, in suffering, and weakened down; you have seen us in need, deprived of all the product of our toil, but we were powerless to avert the oppression; we called for help unto Christ to come to her aid, and God hearkened unto our voice, and sent you to aid us; you gave us your voice and came to see us, and covered our nudeness, and have taken away our grief. We were enabled to settle in the land of freedom; how shall we not remember your charity and kindness and not be grateful to you for all the charity you have bestowed upon us?"

A First-day Schools' conference has been held in London. Over 500 delegates were present. William Braithwaite made some pointed remarks on the reception of "goats" in the school. "Keep up the supply of goats. Help the goats to change into sheep. Keep stoking your fires of fellowship. Be receptive of new life, and not an institution in process of fossilization. A thoroughly living adult school is the best possible advertisement we can have of the movement." In the ensuing discussion there were many testimonies to the blessings of the movement, among others that of the man who said that at one time he was "one of the most stubbornest goats a-going," but through the influence of the school he had been changed into a sheep.

Salvation Army.

The proceeds of self-denial week amount to £42,520, an excess of £6,000 on 1899. This sum does not include the amounts received at headquarters, or in connection with the "Darkest England" scheme.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. R. M. HERDMAN, Vicar of Holy Trinity, North Shields, aged fifty-five. He was a native of the town, and started life as a sailor. — Age seventy-four, Rear-Admiral HUBERT CAMPION, an earnest evangelical churchman, and hon. sec. of the Royal Navy Scripture Readers' Society.—Mr. THOMAS FINDLAY, a prominent Elder of the Church of Scotland, has just passed away in a ripe old age.—Rev. Dr. PETER STRYKER, Pastor of the Grand Avenue Reformed Church, N.J., died suddenly on March 25 of apoplexy, at the age of seventy-four. He had served for fifty-two years in the ministry of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in Philadelphia and New York.—Mr. THOMAS FREDERICK LEEKS, who had long been identified with temperance and Sunday school work in London, latterly in connection with Dawes Road Congregational Chapel, Fulham. Malmesbury Baptist Church laments the death of Mr. WILLIAM WALKER, for many years senior deacon.—The oldest member of Abingdon Baptist Church, Mr. JOHN ACKLING, who had for sixty years been in church membership.—Rev. EDWIN H. STRIBLING, a well-known missionary of the London Missionary Society, labouring in Madagascar. Mr. Stribling, who was trained at Spring Hill College, Birmingham, had spent thirty years in Madagascar. He was to have left shortly on furlough for England.

Notices.

The leaflet poem, "O! the snow, the beautiful snow," about which a correspondent recently inquired, has been issued in various forms by the Religious Tract Society, London; Messrs. Partridge, of London; Messrs. J. and R. Parlane, of Paisley; Mr. G. Caswell, of Birmingham, and others. It has also been circulated in association with work on behalf of erring women.

The line, "And vie with Gabriel while he sings," appears in a hymn beginning, "Oh could I speak (or knew) the matchless worth," written by Samuel Medley, and appearing in several hymnals, including "Sacred Songs and Solos" (320).

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

The Profits are divided solely amongst the Assured; already divided, £5,400,000.

Claims Paid nearly - £11,000,000.
Accumulated Fund - £5,400,000.

Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at minimum cost, with provision for old age. The practical effect of these Policies in the National Provident Institution is that the Member's life is assured until he reaches the age agreed upon, and on his reaching that age the whole of the Premiums paid are returned to him, and a considerable sum in addition, representing a by no means insignificant rate of interest on his payments.

Obituary.

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.

MANY will hear with regret of the departure of the Duke of Argyll, so long a prominent figure in the world of religious thought and politics. The second son of the seventh duke, George John Douglas Campbell was born in 1823; and, his elder brother dying young, he succeeded at once to the rank and honours of the Marquisate of Lorne. The Duke's activity in Scottish Church affairs is matter of history, and his place in politics is distinctive in more senses than one. His literary labours were also characterized by singular robustness. The Duke was a strong controversialist as well as a keen thinker. His most famous book, "The Reign of Law," while accepting some of Darwin's teaching, was in reality an attack on the evolution theory. In Church and State, in the world of literature and philosophy, the Duke was "a man of war," and will long be remembered as a man of high character and great ability.

AN INDIAN CHIEF.

Rev. F. Frost, missionary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society at Garden River, sends an account of the death of an Indian chief of the Ojibway tribe—Buhgwuj jenene. He was the son of Chief Shingwauk, who is referred to in Longfellow's poem, "Hiawatha." When a lad in his father's wigwam, in the early years of this century, he heard the Gospel, and became a soldier of Christ; and for seventy years he proved a loyal member of the Church of England. Mr. Frost relates that when the chief was suffering acutely, and nearing the end, he remarked: "I remember some words of God's Book, 'Whom the Lord loveth He beateth, and whippeth every son whom He receiveth!'" He became depressed, and asked his children to sing "Jesus is the Lord my Shepherd." The missionary was joined by him in fervent prayer, and, after testifying to the help and comfort he had found in serving Christ, and exhorting his children to be faithful to the Saviour, he "fell asleep in Jesus." The chief's numerous friends in England will hear of his death with deep regret. A few days before he was taken ill, he spoke in warm appreciation of the reception the English accorded him in the year 1872.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE twentieth annual conference of the Midland District Union has been held in Worcester. A large and representative company was present. Mr. G. R. Robertson, of Shrewsbury, opened a conversation on "The deepening of the Spiritual Life of our Members." After a visit to the cathedral, an address, by Mr. A. E. Robinson, of Kettering, on "Our Spiritual Life and Work, was followed by a helpful discussion. The conference was felt to be one of the most helpful held since the formation of the Union. It was decided to hold the interim conference at Stafford in September.

A Convention has been held at Marple, when members of the Hyde, Ashton, Oldham, Stockport, and Manchester Y.M.C.A.'s and several Y.W.C.A.'s were present. The speakers wore Dr. Fenn, Mr. O. Brockbank, and Mr. A. K. Yapp. About 200 persons were present.

In connection with the Lancashire Forward Movement, inaugurated by the National Council some two years ago, twenty-three new associations have already been formed, and the majority of these are showing signs of great vitality. During April branches have been formed in Colne, Oswaldtwistle, and Middleton.

The Conference of General Secretaries will be held this year at Filey (June 15-22). Rev. Dr. Stalker is to deliver a course of theological lectures.

An urgent need exists to extend amongst the many thousands of young men in East London the influences of the Y.M.C.A., with its various agencies for ministering to the welfare of young manhood. In connection with the Forward Movement which is now in progress, it is hoped to raise £10,000 for the furtherance of the work. The secretary is Mr. F. L. Porter, 113, Hamilton House, Bishopsgate Street, E.C.

Saturday Bible Talks.

IN connection with the Saturday Afternoon Bible Talks to men at the Central Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate Street, E.C., Rev. F. B. Meyer has addressed the following letter to the members:—

"My Dear Brothers,—We have come to the end of another series of our Saturday Afternoon Bible Studies, which has been in many respects the most successful of any of my more than ten years' experience.

"We have never had such large attendances, so much interest, and such signs of Divine blessing, and every Saturday's experience convinces me of the superiority of the catechetical above every other kind of method of instruction. If the teacher knows the points he desires to enforce, it is possible for him to extract them from his audience by a system of questioning.

"To get some idea of how this may be done is one of the advantages in our fellowship, as it may affect your way of dealing with your classes and meetings in all time to come.

"We are becoming scattered in all parts of the world. Repeatedly in my journeys I come across men who look back to our meetings with affectionate interest and warm appreciation. I wish now that we had kept some record of their names. But, failing that, let me assure them that they are an integral part of the one great brotherhood, and I would be always glad to grasp their hands and welcome them at the close of the meeting. It would be sometimes well even for them to say a few hearty words.

"It has been very pleasant to study with you so much of the Word of God. The very best answer to modern attacks on the authority of the Bible is to study it and test it by the urgent demands of modern life. I think we have found it to be the power of God unto salvation. Again and again we have been moved, instructed, and inspired to noble living by the power which emanated from the sacred page, as fire from coal when kindled on the hearth.

"May God bless you, my dear young brothers, and help you in the great fight. Pray for me, as I for you, and may God give us many another session.

"Hoping to meet you in October,

"Yours very sincerely,

"F. B. Meyer."

Personalia.

Rev. Arthur Hall, who has been pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, Hastings, for ten years, has announced his decision to resign next October. Mr. Hall, who, it will be remembered, is a brother of Dr. Newman Hall, hopes to undertake special missions and other work.

The late Sir Douglas Maclagan belonged to a notable family of seven sons. One of them is the present Archbishop of York; another was a general in the army, and a supporter of the Church Missionary Society; a third held a secretarial office in connection with the Established Church of Scotland; a fourth was a United Presbyterian and a doctor at Berwick-upon-Tweed; while the fifth was a devoted elder of the Free Church of Scotland.

Rev. Dr. Talmage and his wife have arrived in England. Dr. Talmage will preach in the principal English cities, and also on the Continent, visiting Berlin, St. Petersburg, and Stockholm. While in London Dr. Talmage will have an interview with Lord George Hamilton concerning the sending of American aid for the relief of sufferers by the famine in India.

The aged evangelist, Mr. Joshua Poole, has lost his wife, who died recently, after months of suffering. Mr. Poole adds to a pathetic note on the subject: "I am an old man, and have been a worker more than forty years. I ask the prayers of your readers."

A Missionary Volunteer.—A correspondent at Marseilles writes: "I am much interested in an experienced English lady missionary now again offering her services gratuitously in the South of Europe. She was the only visitor to the Geneva prisons for some years, editor of a well-known journal in Switzerland, and author of several works in French. Her letters of introduction include one from Pastor Ed. Monod. The Bishop of Gibraltar has written in appreciation of her services at Marseilles. She seeks an opening for Christian undenominational effort elsewhere upon account of health." Communications addressed "Missionary," to our care, will be duly forwarded.

said:—"This popular sketch of the famous American Evangelist will be welcome to a very large circle of readers. Though it is necessarily concise, it furnishes a great deal of interesting information, in a simple and pleasing style."

From the Notices of the

which have appeared in the Religious Press, we take the following:—

The Preachers' Magazine says:—"A brief but excellent sketch of the great evangelist. Before long Mr. W. R. Moody hopes to issue a larger and complete memoir. This small volume is, however, exceedingly well done. A copy ought to be in every Sunday School library. Preachers will find much that they will be glad to note and to quote."

The King's Highway says:—"One of the most remarkable stories that ever was written, beginning with Mr. Moody's early life at Northfield, carrying us through all the scenes of his eventful career, and leading us on to his peaceful end in the town of his birth. But the book is not a bare chronicle. It reads like a romance, and is full of personal incident, amusing or pathetic. . . . In some respects Mr. Moody was the greatest man of his day. Like everyone else, we had read much of him and his work, but we are indebted to this book of one hundred and thirty pages for a much more perfect appreciation of his many-sided character."

Notes from New York.

DR. PURVES, late of Princeton, has begun his pastorate of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in succession to the late Dr. John Hall. For the first time in some twenty-five years female voices are being heard in the choir. Dr. Hall liked congregational singing led by a precentor, but of late the singing has been led by three or four gentlemen. Now the choir—or, rather, "quartette"—will consist of two gentlemen and two ladies.

Dr. Furry, Secretary of the New York Rescue Band, gives interesting details about life in our Chinatown here. There are four Buddhist temples in which worship is regularly carried on, and a Masonic Temple. There is also the Hip Tong Long, "the Temple of United Justice," which is really a Chinese Tammany Hall that compels tribute from all the Chinese merchants and traders, and will ruin the business of any man who displeases it. The Li On Society is made up of high-class merchants who are trying to get rid of the "highbinders," of the Hip Tong Long, but their task is an almost impossible one, because the latter is supported by all the gamblers and the bad elements. The population of Chinatown is about 10,000, and it has a government of its own—its own mayor, and its own judges. Slavery exists there. Not long ago a little girl belonging to the Doyer Street Sunday School told her teacher that she could not come any more, because her father had sold her to a man with whom she now had to live. There is also a traffic in American girls as well as Chinese.

The Volunteers of America (the movement under the direction of Mr. Ballington Booth, second son of General Booth of the Salvation Army) are opening their first home for wayward girls at Newark, New Jersey. A ten-roomed house has been placed at their disposal, rent free for the first year, and all the necessary furniture and appointments have been promised. The officers have about fifteen girls in sight, ready to go into the Home as soon as is open.

SAVING THE POLICE.

The work of the New York Police Association demonstrates the persevering devotion of workers who have continually to contend with circumstances that would bar many from their efforts, and would drive even more from pursuing them for very long. In a meeting a few days ago Miss Kendall and Dr. Howland gave some little account of their work, which has been going on for eight years. There are 7,500 policemen in this city, of whom only about fifteen or twenty per cent. are reached by the Association; of these one-half are always on duty when meetings are held, and many more are continually absent on furlough because of sickness, or other causes. The faith of the workers, backed by their toil, aims for the result of fifty saved policemen! This alone speaks loudly.

Dr. Howland's address went far to explain things. In the first place, any policeman who really did his duty according to law and to his conscience would probably be removed to a distant precinct, greatly to his inconvenience and loss in the majority of instances. The great reason for this is the fact that certain classes of lawbreakers pay large sums every month for protection from the police, and, the price having been paid, of course the "goods are delivered." To take one class only—the gamblers. The owners of gambling establishments pay no less than 3,095,000 dols. every year, in monthly payments, to the "Gambling Commission," consisting of a commissioner at the head of a city department, two State Senators, and the head of a syndicate of gambling-place proprietors.

The gamblers form only one set of lawbreakers. The liquor men and those interested in vice probably pay twice as much more; so that the police-constable's lot who would do his real duty is "not a happy one." The other Sunday Dr. Howland himself was passing a liquor shop, and, seeing a crowd round the doorway, went to investigate, and found that one man had stabbed another. As he passed on he saw a policeman a little way off, and said, "I think you're wanted over where that crowd is." The reply was, "If they want me, I guess they'll send for me." But the Association keeps on with its work, and has some experiences all the brighter, perhaps, because of their comparative fewness, to set against the dark ones.

The fact that the theatre is one of the most important strongholds of the vice of impurity seems to be dawning at last upon the American public, and in New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh agitations have been set on foot—and not without a measure of success—against some specially notorious evil plays and exhibitions. In Pittsburgh the Reform Bureau has started a movement in the Press and in preachers' meetings, followed up by a petition to the Mayor among business men, including an appeal for letters through the Federated Young People's Societies. There seems likely to be in that large city the adoption by the Mayor and police of a new policy that will at least keep plays of a specially vicious kind out of the city. Those who support this movement are urging "a resistless appeal to the Postmaster-General by petition and personal letters" to enforce the law against obscene matter in the mails by excluding as offenders at least the publishers of certain papers, magazines, and books that have been ruled off the platforms by several of the railroads.

About Books.

SERMONS BY DR. RYLE.

During many years the late Bishop of Liverpool has enjoyed a high reputation as a Christian author; his books include commentaries, biographies, and theological dissertations, not to mention in detail controversial pamphlets and episcopal charges. But he seems never to have published any sermons. In response to the appeal of friends, in view of his resignation of the see of Liverpool, he consented to a selection of his discourses being prepared for the press as a memorial of his sixty years' ministry. The result is a singularly attractive volume, entitled The Christian Race, and Other Sermons (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton).

The selection is thoroughly typical of Dr. Ryle's pulpit deliverances. After sermons on the primary facts and doctrines of the faith—Sin, Redemption, Regeneration, and Sanctification—come several on the duties of the Christian life; and then others on the coming of the Lord, the reward of the saints, and the heavenly rest. The pages will minister instruction and comfort to many. Archdeacon Madden, who has edited the book, says in a prefatory note: "Friends who knew of the preparation of these sermons for the press, have been praying that the 'message of God' which they contain may bring blessing to many thousands."

THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

To the student of Apostolic Christianity the Epistle to the Galatians suggests problems of peculiar importance. As a mere piece of writing, the Epistle has profound interest. But it is a contribution to the history of Asia Minor, as well as a statement of fundamental Christian principles. Galatia has been understood by different scholars as the name of two distinct countries. Critics and others have been led to ask the question—Were the churches of Galatia, to which the Apostle addressed the Epistle, certain congregations in the northern part of the great inner plateau of Asia Minor, variously enumerated by different advocates of the "North Galatian Theory"; or were they the congregations of Pisidian Antioch, Iconium, Derbe, and Lystra, in the southern part of the plateau, according to the "South Galatian Theory"?

Prolonged investigations, supported by personal research in various parts of Asia Minor, have qualified Professor W. M. Ramsay to answer this question in the light of large information and a thousand pertinent facts. To this task he addresses himself in A Historical Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians (12s. Hodder & Stoughton). The goodly volume is in two parts—the former being devoted to historical introduction on the general subject of society and religion in Central Asia Minor in the time of St. Paul; and the latter part to the commentary proper. In a word, Professor Ramsay contends, calmly and boldly, for what is known as the "South Galatian Theory," showing it to explain many of the difficulties that are associated with the Epistle on the more common "North Galatian" view.

While the first part of the book will have special attractions for scholars, the second will prove of service to all who would study the Epistle with care. The work is characterized by great candour on the part of the commentator; there is never a desire to make too much of positions that are tentative, or still subject to reasonable criticism. The entire work is written in a spirit of loyalty to Scripture authority, and is, in fact, calculated to establish the Epistle more firmly in the minds and hearts of thoughtful Christians. Professor Ramsay's book is very instructive reading. In the concluding chapter, he writes:—

"The letter fulfilled its purpose of rekindling the old feelings in the Galatic churches. Paul's confident expectation was justified. Acts completes the natural result of the Epistle. Soon after, the effect was confirmed by Paul's personal presence among these Galatians; he went through Galatic Lycaonia, and Galatic Phrygia, in order from first to last, 'stablishing all the disciples' (Acts xviii. 23). The great struggle was won; the religion of the first Roman province on the road to the West was determined as free and non-Judaistic; and that meant that the religion of the Roman Empire was determined."

The book is, as we say, one for students; and for them it will have great value, especially in expounding, in the light of the latest research, the marvellous Epistle with which it deals.

Notes & Comments

N spite of all that has been done for the famine-stricken natives of India by Governmental effort, supplemented by vate charity, the tidings which come m the affected districts tend to show t we have not yet realized the appalling aracter of the visitation. A description a scene at Ahmedabad, published in Tues- 's Standard, tells of an assembly of 200 ngs, old and young, famine personified.

The smell that arose from their filthy rags was kening, and had attracted myriads of flies that led on some of them. Some of the men, especially old ones, were mere bony frameworks. A girl kling two children was ghastly to look at. The le ones, with hollow temples, sunken eyes and eks, the napes of their necks falling in under skulls ch seemed to overbalance their emaciated bodies wisp-like arms and legs, were more dreadful still. ny of the people were suffering from disease. mbers had fever heavy upon them, the grim con- ion due to famine. Those who could work, and y were few, were sent on to where tanks were being . The others were also given a meal and passed o the poorhouse.

The number of deaths in territory directly der British control appears to be less than the Native States, for which lamentable fact eason is furnished in the assertion that ive subordinates, when acting alone, seize the asion to exploit the people, and defraud the workers he miserable pittance which is all the Government give to famine relief labourers.

Herein also lies a strong argument for help be sent through missionary channels. The sent condition of affairs must tend to bring ore the public mind the great question of nine prevention. In this connection we erve with interest the statement of The ndard correspondent, that in Hissar, the y centres which have escaped the general fering are the irrigated villages. Our ders will be pleased to note, on page 25, ne account of the work of obtaining and warding food stuffs, which it has been our asure to undertake.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor remains in an eedingly critical condition, and in extreme bleness. Since he fell ill ten days ago, he been three times, seemingly, at the point death; consciousness has now returned. ch prayer is ascending on his behalf.

After three weeks of affectionate intercourse h her Irish subjects, the Queen returned to s country delighted with the results of her visit, and having quickened the seeds of loyalty throughout the Irish nation. Her Majesty's health, too, has been greatly benefited. It is a matter for devout thankfulness to God, that no untoward incident marred the course of the visit, or interfered with the carrying out of its pacific purpose. Such an exhibition of mutual goodwill and love as has been shown, will do much to remove the memory of very different relations that have at times existed between Ireland and Britain. The Queen has successfully fulfilled one of her most exalted functions in this act, which we all trust will definitely close one chapter and open another in the history of the Emerald Isle—an end greatly to be desired.

A contemporary in an interesting paper dealing with the religious life of the Queen states that:—

> In sickness or in health, in all times of sorrow and distress, and in the moments of greatest triumph, she has put her trust in God. The Bible has been the daily guide of her life, and prayer the solace of her darkest hour. . . . The Queen's Bible and Prayer Book, large and well-worn copies, have a special table assigned to them in the private sitting-room, whether at Osborne, Windsor, or Balmoral, and they accompany her on Continental journeys, and are placed each morning ready for her use when she is travelling by rail, or on board the Royal Yacht. . . . The Queen has always observed Sunday as a day of rest from business transactions.

The centenary of William Cowper's death has just come and gone. That gentle, melancholy spirit left many splendid memorials of his genius behind him; but he will be remembered longer for his hymns than for any of his longer poems, or even his charming letters. These hymns have been sung by three generations of believers and seekers after God. Perhaps the best known is that which has brought comfort to countless dismayed and perplexed ones—"God moves in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform." Even that, however, cannot match those lines in which he puts his heart's spiritual anguish and deliverance with such pathetic truth and beauty:—

> I was a stricken deer that left the herd
> Long since; with many an arrow deep infixed
> My panting side was charged, when I withdrew
> To seek a tranquil death in distant shades.
> There was I found by One who had Himself
> Been hurt by archers. In his side He bore
> And in his hands and feet the cruel scars,
> With gentle force soliciting the darts,
> He drew them forth, and healed and bade me live.

As time goes on, the country will realize more and more that, in the death of the Duke of Argyll, we have lost a truly religious statesman and writer, who took his stand consistently through his long life on the side of faith, and who wrote in its defence with vigour and competency at a time when that tide was sweeping far out on the ebb. His firm resistance against the forces of materialism, his acute criticism of Darwinism in its confident supersession of the doctrines of Providence and the Divine purpose, and his ever-trenchant articles against such opponents of the Christian religion as Huxley and Harrison, served a most important purpose at a critical time. Just now the force of intellectual unbelief seems to have spent itself; all honour to the courageous band who stood in the breach when it was almost victorious. The Duke's personal piety was unquestionable; and he always had the manhood to stand by his convictions. His removal adds another to the list of noblemen and statesmen who, in the last generation, bore a clear and fervent witness for religion.

The Baptist Union President, Rev. W. Cuff, has placed his finger on the weakest spot in modern theology in dealing with the "Holy Spirit, the Life and Power of our Institutions." There is something almost antagonistic in the two ideas united in this striking heading. We are accustomed to think of the Holy Spirit as free and untrammelled, and there are many people who seem to think that institutionalism of any kind, even under the form of the Church, is inimical to the enjoyment of the Spirit's presence. In that case so much the worse for the institutions, which should be channels, and not trammels, for his inflowing power into the hearts of believing men. It is not institutions that hinder Him in his saving and inspiring work, but the too ready dependence which we show on them as such. In order to make religious organizations fulfil their purpose, we must ever remember that they are subsidiary to the Unseen Power for whose use they exist, as the river-bed exists for the stream that flows down from the mountains. The address was timely, eloquent, and worthy of careful study.

The testimony as to the rapid progress of the Protestant movement in the French nation, given by ex-priests at the St. James' Hall the other Sunday, was most encouraging. The Abbé Bourrier said that of 36,000,000 avowed Roman Catholics in France, there are not 6,000,000 genuine. They are deserting their churches in multitudes. During the last two years 130 priests have come out from the Catholic Church, sacrificing everything for the faith. Great popular assemblies hear them with enthusiasm, and the French people are now coming to see that a religious reformation is practicable and imminent. This movement towards light and freedom has so far progressed at a much faster rate than the Oxford Movement which began sixty years ago in such a small way, and which to-day has so completely dominated the English Church system. In England towards Rome, under a false estimate of facts; in France, and Austria, and Spain, away from Rome, because the facts are only too well understood.

The cordial message of goodwill and friendship towards the British nation from the German Emperor which the Daily Express was privileged to publish in its first issue, added to the recent pacific utterances of President Loubet, is a welcome proof that whatever misunderstanding of our aims and intentions as a people may exist on the Continent, we have nothing to fear from the responsible leaders of our two most powerful neighbours across the Channel. It is well-known that the Emperor of Russia is inspired with similarly friendly feelings towards us. Unless untoward circumstances arise, therefore, there is no reason to be alarmed at the virulent tone still taken up by many of the Continental papers. These facts should be carefully remembered in view of a certain campaign of militarism which will be initiated for the purposes of permanently strengthening our army and navy when the present war is over. Britain's safety in the future, as in the past, will be attained better by avoiding embarrassing alliances than by competing with the great military nations in their oppressive and wasteful armaments.

The annual reunion of the (Roman) Catholic Association, a few days ago, was taken advantage of to make a reference to the Queen's visit to Ireland as a "kind act in visiting, of her own accord, a Catholic country which had suffered so much for the faith." Candid historians trace and attribute most of the sorrows of the sister island to the domination of Rome—that blind leadership of the blind which has been defined by a recent writer as a "stifling ecclesiasticalism," with its suppression of the Bible. At the same gathering Father Vaughan expressed his hope that the Association

Would show sympathy to all classes and creeds. They knew nothing of compromise or comprehension, but they should build the walls of separation so low that they could shake hands with those on the other side.

In other words, to shake hands with that spiritual factor which Cardinal Vaughan has stigmatized as "religious rebellion and sporadic dissent."

Bishop Potter, of New York, has returned from the foreign mission field with his prejudices against missionaries entirely dissipated. His indignation against the Spanish Catholic missionaries in the Philippines, however, knows no bounds. He says that the exactions and oppressions of the priests was such that the Filipino revolt was literally the uprising of an outraged people. They were robbed, their lands wrung from them, the very administration of the Sacraments taxed by the Jesuit priests whose business it was to commend the Gospel of the free love of God to these poor people. No marriage can be celebrated by a Romish priest without certificates of baptism and confirmation from both parties, and of confession to a priest immediately preceding the marriage, which must each be paid for at a price ranging from £1 to 30s.

It is, indeed, no wonder that the Christian faith has suffered from such exponents. It will be one of the hardest, and, at the same time, the highest tasks of the American people to reverse this wicked and disastrous policy, and to remedy its mischiefs by a simple and worthy proclaiming of the truth.

A lack in man, a fulness in God—this is the perpetual witness of the soul; and the answer of religion to man's cry of inability to satisfy his sense of need is in Jesus Christ, who has bridged the gulf, and brought the love and grace of God within the reach of all. There are many natural analogies of this spiritual longing and its satisfaction. There are enough resources in nature for the supply of all human need, but how to bring the two things together—that is the problem that science, with her contrivances and ingenuities, is perpetually attempting to solve.

But neither science, nor invention, nor art, can satisfy the soul's needs; there is no way of attaining that end from the human side. The well of desire is deep, but man has nothing wherewith he may draw. Nevertheless the Divine Voice has been heard, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him, a well of water springing up into eternal life." And Christ has abundantly, gloriously justified his promise in those who have come to Him.

We are glad to see the Archbishop of Canterbury, himself a total abstainer, taking a courageous position in regard to the need for temperance legislation of a drastic nature; and, in speaking at the annual meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society, declaring that "there must be no stopping to rest." A very unpleasant light is cast, however, upon the temporizing attitude of the Ministry in regard to the destructive drink traffic, by the Archbishop's statement that "it was a troublesome question, and Ministers would not like to burn their fingers by touching it." All the more need, therefore, for united action on the part of all Christian men and women who wish to bring about the desired reforms.

The Church Review, which of late has advocated "the need of the Sacrament of Penance to cleanse from mortal sin," dealing in the current number with the question of Reservation, presses the need of urgency at the Throne of Grace—"above all, at Holy Mass, and in our visits to the Blessed Sacrament"—and urges that there should be no failure "to ask the intercession of Holy Mary and of all Saints in this behalf." After utterances of this nature, it is not surprising to find in the same paper allusions to "ignorant Protestantism," and suggestions as to the use of rosaries in church, especially during "the approaching Month of Mary."

We are surprised to find a leaflet headed "Ought Churchmen to go to Chapels?" announced as obtainable from the Church House, Westminster. We were under an impression that that institution was intended for higher objects than the dissemination of narrow-minded and illogical compositions of this kind. The writer endeavours to show that Christ established a society, "THE Church;" that this body, "the old and only Church," and no other, was to be his organ and instrument for saving and blessing men; and that, however corrupt this society, the Church, may be, we must not leave it, must not set up a new society, even if it is purer; must not join a rival community, even if it be composed of better men.

Although it is admitted that "Church and Chapel believe in the same God," and chapels have done much good; yet "to set up or support new bodies of Christians is to act against God." And this is supposed to be suitable literature for intelligent people!

The Home Magazine has been making a calculation of the amount of good that might be done with the amount that is calculated to have been spent by Great Britain on the war up to the end of March, which reaches the appalling sum of £114,000,000:—

It would (it says) maintain every aged poor person in the United Kingdom, educate all our millions of children, support all our paupers, replace every pound spent throughout the kingdom on every form of missionary and charitable work, endow all our hospitals, support every church and chapel with their tens of thousands of ministers, maintain thousands of convalescent homes, libraries, and museums, equip and support thousands of technical schools, pay for an army of 50,000 missionaries, supply coals, blankets, and medical comforts to millions, and still leave millions more to spend on similar works of usefulness.

In the face of this vivid statement, it seems incomprehensible that any nation should be ready to make such sacrifices (apart from the loss of life, the suffering, and the industrial paralysis) that result from war, while the causes that aim at the well-being and progress of humanity should find so much difficulty in procuring funds for their maintenance. All this proves in a humiliating manner that we are still very far from being truly civilized as a race, and that the fighting instinct is still one of the most powerful in the human heart.

Do we each try to gauge the extent of our responsibility in regard to crime and sin, and grief and shame, for or by which our fellow-creatures suffer? We talk about the wickedness and misery in the slums and back streets of our large cities and great towns, the destitution and poverty and the irreligion all around us, and with a word of pity and sympathy we are apt to put the painful subject aside. This leaves it entirely to others to do something t lessen the burdens carried by those who wer born to a heritage of salvation, and of whor our Lord and Master has assured us that it i not the will of our Father in heaven that on of them should perish. "Am I my brother keeper?" can only be answered in the affirma tive. Surely all have it in their power t alleviate one sorrow, to soften one grief, t carry God's Gospel of life and light into th darkness and lovelessness of one human being soul.

We have often referred to the importanc and value of women's work in connection wit evangelistic and other efforts, and it is gratify ing to find that in municipal work of a stron philanthropic tendency the beneficial help o women is beginning to tell. One lady—Mrs Evans, a member of the Vestry of St. Martin in-the-Fields—serves industriously upon seve committees, and is also an overseer of the poo Another, Miss Kenny, of the St. George-the Martyr Vestry, brings to her manifold dutie an experience of three years' hospital training and eight years' sick nursing of the poor i their own homes. The work of women such a these is far reaching, and is invaluable in th direction of making life in the back street cleaner and healthier, and, so far, of pre paring the way of the Lord.

In a paper headed with the bold assertion "Science Nears the Secret of Life," in a leading monthly magazine, it is stated tha the biologists who are engaged in the futil search are believers in the chemical theory o life, or, to use the words of the writer, the have believed that life originated on the earth through the combi nation, in the course of the natural evolution of th world, of the chemicals which compose simple pro toplasmic cells.

We have, of course, read statements lik this every now and again for years back, an they are generally the prelude to the announce ment of the immediate discovery of the secre of life, a discovery which baffles the psued scientists of to-day just as it did their prede cessors. They can mix the combination o chemicals required to form the cell, but th breath of life is beyond their control. We d not care to anticipate what will happen "whe the chemical theory of life is definitely formu lated," because we do not believe that the biolo gists are any nearer to the discovery than thei predecessors were, and we prefer to accept th inspred statement that the gift of life is God's

"Our Father."

FATHER, a little child, I come
To place my trembling hand in thine;
It is not mine to question why
The road is rough, steep the incline.
My hope and trust is all in Thee,
For Jesu's sake my Guardian be.

Father, a wayward child, I come
To ask Thee but to lead the way.
Oft have I wandered; now I long
For ever by thy side to stay.
My hope and trust is all in Thee,
For Jesu's sake my Guardian be.

Father, a trustful child, I come
To claim of Thee a father's love.
Chide me, correct me, not in wrath;
But fit me for my home above.
My hope and trust is all in Thee,
For Jesus' sake my Guardian be.

Father, a thankful child, I come
To praise Thee for the Gift Divine—
Thine only Son, who suffered death
That I might be for ever thine.
My hope and trust is all in Thee,
For ever then my Guardian be.

Theatre-Going Christians.

THERE can be little doubt that, in many respects, it is more difficult for our sons and daughters to lead a truly "separated" Christian life than it was, say, thirty years ago. Puritanism lingered in the dress, social customs, manner of Sabbath-keeping, and in the recreations of the people. The great revivals, such as followed the preaching of George Fox, Whitefield, and Wesley, had, each in their turn, a marked influence on all these departments of life. But the last-mentioned, viz., the recreations, is of serious import, and cannot be ignored in a day when it is not only considered imperatively necessary to be amused, but when it almost ceases to be a pleasure, because it is treated so much like a business!

Fathers and mothers there are in abundance who must have been frequently confronted with the inquiry, "Why may we not go to the theatre?" and this from sons and daughters not necessarily headstrong, wilful, or disobedient, but because "So-and-so does it, why may not I?" To complicate matters, the parents may, because of their importunity, yield in a moment of weakness, and withdraw their opposition provided they select "a good play." We all know what "the thin edge of the wedge" means, and, unfortunately, when people who may be excellent in themselves, and possess many virtues, forget the principle involved, their influence is seriously weakened; and this not only in their immediate circle, but possibly amongst fellow Church members or younger Christians, who had looked to them for example and guidance. The edge of the precipice is a dangerous place, and it is wiser to walk as far from it as possible.

We are frequently hearing with surprise of one and another who, it may be, had been brought up as strictly as ourselves, whose parents would, like our own, have forbidden what they called "mixing the Church and the world," but who, losing sight (as we think) of what we called just now the principle involved, are suffering themselves to be led into space forbids our entering upon a thorough discussion of the subject; but readers of THE CHRISTIAN will suffer a word of exhortation, and we would commend to them the simple old-fashioned formula, "Never go to a place of amusement where you would be afraid to meet death, nor engage in anything on which you cannot ask the Divine blessing." Thank God, some of us were brought up on this and similar teaching, and, rigorous as it may sound to modern ears, it has safeguarded many, and kept them in a path which—though it lacks the excitement now so eagerly sought after, and bearing as it does the reproachful designation of narrow—is one of peace, security, and even glory.

This subject of amusements, therefore, is one that parents cannot ignore, and to which much prayerful consideration should be given. Surely there never was greater need for taking a definite, bold stand on the side of purity and right living, than there is to-day.

Even William Charles Macready, whose moral character was above suspicion, and who had ample opportunity of observing the difficulties and temptations of a theatrical career, and their effect on both men and women, never, so it is said, permitted his children to enter a theatre, except on the night of his farewell performance, lest its fascinations should ensnare them, and lead to their adopting a profession which he was most unwillingly compelled (through force of his early circumstances) to pursue.

This and similar testimony is worthy of thoughtful consideration. The novelist, Balzac, wrote that in the theatre "a sort of malaria that infects the soul seems to lurk. The solemnity and reality of life disappear!" What recreation, in its true sense, can be obtained from such sources and surroundings? We can well believe that, in the early days of the drama, when plays were acted by light of day and in the open air, and women were not allowed to take part, some healthy, legitimate amusement might have been obtained from it; but we can hardly walk through our streets to-day, or go on a railway journey, without having forced upon our attention advertisements which shock our sense of propriety, and run counter to all our traditions of modesty and good taste! And these, forsooth, to emphasize the fact that the women of our people (God help us!) are to be seen, under conditions in every respect the reverse of elevating, enacting their part, not in the legitimate drama of life, but in "scenes" which it may be, or should be, revolting to contemplate! To such scenes shall we take our children?

If into a tumbler of sparkling water you drop but a small quantity of ink, it may not darken it, but the water can never again be pure. It has been well said that "the superficial life may not be wrong in itself, but inasmuch as it is sensuous and soulish, it prevents our dwelling in the region of deep, spiritual experience."

We have then to take our choice; to count the cost of "Separation." The costliest pearls lie beneath the surface; but they are of great price, and are worth the seeking! Let us throw any weight of influence we may possess into the right scale, and, in the true spirit of temperance, endeavour to do nothing, while the world standeth, to make our brother to offend.

"To Him that Overcometh."

(Rev. ii. 7, 11, 17, 26: iii. 5, 12, 21.)

"To him that overcometh"—
O wondrous sevenfold chime,
The Master's voice in music
Floats down the stream of Time.
"To him that overcometh
I give the fruit to eat,
Of that fair tree that groweth
For God's own garden meet.
"And he that overcometh
May rest from all alarm,
The second death shall never Have power to do him harm.
"To him that overcometh
I give a pure white stone,
Thereon a new name written,
And manna yet unknown.
"To him that overcometh
I grant the Morning Star,
And power to rule the nations
Of earth, both near and far.
"And him that overcometh,
I clothe in raiment white,
His name in Life's Book keeping,
And owning in God's sight.
"And he that overcometh
Shall be a pillar fair,
And ever in God's temple
His name and Mine shall bear.
"Yea, he that overcometh
Shall sit upon My throne,
And unto endless ages
As victor shall be known."
O make us hear, blest Master,
Thy Spirit's sweet refrain,
And, by thy blood o'ercoming,
These glorious joys to gain.

Suggestive Readings.

Did God permit sin that He might manifest his love?

ON Easter Sunday a good man and true, a sound Evangelical, preached on the Resurrection of our Lord and of our resurrection in Him. This is the essence of the Gospel of God, which is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, because his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead. And the exceeding greatness of his power, to usward who believe, is according to the might of his power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality and power, and might and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this age but also in that which is to come. Let us read and meditate on Rom. i. 1-16 and Ephes. i. 15-23, that the eyes of our heart may be enlightened, that we may fully know the hope of his calling, and the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints.

The preacher referred to, however, made one remark which, while it would, perhaps, be generally accepted by Evangelical teachers, seems, on account of its importance, to require very close consideration. It was to this effect: The great purpose of God was the manifestation of his love, even to the uttermost of self-sacrifice, in the redemption of man by the death of his Son. To this end He permitted sin to enter into the world.

Does not this raise a greater difficulty than that which it is intended to explain? Is it an adequate or an of God? If we could conceive of a man permitting some terrible disaster to happen in order that his self-sacrificing love might be manifested in delivering the sufferers from its consequences, at the risk or even at the cost of his own life, we should more than question the love and the wisdom of the act. What would be morally wrong in the creature would not be right in the Creator. There would be a mixture of motive which could not exist in the transparent God.

We must go farther back if we would arrive at a true view of the entry of sin and its consequences, and of the love of God manifested in the gift of his beloved Son for our redemption.

Man was not the first creature of God who sinned. Lucifer—the Shining One—probably the highest angel next the throne, permitted the thought of pride to take root in his heart, until it grew into a word and an act, and he said, "I will sit in the seat of God; I will be like the Most High; I am God" (Isa. xiv.; Ezek. xxviii).

Such a claim once made must be put to the test. "Prove all things." "Try the spirits."

GOD ACTS UPON HIS OWN PRECEPTS.

A question had been sprung upon the universe which could only be answered by proving and testing the claim. Can the creature govern in the place of the Creator? The fallen spirit, in being permitted to enter into Paradise, to tempt the newly-formed creature to his fall, and to assume the princedom of which he had defrauded Adam, was put to the test as to whether he was competent to rule this small part of the creation of God, to the government of the whole of which he had aspired.

And not only the tempter was put to the test—a test which has lasted 6,000 years, and which is surely near its close—but God Himself was proved. How would the Only Wise, the Almighty Creator and Ruler, act in such an event as this? With infinite wisdom He confined the experiment of the usurper's rule to one little world. With infinite patience and meekness He has seen him bring blight on that which He had made and pronounced very good; and if we may reason from the analogy of Bible history, when the iniquity of the god of this world is full, the hour of his imprisonment will have come; for the great crises of history have always been of this character—the execution of judgment on iniquity come to the full. In illustration of this it is enough to mention the days of Noah and of Lot; of Babel and of Joshua; of Nebuchadnezzar and of Belshazzar; our Lord's denunciation, "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers;" and his weeping lament, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!"

Must we not say that God did not permit sin to come into the world in order that He might make manifest his love in redeeming it by the sacrifice of Himself in the Son of his love; but that rebellion came into heaven and earth in defiance of God, and that the way He took to meet it was the only possible way? For there is only one right way, as there is only one straight line between two points, and that is the way God necessarily takes. He did not permit sin to enter in, in order that He might make manifest his love; but sin having entered, it became the occasion for the revelation of his wisdom and righteousness, his love and grace and power, in Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. Youth and Age.

WHY is it that nearly all those who write of youth and age throw all the beautiful reflections on to youth? One rarely, if ever, finds a poet or novelist crediting age with anything beautiful. Why is it?

Have you ever made a study of the two types? On the face of the young girl you may have the bloom of youth and health, the look of eager expectancy, as though everything might be possible to hope for or attain. There may be fascination in the very thoughtlessness of expression, but as a rule there is an absence of the depth of feeling without which there can never be the spirituelle, soulful beauty which comes through suffering. As the steel must go through the furnace to be refined, so must the soul pass through its crucible of sorrows, before it can be characterized by real beauty and depth of expression.

Contrast a woman who is no longer young, but who has had her trials and made her sacrifices. She has perhaps lost her dear ones, and may have held the hand of a beloved husband or parent, or sister or brother, and have watched them embarking on

THE VOYAGE OF ETERNITY.

To have loved and lost, and passed through the refining fire of great sorrow, gives to the face a beauty and depth of expression which is impossible to the most beautiful and youthful face that has not come under such influence.

To conclude that there is no beauty in age is sad indeed. Sad to the young, for they must feel that beyond their youth, which passes all too quickly, there is nothing but indifference; while to the aged it may provoke the inquiry—Is life worth living? Is it worth while to cultivate the mind if all charm must pass with youth, which is at best represented by a few short years—really the smallest part of our lives?

It were better to teach that we should so live in youth as to be beautiful in after years. Can one conceive anything more beautiful than a life refined by sorrow—the life of one who has fought nobly and bravely, has overcome temptations, and lived a life of duty, honour, and rectitude? It is these qualities that give grandeur and refinement to the face.

City Workwomen.—Owing to unforeseen circumstances, it has been found impossible to hold the annual sale of work in aid of the funds of the Convalescent Home for City Young Workwomen. It is desirable that the funds of the institution should not suffer in consequence; and, in view of this, the secretary (Miss Mary Reynolds) writes: "We shall be glad to forward collecting-boxes to friends willing to subscribe." Copies of the eighteenth annual report and other information may be obtained from Miss Reynolds, Invercloy, Woodford Wells, Essex.

John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

His First Ministry. Luke iii.

THIRTY years had left their mark on the Forerunner. The aged priest and his wife, Elisabeth, had been carried to their grave by other hands than those of the young Nazarite. The story of his miraculous birth, and the expectations it had aroused, had almost died out of the memory of the countryside. For many years John had been living in the caves that indent the limestone rocks of the desolate wilderness which extends from Hebron to the western shores of the Dead Sea. By the use of the scantiest fare, and roughest garb, he had brought his body under complete mastery.

From nature, from the inspired page, and from direct fellowship with God, he had received revelations which are only vouchsafed to those who can stand the strain of discipline in the school of solitude and privation. He had carefully pondered also the signs of the times, of which he received information from the Bedouin and others with whom he came in contact. Blended with all other thoughts, John's heart was filled with the advent of Him, so near akin to himself, who, to his certain knowledge, was growing up, a few months his junior, in an obscure highland home, but who was speedily to be manifested to Israel.

At last the moment arrived for him to utter the mighty burden that pressed upon him; and in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness—"Repent! the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

It was as though a

SPARK HAD FALLEN ON DRY TIMBER.

The startling tidings spread with wonderful rapidity that in the wilderness of Judæa one was to be met who recalled the memory of the great prophets, and whose burning eloquence was of the same order as of Isaiah or Ezekiel. Instantly people began to flock to him from all sides. From lip to lip the tidings sped of a great leader and preacher, who had suddenly appeared.

I.—Many causes accounted for John's immense popularity. The office of the Prophet was almost obsolete. Several centuries, as we have seen, had passed since the last great prophet had finished his testimony. The oldest man living at that time could not remember having seen a man who had ever spoken to a prophet. It seemed as unlikely, to adopt the phrase of another, that another prophet should arise in that formal, materialistic age, as that another Gothic cathedral should be added to the splendid remains of Gothic glory which tell us of those bygone days when there were giants in the land.

Moreover, John gave such abundant evidence of sincerity—of reality. His independence of anything that this world could give made men feel that whatever he said was inspired by his direct contact with things as they literally were. He spoke what he knew, and testified what he had seen. His accent of conviction was unmistakable.

When men see the professed prophet of the Unseen and Eternal as keen after his own interests as any worldling, shrewd at a bargain, captivated by show, obsequious to the titled and wealthy; when they discover the man who predicts the dissolution of all things carefully investing the proceeds of the books in which he publishes his predictions, they are apt to reduce their faith in his words to a minimum. But there was no trace of this in the Baptist, and therefore the people went forth to him.

Above all, he appealed to their moral convictions, and, indeed, expressed them. The people knew that they were not as they should be. How marvellous is the fascination which he exerts over men who will speak to their innermost souls! It is in direct appeal to heart and conscience that the servant of God exerts his supreme and unrivalled power. John rebuked Herod for many things, but still the royal offender sent for him again and again and heard him gladly.

It is expressly said that John saw many Pharisees and Sadducees coming to his baptism (Matt. iii. 7). Their advent appears to have caused him some surprise. "Ye offspring of vipers, who warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" The strong epithet he used of them suggests that they came as critics because they were unwilling to surrender the leadership of the religious life of Israel, and were anxious to keep in touch with the new movement, until they could sap its vitality, or divert its force into the channels of their own influence.

But it is quite likely that in many cases there were deeper reasons. The Pharisees were in their day who would wrangle about the breadth of a phylactery, and decide to an inch how far a man might walk on the Sabbath day; but the mere externals of religion will never permanently satisfy the soul made in the likeness of God. Ultimately it will turn from them with a great nausea and an insatiable desire for the living God. As for the Sadducees, they were the materialists of the time. The reaction of superstition, it has been said, is to infidelity, and the reaction from Pharisaism to Sadduceeism. Disgusted and outraged by the trifling of the literalists of Scripture interpretation, the Sadducee denied that there was an eternal world and a spiritual state, and asserted that "there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit." But

THE RITUALISTS AND FORMALISTS

MERE NEGATION CAN NEVER SATISFY.

The heart still moans out its sorrow under the darkness of agnosticism, as the ocean sighing under a starless midnight. Nature's instincts are more cogent than reason. It was hardly to be wondered at, then, that these two great classes were largely represented in the crowds that gathered on the banks of the Jordan.

II.—Let us briefly enumerate the main burden of the Baptist's preaching. (1) "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." To a Jew that phrase meant the re-establishment of the theocracy, and a return to those great days in the history of his people when God Himself was Lawgiver and King. Had not Daniel predicted that in the days of the last of the great empires prefigured in Nebuchadnezzar's dream the God of heaven would set up a kingdom which should never be destroyed, which should break in pieces all other kingdoms and stand for ever? Had he not foreseen a time when one like unto a son of man should come to the Ancient of Days to receive a dominion which should not pass away, and a kingdom which should not be destroyed? Had he not foretold that the greatness of kingdoms under the whole heaven should be given to the saints of the Most High? Surely, then, all these anticipations were on the eve of fulfilment. The long expected Messiah was at hand, and here was the forerunner described by Isaiah, the prophet saying:—

> The voice of one crying in the wilderness,
> Make ye ready the way of the Lord,
> Make his paths straight.

But some misgiving must have passed over the minds of his hearers when they heard the young prophet's description of the conditions and accompaniments of that long-looked-for reign. Instead of dilating on the material glory of the Messianic period, far surpassing the magnificent splendour of Solomon, he insisted on the fulfilment of certain necessary preliminary requirements, which lifted the whole conception of the anticipated reign to a new level, in which the inward and spiritual took precedence of the outward and material.

It was the old lesson, which in every age requires repetition, that unless a man is born again, and from above, he cannot see the Kingdom of God. Verily, no outward circumstances, however propitious and favourable, can bring about true blessedness. We might be put into the midst of heaven itself, and yet be poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked, except the heart were in loving union with the Lamb, who is in the midst of the throne. Life must be centred in Christ if it is to be concentric with all the circles of heaven's bliss. We can never be at rest or happy whilst we expect to find our fresh springs in outward circumstances. It is only when we are right with God that we are blessed and at rest.

(2) Alongside the proclamation of the kingdom was the

on "the wrath to come." When the wheat is reaped, it is bound in sheaves and carted to the threshing-floor, which is generally a circular spot of hard ground from 50ft to 100ft in diameter. On this the wheat is threshed from the chaff by manual labour, but the two lie intermingled till the evening, when the grain is caught up in broad shovels or fans, and thrown against the evening breeze; thus the light chaff is borne away, whilst the wheat falls heavily to the earth. Likewise, cried the Baptist, there shall be a very careful process of discrimination, before the unquenchable fires are lighted; so that none but chaff shall be consigned to the flames—a prediction which was faithfully fulfilled. At first Christ drew all men to Himself; but, as his ministry proceeded, He revealed their quality. A few were permanently attracted to Him, the majority were as definitely repelled. There was no middle class. Men were either for or against Him; the sheep on this side, the goats on that; the five wise virgins, and the five foolish; those who entered the strait gate, and those who flocked down the broad way that leadeth to destruction. So it has been in every age. Jesus Christ is the touchstone of trial. Our attitude towards Him

REVEALS THE TRUE QUALITY OF THE SOUL.

There would also be a period of probation. "The axe laid to the root of the trees" is familiar enough to those who knew anything of forestry. The woodsman barks some tree which seems to him to be occupying space capable of being put to better use. There is no undue haste. It is only after severe and searching scrutiny that the word goes forth: "Cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?" But when once that word is spoken, there is no appeal.

Perhaps this may be the case with one of my readers. You have been planted on a favourable site, and have drunk in the dews and rain and sunshine of God's providence; but what fruit have you yielded in return? Has he looked for grapes, and lo, you have brought forth only wild grapes? He may well consider the advisability of removing you from the stewardship, which you have used for your own emolument, and not for his glory.

For all such there must be "wrath to come." After there has been searching scrutiny, and investigation, and every reasonable chance has been given for amendment, and still the soul is impenitent and disobedient, there must be a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation."

The fire of John's preaching had its primary fulfilment, probably, in the awful disasters which befell the Jewish people, culminating in the siege and fall of Jerusalem. We know how marvellously the little handful of believers which had been gathered out by the preaching of Christ and his disciples were accounted worthy to escape all those things that came to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man. But the unbelieving mass of the Jewish people were, as worthless chaff and unfruitful trees, assigned to those terrible fires, which have left a scar on Palestine to this day.

But there was a deeper meaning. The wrath of God avenges itself, not on nations but on individual sinners. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." The penalty of sin is inevitable. The wages of sin is death.

We are told that "under the first covenant, every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; the man that set at nought Moses' law died without compassion, on the word of two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment shall he be judged worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, and done

DESPITE TO THE SPIRIT OF GRACE!"

It is for want of a vision of the inevitable fate of the godless and disobedient, that much of our present-day preaching is so powerless and ephemeral. You cannot get crops out of the land merely by summer showers and sunshine; there must be the subsoil ploughing, the pulverising frost, the wild March wind. And only when we modern preachers have seen sin as God sees it, and begin to apply the divine standard to the human conscience; only when our eagerness and yearning well over into our eyes and broken tones; only when we know the terror of the Lord, and begin to persuade men as though we would pluck them out of the fire, by our strenuous expostulation and entreaties—shall we see the effects that followed the preaching of the Baptist, when soldiers, publicans, Pharisees, and scribes, crowded around him, saying, "What shall we do?"

All John's preaching, therefore, led up to the demand for repentance. The word which was oftenest on his lips was "Repent ye!" It was not enough to plead direct descent from Abraham, or outward conformity with the Levitical and Temple rites. God could raise up children to Abraham from the stones of the river bank. There must be the renunciation of sin, the definite turning to God, the bringing forth of fruit meet for an amended life. In no other way could the people be prepared for the coming of the Lord.

"Everlasting Glory."

In the present war the writer lost a dear young nephew, only twenty-three, a lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders. He was shot while giving water to a wounded Boer.

How should a soldier die?
Leading a lightning charge,
Scorning the cannon's breath,
Winning a victor's wreath;
That were a glorious death.

How should a soldier die?
Struck by the fever stroke,
Cheering his men to the last,
Holding his fortress fast.
Give him the conqueror's meed,
'Tis harder to suffer than lead.

How should a soldier die?
Bearing a wounded friend
Far from the blazing zone,
Saving a life with his own.
That would be nobler still,
'Tis braver to save than kill.

How should a soldier die?
Soothing a foeman's pain,
Slaking a burning lip
With the flask he fain would sip—
Killed in an act of love.
Nobler a death like this
Than the grandest man can crave;
For 'tis nearest the death of Christ,
Who died our souls to save.

January, 1900. ALFRED J. BEGBIE.

Christian Life Illustrated.

FLOWERS—TESTIMONY.

EVERY living object in nature is a picture of spiritual life and blessing, and perhaps one of the best illustrations of Christian testimony is found in the bright, sweet, beautiful flowers. Christian life, like flowers, is intended to be pure, fragrant, and useful; and just as flowers are fragrant, both in the field and in the garden, so Christians must be gracious both in the world and in the Church. Let us look at the flowers.

1. The Root of the Flower.—An illustration of life. A hidden, preserved life. (Col. ii. 6, 7; Eph. iii. 17.)

2. The Strength of the Flower.—An emblem of growth. Strength and vigour, the measure of growth. (Eph. iv. 11; 2 Pet. iii. 18; Col. i. 11; Hos. xiv. 5; Luke xii. 27.)

3. The Bud of the Flower.—A sign of hope. The promise of beauty and blessing. (Prov. viii. 17; Acts xi. 23; Col. i. 27.)

4. The Bloom of the Flower.—A picture of grace. A reflection of the sun's virtues. (S. of Sol. ii. 2; Isa. xxxv. 2.)

5. The Sweetness of the Flower.—A mark of testimony. The fragrant speech of a living witness. (John xiii. 35; Gal. v. 23.)

6. The Usefulness of the Flower.—A figure of service. Living and working for God. (Matt. vi. 28 and 29.)

7. The Seed of the Flower.—A measure of fruit. The end of life—testimony and service (John xv. 8; 1 Peter ii. 9). Flowers have been called the smiles of God's goodness, silent preachers of God's Love, living witnesses of the Resurrection, and emblems of Jesus, the Rose of Sharon—and such they are. Christians, too, are called to manifest the same grace and virtues; so they will, if kept in touch with God.

Mildmay Conference, 1900.
June 26-28.

THE trustees of the Mildmay Conference Hall, in calling the gathering for June 26-28, indicate Praise as appropriate to the whole Church of God in this year of grace. They say: "There are many hopeful signs to cheer the hearts of the 'faithful in Christ Jesus.' But whatever the circumstances, 'Praise is comely,' and can never be out of place in Christian hearts or in Christian lives. Too little have we learned or practised the privilege of praise as compared with that of prayer. Prayer springs from faith and hope and love on earth; in praise we join with all the blessed company of heaven. 'A voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear Him, both small and great.' Let us then seek to know more of unto 'Him who sits enthroned upon the praises of Israel.'"

TUESDAY, JUNE 26.

11 a.m., THE BLESSED OBJECT OF PRAISE:—"Our God" (Psa. lxvi. 8); "My God" (Psa. cxlvi. 2); "Let them praise thy . . . Name" (Psa. xcix. 3; Matt. xxviii. 19; Psa. lxvi. 2). Antecedent to all thoughts of praise in itself—"Consider HIM."

7 p.m., HIS DELIGHT IN HIS PEOPLE'S PRAISES:—He is "exalted above all blessing and praise" (Neh. ix. 5). Yet, "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth Me" (Psa. l. 23; Isa. xliii. 21; Psa. xxii. 3, R.V. marg.) The whole teaching of the Word on Praise is one long testimony to His delight in our thanks, blessing, and adoration.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27.

11 a.m., SOME SPECIAL MOTIVES TO PRAISE:—His Mercy (Psa. cxxxvi.); His Loving-Kindness (Psa. lxiii. 3); His Grace (Eph. i. 6); His Word (Psa. lvi. 4, 10); His Salvation (Psa. xl. 3); His Power (Psa. xxi. 13); His Righteous Judgments (Rev. xix. 1-5).

7 p.m., THE TRUE SPIRIT OF PRAISE:—Holy Awe (Psa. lxv. i., marg.; Ex. xv. 11); Triumphant (Psa. cvi. 47); Joyful (Psa. xxviii. 7); Whole-hearted (Psa. cxxviii. 1; Psa. ix. 1); United (Psa. xxxv. 18; Rev. v.).

THURSDAY, JUNE 28.

11 a.m., SEASONS AND OCCASIONS OF PRAISE:—Public Worship (Psa. xlii. 4; Psa. c. 4); Mercies to Church and Nation (Eph. i. 3; Psa. cxvii. 1; Rom. xv. 11); Daily Life (Psa. lxxii. 15; Luke xxiv. 53; Acts ii. 46, 47; see Isa. lxii. 9); Trials to Faith and Hope (Psa. xlii. 5; Psa. lxxi. 6; Acts xvi.; Psa. lxxi. 14); All Times (Psa. xxxiv. 1, for see Rom. viii. 28). "My tongue shall speak of thy righteousness, and of thy praise all the day long" (Psa. xxxv. 28).

7 p.m., THE BLISS AND THE BLESSING OF PRAISE:—(Psa. xxxiii. 1; Psa. cxlvii. 1); It is the atmosphere in which spiritual victory is achieved (Psa. cxlvi.; compare Neh. viii. 10; Eph. i. 12). THE FUTURE HISTORY OF PRAISE:—In all coming years and periods it shall go up on earth (Psa. cii. 18; Psa. cxxxviii. 4; Psa. cxlv. 2); It shall be the occupation of glory (Psa. lxxxiv. 4; Psa. cxlvi. 2; Isa. xxxv. 10; compare Rev. v., vii., xv., xix.). "By Him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually; that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his Name" (Heb. xiii. 15).

At the Spring Races.

NORTHAMPTON.

HERE the workers of the Open-Air Mission raised their banner without molestation for a time. As the first day wore on, and the crowds increased, an attempt was made to hustle our company. Once the flag-staff was assaulted, but our men standing firm, we "held the fort;" and four largely-attended meetings were carried on, with saving results.

The Open-Air Mission was nobly supported by a faithful band of brethren and sisters from the Abington Square Mission Hall, where soul-stirring evening meetings were held, and the power of God was manifested in a remarkable degree.

TORQUAY.

We opened our commission at this beautiful spot by open-air meetings in the town on Saturday night and Easter Sunday. The chief race saturnalia is always fixed for Easter Monday, and on that day we met with a perfect storm of opposition, which lasted during the whole of the afternoon.

Inflamed by the demon drink, scores of young people of both sexes—sad to relate—received our songs and warning exhortations like howling dervishes with blasphemous cries. Once there was a distinct attempt at actual violence, which however was quelled.

Mingled with the cursing, which was awful—our veterans declaring they had never witnessed such continuous devilry on any field—we noticed those who were shocked and deeply impressed. Is it asked, Why do you go? Because these wrecks of humanity go, and there must the Gospel be preached as to "every creature."

At night in the crowded town we held a meeting amidst the greatest calm, where salvation came to some precious souls. So we had rest and victory through our Lord Jesus.

EPSOM.

We had larger gatherings than usual at the spring races. When the Prince of Wales arrived on the Grand Stand the cheering reached us, so the echo was wafted back again by the sweet songs of Zion. As a witness the Gospel has been proclaimed in this important year of our Lord 1900 on Epsom Downs.

As of old, by evening, alcohol had done its work in Epsom town. There we had a larger concourse than usual, and despite the unmeaning wails of the drunkards, we continued until a late hour, always surrounded by earnest listeners. At Epsom several of our City Missionary friends afforded valuable help as of old, as also did our dear friend Miss Alexander, who insisted upon accompanying us both on to the course as well as to the town gatherings. To God be the glory. B. Barry Wake.

Bramblebury Hall, Wandsworth.

THE first anniversary of the work at this Hall was signalized by large and enthusiastic meetings on Sunday and Monday, April 22 and 23. Rev. F. B. Meyer preached on Monday afternoon on the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in trial, service, and fellowship; and his impressive address brought every heart into close touch with the risen and ascended Christ. Mr. Meyer warmly commended the work of the Hall, cordially identifying himself with the Mission begun and carried on under the superintendence of Mr. F. W. Pitt.

A social tea, enjoyed by about 200 friends, was followed by a meeting that exceeded both in numbers and power the highest expectations of those who had organized it. The platform was all too small to accommodate the Christian friends supporting Mr. Pitt. Among them were Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, A. W. Evans, and D. M. Cameron, Messrs. Edwin Smith and C. Russell Hurditch, while sympathetic messages were received from Rev. C. A. Fox, Lieut.-Col. Roberts, and Mr. John Wood.

Every speaker emphasized his sympathy with Mr. Pitt in the trials that he has encountered in his work, and pledged themselves to support him by all means and at all times.

Scripture Readers in Ireland.

FOR seventy-nine years the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland has pursued with commendable and faithful persistency its efforts for the dissemination of the Scripture, throughout the Sister Isle. Suggestions have often been made as to the methods which should be adopted for carrying on the work, but the committee have considered it advisable to follow the lines laid down by the founders of the Society. The aim of these pioneers was to release from the slavery of sin and superstition through spreading a knowledge of the Word of God.

The work is distinctly spiritual, and all pains are taken in the selection and acceptance of agents. The readers are of two classes—some are located in a parish or union of parishes; and others who itinerate over large areas of country, visiting towns and villages and country districts. The agents are kept supplied with Bibles, Testaments, Scripture portions, tracts, and similar literature for free distribution only.

Never, perhaps, were the Society's agents more heartily welcomed by all denominations, and never probably was more testimony forthcoming as to the value and success of the Society's efforts. The Archbishop of Dublin recently wrote:—"In crowded centres of population in the north, and among the widely-scattered people in parishes in other parts of the country, the readers of the Society are quietly doing work for God, which is a great help to the parochial clergy, and which without their aid could hardly be done at all."

The Bishop of Down and Connor is equally cordial in his appreciation of the agents' services in his diocese. "The readers carry on a steady, unostentatious work, and I know that the assistance they give to the clergy, borne down by the requirements of our great populous parishes, is felt to be of the greatest value."

Such cheering communications are a source of encouragement and inspiration to all who have at heart the welfare of the people of Ireland. The treasurer of the Society is Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London.

Irish Notes.

THE ninety-fourth annual meeting of the Hibernian Bible Society has been held in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, the Bishop of Derry presiding. It was stated that the committee of the Belfast Auxiliary had been enlarged during the year, and made representative of the different religious denominations, and that the issues during the year were the largest on record since 1893.

At the Presbyterian Synod of Derry and Omagh, a resolution was adopted against licensing any young man to preach the Gospel who was addicted to the use of tobacco; and at the Synod of Armagh it was reported that intemperance was still the outstanding vice of the district, and that family worship was neglected in a large number of homes.

Mr. John James Gilmore, B.A., has been set apart by the Antrim Presbytery as a missionary for Western Australia.

Mr. and Mrs. James Dixon, of Belfast, have been conducting a successful Gospel mission in Limerick; and Rev. C. H. Yatman, who is on his return journey from Australia to America, has just closed a similar mission in Belfast. This is Mr. Yatman's second visit to Ireland, and already he has made for himself many friends in this country, and has been instrumental in leading not a few to decide for Christ.

The General Synod of the Irish Church was held last week in Dublin, and the opening presidential address by the venerable Primate, Dr. Alexander, was a beautiful one, couched in a truly Christian spirit. He declared that Christianity was not a creed, but a life; and that if the expression "Outside the church is no salvation" meant eternal separation from God, then he could only say for himself: "My Christ's heart of love is bigger than your church of cast iron." His closing words were very touching: "I have now spoken," he said, "as well as I can, the words of one whose eyes are heavy, and whose Father will soon bid him go to sleep The God of peace be with us, with our land an with our church, and with all churches whic name the Name of Christ." Education matters occupied a good deal of the time of th Synod, which was one of the best and mos harmonious held in recent years. The endow ment fund of the church is at present ove £8,000,000; and although there was a falling of which is thought to be only temporary, of abou £40,000 in the voluntary contributions to th church last year, the sum of £38,000 wa subscribed in aid of foreign missions.

Christian Teaching of Skilled Industries

THERE are very large Sunday-school attached to the King Edward Institution in Spitalfields, and years ago it wa discovered that young people could b attracted from bad companions and viciou amusements by being taught various usefu industrial arts by way of recreation. Henc it has become customary to hold an annua exhibition. These, on one or more occasions i the past, have been graced by the presence of th late Duchess of Teck and her daughter, th present Duchess of York. Quite apart fro this, prizes are given to such as acquire certai industrial arts which will improve their hom life.

Thus, on the evening of April 26, a meetin took place in the large room at Albert Stree at which 127 prizes were given to those wh had won them. There were girls and wome who had showed skill in cookery, laundry-work dress-making, plain needlework, includin cutting out, knitting, woolwork, darning, an the making of boys' suits. On the other hand the men and boys had done excellent work i carpentry, cabinet-making, fretwork, carving making models of buildings, &c. Several lad also received medals for life-saving, swimming cricket, and gymnastics.

The acquirement of such arts as cookin and dressmaking is especially found to add t the domestic comfort of the people, beside representing a considerable reduction in the expenditure. At the same time, all is secondar to the diffusion of the Gospel. The distribu tion of evangelical literature, the Sunda services, the Bible classes, and the Sunda schools were never more vigorously carried o Mr. Charles Montague, the hon. superinten dent, 16, Addington Road, Bow, E., certainl works con amore.

A Rotherhithe Mission.

SURROUNDED by a faithful, united, an earnest band of adherents, Pastor Thoma Richardson, of the Rotherhithe Fre Church, has had the joy of witnessing th development of the aggressive and unsectaria work of the Rotherhithe Free Church. Th problem is no longer how to reach the masse but to accommodate the crowds who see admission to the services. The faithful pre sentation of the Gospel, attended by the powe of the Spirit, has led hundreds to profess thei faith in Christ. The membership of the churc has accordingly increased, and now numbe over 700. The various social agencies are in flourishing condition. Whether it is th "People's Own," the "Women's at Home," th "Men's Own," there is every evidence of sub stantial progress.

The Men's Own, which is held in the Tow Hall, continues to be a source of attraction t large crowds. In less than three years ove 2,100 men have joined this Sunday afternoo meeting, and many are the wives and familie who, with thankful hearts, praise God for thi organization. The Public-house Brigade con sists of a band of consecrated men who vis the taverns and bar-rooms with tracts an invitations to the meetings.

The growth of the Sunday School has ex ceeded the limits of the present accommodatio —its scholars now numbering over 1,300—an the work amongst the children is materiall hampered in consequence. The Provident an Slate Clubs prove of inestimable value in time of sickness or necessity; while the services he "Sisters of the Poor," in their visitation f poverty-striken homes and ministering to he sick, have never failed to win the hearts of he people and influence them for good.

An admirable freehold site has been secured or the new building, which it is proposed to rect as early as funds admit. The hon. secretary s Mr. G. C. Hyam, 115, Trundley Road, Dept-ord Park, S.E.

Scottish Notes.

THE annual inspection of the Boys' Brigade at Glasgow took place on Saturday, April 21, in brilliant weather, before a large company of spectators. Colonel Rawlins, commanding the 26th and 71st egimental districts, was inspecting officer, the otal number of officers and boys on parade eing 4,490.

The celebration on Saturday, April 21, of he semi-jubilee of the Cambuslang Y.M.C.A. as combined with the annual conference of he Lanarkshire District of Y.M.C.A.'s. Mr. Andrew Alston, LL.B., presided, and nearly a undred delegates were present. In the evening Dr. Wells (Pollokshields, Glasgow) preached a pecial sermon in connection with the occasion, n the Free Church.

The death of Rev. George Hunter (of the China Inland Mission) at I-chang, on March 12, s felt by many in Scotland as a heavy personal oss. After a distinguished university and heological career, he was United Presbyterian inister at Stranraer from 1882 to 1889, when e endeared himself to the entire community. fter ten years in China he recently spent a usy furlough time in Scotland, and had just eturned to take up work in Hunan, when e was seized by an attack of malarial fever hich proved fatal.

After his course of Bible lectures in Glasgow rofessor W. W. White is now conducting a imilar series in Edinburgh. Rev. Mr. Grant Bristo Baptist Church) presided at the opening ervice on April 23, when the subject was "The ospel of John." In the evening, Rev. Dr. Iood Wilson (Barclay Free Church) took the hair, and the address was on "The God of braham."

Mr. William Quarrier's heart was gladdened st week by the receipt of two special gifts—1,000 to provide an organ for the church at he Orphan Homes, and £2,000 to cover the ost of an electric light installation in the Con-umptive Homes.

The Scottish National Sabbath School Union eels itself to be face to face with a crisis in its ork, arising from a continued shrinkage over number of years in the numbers of teachers nd scholars alike; and, if the necessary funds an be obtained, it is proposed to appoint a pecial travelling agent, who will devote his hole time and energies to arousing a new nterest in this branch of work.

The Synod of Angus and Mearns held a onference last week on "Church Activities" nd "Aggressive Home Mission Work." Among ther speakers, Principal Mackay said he elieved that never since the Reformation was he Church so active, or its work so successful, s at the present time. Dealing with the state f matters among the young, one minister gave as his opinion that during his ministry of venty-five years the sense of parental respon-hibility had seriously diminished among the cottish people.

Mr. Sankey's Proposed Visit.

THE notice which appeared on March 8 of Mr. Sankey's intention to visit Great Britain in September next, has led to a pressing invitation from Pastor Thomas purgeon to the reopening of the Metropolitan abernacle, and one from the London Evan-elistic Singers' Union, which Mr. Sankey will robably make arrangements to accept. He is lso much in requisition at home for his ldresses on the Gospel in song and story and he narrative of his experiences in Egypt. The apers speak in praise of them, and, better still, hurch reports tell of many young people being rought to decision for Christ.

Scottish National C.E. Convention.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ALL the members with whom we have come into contact are of one mind, that the sixth annual Scottish Christian Endeavour Convention was a conspicuous success. The gatherings took place at Paisley, beginning on Saturday, April 21, and closing on the following Tuesday. Brilliant weather, combined with excellent arrangements for railway travelling, attracted large attendances from all parts of the country; while the spirit pervading the whole of the proceedings was marked by the deepest earnestness.

As in former years, Saturday was given up to the juniors, and a "rally" was held which taxed to its utmost the accommodation of the Town Hall. Mr. J. Brand Crombie (Renfrew), presided, and, speaking on "Good Counsel for Pilgrims," warned the young people against the popular error by which life, when regarded as a pilgrimage, is associated with sadness and melancholy. A concerted Bible-reading was led by Miss Howie (Paisley).

On Sabbath afternoon an open-air rally was attended by nearly 2,000 people, when addresses were given by Mr. Crombie and Mr. Daniel Andrew (Paisley). At the close a march was made to the Town Hall, and Rev. James E. Houston (Cambuslang), the retiring president, preached the Convention sermon—text, Isa. l. 4.

On Monday morning at the annual business meeting, the secretarial statement showed fifty-three new societies registered, making the present number 487. The senior active membership is 9,604, with 1,940 associates, in all, 11,544: while the junior societies have 2,248 active members, and 1,739 associates, together 3,987. The grand total is thus: 15,531. Of the seniors 6,607 are church members, and 402 associates have become active — the corresponding junior figures being seventy-eight and 243.

In the evening an official reception was given by the provost, magistrates and town council, and thereafter a public meeting was held. Tuesday morning was given to Conference, the first topic being "Christian Endeavour in Scotland in the Light of Experience," led by Mr. J. Frew Bryden, Glasgow. Miss McArthur (Glasgow) brought forward "Junior Endeavour," and explained the difficulties and needs peculiar to this branch. A discussion followed each paper. Later in the day rallies of members belonging to the different denominations were held in various churches throughout the town.

In the afternoon a deeply helpful address was given by Rev. David M. Macintyre (Glasgow) on "Bible Study." "Effective Evangelistic Work" fell to Rev. J. W. Lister (Glasgow). Two large halls were required to accommodate those who assembled for the evening gathering. The office-bearers for the year were announced, and addresses given by Rev. H. B. Workman (Birmingham) on "Ideals, their Place and Power; and Rev. Henry Montgomery (Belfast) on "Greater Things than These." The proceedings concluded with a short consecration service.

Personalia.

Miss Louise Shepard expects to be in Brussels and Paris from May 3 until the beginning of July, unless special engagements should necessitate earlier return. Communications may be addressed c/o Morgan, Hayes, and Co., Paris.

Mr. W. R. Rickett, J.P., treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Society, was unable to attend the public meetings held last week, by reason of the serious illness of Mrs. Rickett. At the various gatherings the shadowed home was remembered before God in prayer, and cordial messages of sympathy with the sorrowing family were sent.

London City Mission.—The Seaside Homes and Holiday Fund enables the workers of the London City Mission to regain lost health and strength which are necessary for the pursuit of their arduous toil amongst the poor of the metropolis. The missionaries and their wives, needless to say, warmly appreciate the support accorded to the movement.

Obituary.

MRS. FREDERIC SMITH.

MRS. FREDERIC SMITH, formerly of Stratford, entered into rest at her residence, Mount Park, Coggeshall, on Thursday last week, in her sixty-fifth year. Brought up in the Society of Friends, she was a lover of all quiet and sincere Christian work. She will long be remembered for her labours as a teacher in the men's night school at the Stratford Conference Hall. She was also club secretary of the large mothers' meeting held there, giving herself most devotedly to this work, from the opening of the hall until she was laid aside with cancer some years ago.

PREBENDARY STANLEY LEATHES.

The death is announced of Dr. Stanley Leathes, rector of Much Hadham, and for many years Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis at King's College, London. The son of the late Rev. C. S. Leathes, the lamented scholar was born in 1830. He graduated in 1852 at Jesus College, Cambridge, and for some years worked hard in Old Testament study. Having done clerical duty in several London parishes, he was elected to the professorship at King's College. Subsequently he sat upon the Old Testament Revision Committee, becoming Prebendary of St. Paul's in 1876. He was in succession Boyle, Hulsean, and Warburton Lecturer, and wrote a number of books, all of them inspired by firm loyalty to Scripture integrity and authority.

REV. E. WILKINSON, PH.D.

The death of Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, for some years incumbent of Christ Church, Leamington, removes a prominent advocate of Evangelical truth. Ordained in 1854, he filled curacies in various places, and in 1871 became rector of Snargate-with-Snave, Kent, where he laboured with much blessing for eleven years. During that period he issued many Evangelical and Protestant publications. One of his favourite methods of disseminating pure Gospel truth was to insert edifying Scriptural paragraphs in the weekly local newspapers, for which he gladly paid as advertisements. Possessing landed property in Yorkshire, he was always ready with his purse to help forward Evangelical work. At Leamington he succeeded an extreme Ritualist, and had practically to gather a new congregation. Every vestige of Ritualistic furniture was removed, an Evangelical hymn book replaced the sacerdotal one, and the Gospel of Christ was faithfully proclaimed.

MRS. J. T. DUNN.

Many are mourning the departure of Mrs. Martha Dunn, wife of the well-known elder of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. A correspondent writes of her:—"An early conversion was followed by a godly life, which expressed itself in works of faith and love; so that the Sunday school, the church, and the home circle, benefited by her example and influence. For over forty-seven years she was the loving helpmeet of a worker who is deservedly held in high esteem. Her pastor, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, was unavoidably absent from the funeral, which took place on Friday last at Forest Hill Cemetery. The service at the grave was undertaken by Revs. C. B. Sawday, W. J. Mills, R. J. Beecliff, and C. L. Gordon. Representatives from the diaconate, elders' court, church, and congregation of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Mr. Dunn's Bible Class, and the Richmond Street Mission, attended; thus expressing their sympathy with Mr. Dunn and his family in their bereavement, and also their desire to honour one whose piety had proved its divine origin, not only by its endurance, but also by its fruits."

Theology Class.—The class held for so many years at the Pastors' College, under the leadership of Mr. S. Johnson, will be resumed on May 8. New students are invited to join. The class is free. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. G. Hall, Pastors' College, Temple Street, Newington, S.E.

University Notes.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

ON Sunday, April 26, the University pulpit was occupied by Rev. Dr. A. Robertson, Principal of King's College, London. Taking as his text Gal. iii. 28, his subject was "Christianity and Nationality."

The usual May Term open-air services, held by University men in various parts of Cambridge, were commenced last Sunday.

The annual sermon in connection with the Cambridge Branch of the Church of England Young Men's Society was preached on April 26, in Holy Trinity Church, by Rev. W. W. Hough, of the Corpus Christi College Mission, Camberwell. Mr. Hough based his sermon on Rom. vi. 5: "The Likeness of his Resurrection." A large number of the members of the Society were present.

OXFORD.

OXFORD showed its warm appreciation of Dr. Chavasse by crowding St. Peter-le-Bailey Church on the occasion of his last sermon—Sunday week. Many were unable to obtain even standing room. The Bishop-elect took as his text "Cleave to that which is good" (Rom. xii. 9), and disclaimed at the outset any idea of preaching a farewell sermon in the commonly accepted sense of the word. He wished, he said, to remind them of some of the great principles which for fifty years had been preached in that Church.

The sermon was markedly characteristic of Dr. Chavasse: eminently practical, closely reasoned, and full of fervour. He urged his hearers to cleave to three things amongst others—to a Book, to a Society, and to a Person. Cleave to the Bible, he pleaded, because the Old Testament was the Bible of our Lord, and the New was written by men directly taught by the Spirit of God. Cleave to it, because it has inspired men and women as no other book has done, because of its wonderful adaptability to the needs of men, meeting the world's deepest cravings. He urged them to cleave to the Church of England because it was a great historic Church, uniting apostolic order with Bible truth, a great breakwater against unbelief and superstition; yet he reminded his hearers that other communities had their roll of martyrs and their lists of saints.

Last of all, and chiefest, he said, let us cleave to a Person, and that Person our Lord Jesus Christ. The heart of religion is not a doctrine, a precept, but a Person, a Divine Person, the God-man Jesus Christ; and our supreme duty is to cling to Him, taking Him as Saviour, Master, Teacher, King, Friend, and Brother. It was a stirring message, and will live long in the minds of all who heard it.

Rev. W. Warner, of Christ Church, who for the last twelve years has taken a warm interest in the college servants, acting as president of their Society, was the recipient of a silver inkstand on Wednesday, the servants being anxious to show in some way their gratitude for his kind interest. There is no class of men in Oxford who need more sympathy and encouragement than college servants, and the presentation shows how eagerly they will respond to any sympathy. It is to be hoped that before long something will be done to make their Sundays less laborious, and to afford them greater opportunities for attending Divine service.

Limerick Soldiers' Home.—In a letter from Bloemfontein, Captain J. Shawe Taylor, who is serving with the South African Field Force, says: "The Secretary of State for War has approved of the new Soldiers' Home which is being formed in Limerick being in future known as the "Lansdowne Soldiers' Home," as a mark of his sympathy with the movement. A sum of £2,500 has been subscribed, and a suitable piece of ground and building in Limerick has been purchased. Extensive alterations have, under Miss Sandes' supervision, been commenced, and it is calculated that the Home, with its reading-room, coffee-bar, meeting-room, baths, and non-commissioned officers' room, will be open to soldiers of the garrison on October 1. Lieutenant T. E. Kelsall, Royal Engineers, 15, Barrington Street, Limerick, is acting as hon. secretary of the project."

The Cowper Centenary.

THE quiet town of Olney was en fête on Wednesday last. Visitors began to arrive the day before in order to explore Cowper's country before the rush commenced. The Ouse flowed peacefully between its level banks; all was quiet there, and in the churchyard where John Newton lies buried. In the gallery of the church is Cowper's pew. Surely the people of this district were highly favoured, for Newton was succeeded by Thomas Scott, the commentator; while, in the adjoining parish of Turvey, Legh Richmond officiated for some time.

Triumphal arches were erected in the town, and everywhere yellow and green were to be seen in honour of the poet whose colours these were. It was a pleasing sign of the harmony of the proceedings that the address to the children in the market-place was given by the writer, a Free Churchwoman; while the public meeting, after the opening of the museum, was held in the Congregational Chapel, the proceedings terminating with a sermon in the church by the Dean of Canterbury.

Mr. Thomas Wright, of Cowper House School, the greatest living authority on Cowper, has largely been the means of arousing the enthusiasm of his fellow townsmen, so that the centenary of the poet's death was kept in a most hearty way, and by all classes and denominations. The poet's house has most kindly been given to the town by Mr. W. H. Collingridge, well-known in connection with the City Press, who was born in the house, and many relics belonging to the poet and his friends have now a resting-place there.

The service in the church was one never to be forgotten by any who were privileged to take part. Three of Cowper's hymns were sung; "Hark, my soul, it is the Lord," "Jesus, where'er thy people meet," and "There is a fountain filled with blood." It was a case of singing the Gospel, and many were visibly affected. After the sermon, a hymn composed for the occasion by Canon Rawnsley was sung.

Dean Farrar took for his text, "O, send forth thy light and thy truth," and he paid a well-deserved tribute to Cowper, as having been used of God for disseminating light and truth. He was not one of those "whose souls were in the market." He showed a purity and kindliness in all that he said and did, and he helped home life and kindled a love of Nature by the way in which he touched the common objects of daily life.

The Dean quoted from the poet to illustrate his points one by one, and, in conclusion, gave some verses from Elizabeth Barrett Browning, closing with the lines:—

And how, when, one by one, sweet sounds and wandering lights departed,
He wore no less a loving face because so broken hearted.

Palestine in London.

IT is a pleasure once more to call attention to the Palestine displays which that new but enterprising society, "The Holy Land Lectures Fund," has organised in the Conference Hall, Eccleston Street, Belgravia, close to the Victoria Station. "Palestine in London" is open five times each week—on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 3.30 and 8.0 p.m. and on Wednesdays at 3.30 p.m.—and has now been delighting and instructing large audiences for the past five weeks. In this work, Scriptural instruction, both in style, matter, and illustration, is made for all thoughtful, earnest hearers in the best sense of the word, truly entertaining—just as an actual visit to Palestine itself would be entertaining. We strongly commend to the churches the important object lesson these displays afford.

Those who come to London for the May Meetings should make a point of attending, for they will find the lectures both pleasant and profitable. Every week new life-sized oil paintings are shown, really exquisite works of art, as we might have expected from Mr. Holman Hunt's openly expressed opinion, and also from that of Mr. Frederic Shields, and so skilfully composed as to bring before us, with perfect realism, countless biblical allusions which can only be fully realized and pictured in this way. Many assert that Mr. Neil is even a better lecturer without his valuable oil paintings so vivid are his word-pictures of Bible scenes. Rev. H. J. R. Marston, M.A., of Eaton Chapel, Belgrave Square, speaking at the close of one of Mr. Neil's "talks," said: "Though, as some of you are aware, I have lost my sight, so graphic and vivid have been Mr. Neil's word-pictures in describing his beautiful oil paintings, and in bringing out the important new light they throw upon Holy Scripture, that I can truly say I have seen them all!"

Next week the subject is "More Strange Scenes in Syria," and Mr. Neil promises to deal with some of his discoveries in Palestine which throw new and important light on the Bible. Yet it is only right to say—for these discourses are all highly original—that there is no lecture, of the five which he has now given, in which he has not done the same. Man after man has ventured to speak to Mr. Neil at the close, declaring that, though earnest students of the Word for years, after listening to two of these "talks" the Bible has already become a new book to them!

Tryphena Mission.—In a locality noted for its poverty—which, however, often hides its head under the externals of respectability—this mission continues to prove a means of succour to many. The infirm and sick are visited and relieved in various ways; the destitute children are provided with free meals, and to all is preached the Gospel of Christ. The declining years of many of the indigent and impotent poor are cheered by the comforts thus provided. Gospel services, a Sunday school, Band of Hope, are useful adjuncts of the mission. The superintendent is Mr. B. F. Adams, 39, Lichfield Road, Bow, E.

The May Meetings.

National Refuges for Destitute Children

OBJECT lessons in the beneficent and varied operations of this organization, which has so long aimed with eminent success at the reclamation of neglected children throughout our land, were afforded by the fifty-seventh annual meeting held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday afternoon of last week. The Earl of Jersey presided, and there was a very large attendance of supporters and friends of the Society. "Now thank we all our God" was the grand old hymn of gratitude with which the choir, comprising children from the various Homes, opened the proceedings. A lively "vocal gallop" formed one of the items in a plentiful selection of music, dividing the speeches one from another; and the youthful members of the audience were simply delighted by the quaint rendering of a piece called "Four-and-Twenty Blackbirds." It was very evident that the young choristers gathered from the Homes find, in singing and in sportive exercise, abundant means of brightening the course of their industrial training; and it is the expressed desire of the executive that, in years to come, they who are now children may have cause to look back with pleasure to happy days spent under Christian care.

The Secretary, Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, gave a brief sketch of operations, from which it appeared that are now in the two training ships, and in the various homes or schools. The total number of children admitted into the refuges up to the end of 1899 was 15,351—viz., 12,866 boys and 2,485 girls. Receipts for the year 1899 amounted to £30,056, and the total payments to £28,856. During the year an outstanding liability of £7,500 has been cleared off; and an urgent appeal is made that the society may now be enabled to carry on its good work free of debt, and to make up for loss of income owing to funds diverted by war charities.

In offering favourable comment upon the report, the noble Chairman said it is obvious that the more money the Society receives, the better able will it be to carry on its all-important work. His advocacy of the claims of the institution was based upon two facts. First, that the education given to these children is built up upon the truths of Christianity; and secondly, that the boys have some share in maintaining the integrity of the Empire, the homes being represented in no less than fourteen regiments, and on certain ships of war now serving in connection with the South African campaign.

The Dean of Canterbury said he considered the work of this Society to be thoroughly admirable, and a work for which the whole nation may well be grateful.

THE FATE OF EMPIRES

depends upon the education of youth; and if our destitute children are neglected, the whole nation must ultimately suffer. Both Greeks and Jews give frequent evidence, in their respective national histories, of the intense interest taken in early ages concerning the wise education of children. Three thousand years ago, an Assyrian brick, while moist, had the royal mark impressed upon it, but that sign was effaced by the foot of a dog; and nothing but Divine grace can replace God's mark upon degenerate human nature.

Still further variety was given to the afternoon's engagements by musical drill upon a broad dais erected just below the platform. In these exercises, boys from the farm establishment were accompanied by the band of the Shaftesbury School. After the collection, "Our Colonies Waltz" afforded opportunity for blending the young performers' voices and instruments in tuneful aspirations for home and colonial union, and for the return of an abiding peace.

Rev. Mr. Bennett, in the absence of Admiral Field, spoke of frequently witnessing that part of the work which is carried on at Bisley, where, as he had found, discipline is tempered with love. Results of Scripture examination were eminently satisfactory. There was sure advance in school life, as well as in home life; and one could not fail to realize the existence of a deep and real religious work among the children.

Twenty minutes were devoted to limelight views in illustration of the Society's manifold operations, the pictures going to show that the enterprise is thorough, real, and good, from whatever point it may be regarded; and it was mentioned that while some of the rescued ones serve Queen and country in army and navy, by far the larger number are drafted into the diversified employments of civil life.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

NEW fields of work are opening before the Trinitarian Bible Society, in various parts of the world; and interesting particulars concerning the extensive production and wide distribution of God's Word were given at the sixty-ninth annual meeting in Exeter Hall on the evening of April 24.

The report—read, for the Secretary, by Rev. F. C. Lovely—recognised at the outset that the work of a Bible Society is, necessarily, one of conflict. For fifteen centuries Satan kept the Bible from the people, and when the tortures of the Inquisition and the fires of the martyrs' stake failed to stamp out Holy Writ, then, as an "angel of light," he used the Church of Rome to forge versions of her own which should serve as an "antidote" to what she called the "poison" of the faithful versions made by Protestants. It is against the activities of this transformation that the Trinitarian Bible Society is labouring and witnessing. Considered as the Society looks for Christian support even on this ground. Eighty-five meetings have been held, and addresses were given on various Biblical subjects, during the past year. Six new auxiliaries have been formed, while the Lord's people have been, in increasing numbers, strengthened and refreshed in their faith.

Receipts have amounted to £2,741, making, with balances brought forward, £3,610. The expenditure was £2,724, leaving a balance of £886, of which £700 is on deposit to meet payments becoming due. The year's combined English and foreign circulation of Bibles, Testaments, and portions was 71,301.

As to the work of the Society abroad, its Hebrew New Testament is still being used by God for blessing to his ancient people, and another edition has been printed. One fact which has recently come to light greatly enhances the importance of this work in the near future, viz., that Hebrew is to be the coming language of Palestine, and is to be the common vernacular of all Jews returning thither. A correspondent of the Jewish Chronicle recognises the fact that there is a fresh movement among the people towards the study of the New Testament. The Hebrew-German Bible has been at length completed; but the size of the edition to be printed must entirely depend upon the means supplied to the Society.

Pastor and Madame Lopez Rodriguez, who represent the Society in Spain, send encouraging details of

and some measure of results reaped in that priest-ridden land. Bible distribution is to be carried on at the Paris Exhibition; and during the last few months ready and thankful response has been made to the many calls for help in regard to supplies of Scriptures at the front in South Africa. Arrangements have also been made for the distribution of Dutch New Testaments among the prisoners arriving at St. Helena.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bentinck, who occupied the chair, urged that, having regard to the lamentable inroads of worldliness, fleshly lusts, and giving place to the devil, earnest Christians should be active in spreading God's Word among all peoples. Rev. James Ormiston moved adoption of the report, and pointed out the sufficiency of the Word of God for effecting the divine counsels and purposes. It is our encouragement to know that the grace of God is invincible, and the purposes of God are eternal. The Society has a threefold office in regard to the Scriptures, as their guardian, their steward, and their messenger.

As seconder of the motion made by the last speaker, Rev. Silas Edge said that apparent friendly bearing toward us, on the part of our spiritual enemies, is one of the greatest dangers against which we are called to contend. In days of danger and difficulty, it is cheering to find the Society maintaining its position as a standing witness for the truth of God.

The report was unanimously approved, and then Rev. James Wall (for more than twenty years a Baptist missionary in Rome) acknowledged the good hand of God guiding the Society into new spheres in which to labour, and expressed full confidence that He will supply the means to carry out the good work in contemplation. His reminiscences of the first Bible-reading in Rome were very interesting, and some remarkable instances were given of the powerful application of the Word by the Holy Spirit, and of the readiness of all classes to receive it. Pastor W. Faber (Berlin) and Rev. J. M. Tryon also addressed the meeting.

Testimony to Israel.

THE large attendance at the annual meetings of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel on Tuesday was an evidence of unabated interest in the spiritual welfare of God's ancient people. The afternoon gathering at Brunswick Chapel, Whitechapel, was presided over by Mr. James E. Mathieson, who recognised with gratitude the sympathy and support the movement had received, and spoke in hopeful terms of the prospects of the work.

The Hon. Treasurer, Mr. A. Boake, made a brief and encouraging statement on the year's operations. He referred to the devotion and self-sacrifice displayed by the workers, many of whom were voluntary helpers. The will, it is hoped, be ready for occupation before another winter. Enlarged provision will remove a considerable obstacle to the development of the Mission. Towards the cost of the undertaking £4,750 has already been suscribed, leaving a sum of £3,500 still to be raised.

Rev. David Baron acknowledged the generosity which had been accorded to the work. There is in the East End of London a larger Jewish population than in Palestine. The aim of the Mission is to testify of Christ—to witness by word and life. The Society has often to encounter hostility, prejudice, and reproach from those who fail to understand the workers' motives, but, notwithstanding opposition, there is happily to-day a more widespread interest than ever.

Rev. Robert Graves Walker, in an impressive manner, adduced passages of Scripture explaining to both Jew and Gentile. Rev. James Douglas, of Brixton, and Rev. W. J. Watkins, of West Hampstead, followed with helpful and encouraging words. Mr. Finlay Gibson commented upon Matthew xxviii., remarking that all Christian testimony should be based upon the resurrection of Christ. The speaker dwelt upon the invitation, "Come and see," and the command, "Go and tell"—the result of prompt obedience; and the missionary promise, "Lo I am with you alway." The afternoon meeting terminated with a few earnest words by Rev. C. A. Schönberger.

At a subsequent gathering, in the Mission-house, Whitechapel Road, addresses were given by several workers and friends.

Baptist Union Assembly.

By a Minister.

THE Spring Meetings of the Baptist Union are fitly introduced and closed by great missionary gatherings. On Sunday, April 22, the Metropolitan pulpits were occupied by preachers, chiefly from the provinces, who sought to further the work of the Missionary Society. On Thursday, April 26, Exeter Hall was crowded in every part upon the occasion of the annual missionary meeting. Between the Sunday and the Thursday the Baptist Union Spring Assembly was held.

The inaugural meeting for prayer was held in Bloomsbury Chapel on Monday afternoon, April 23. Immediately following this, Dr. Clifford, the retiring President, introduced his successor, Rev. W. Cuff, of Shoreditch Tabernacle, whose noble work is known all over the land. No greater contrast could be imagined than that which exists between these two ministers of Jesus Christ. Intellectually and (in parts) theologically they move on different lines, yet each is enthusiastically devoted to the one Lord.

Mr. Cuff's presidential address was delivered to a great audience, which crowded Bloomsbury Chapel. It was a notable utterance concerning the work and power of the Holy Spirit in Christian service. Such a well-worn topic lends itself to the utterance of platitudes, but Mr. Cuff was surprisingly fresh, and his burning words will long be remembered. The latter part of the address was an earnest plea for

A RETURN TO APOSTOLIC SIMPLICITY.

With deep solemnity the speaker entered his protest against many of the methods employed in Christian work to "attract" the people. We need supernatural power to accomplish a supernatural work. A number of veterans well known in Christian work gave free expression to their delight with Mr. Cuff's weighty words. Amongst others present were Mr. Henry Varley and Pastor Archibald Brown.

With absolute unanimity the Assembly chose the venerable Dr. Alexander Maclaren to be Vice-President of the Union; so that, if God spares him, at this time next year this gifted scholar and "prince of preachers" will occupy the President's chair. Although seventy-four years of age, the doctor is remarkably vigorous. So mighty a spiritual leader cannot help but accomplish much good for his brethren, and, indeed, for the churches generally.

Three thousand people filled the City Temple on Monday evening. It was a "young people's meeting," but the age limit was very elastic, for many who are no longer young were present. The addresses were very inspiring, and not a little real help was rendered by the singing of Madame Antoinette Sterling.

Wednesday afternoon, April 25, was given up to the consideration of public questions. An important resolution on the proposed Roman Catholic University in Ireland was moved by Rev. C. Joseph, of Cambridge, who delivered a telling speech upon the subject. Mr. Joseph's tone was most moderate. He was careful to say that we were removed as far as possible from any notion of but if they wanted a University let them provide one with their own money. He clearly showed that the creation of a State-endowed Roman Catholic University was reactionary, incompatible with the higher interests of education, an encroachment upon the rights of the tax-paying public, and destructive of the principle of religious equality. The resolution was carried with enthusiasm.

On the Wednesday evening, a great crowd of people attended the City Temple for the public meeting of the Total Abstinence Association. The platform was a representative one, the speakers including Canon Fleming and Mr. W. S. Caine, J.P.

A justifiable innovation this year was the holding of a reception, at the Holborn Town Hall, in favour of the Twentieth Century Fund. Sir John Barran received some 500 guests. That the raising of a quarter of a million of money is not regarded by Baptists as a mere commercial affair was abundantly demonstrated on Thursday morning, when Professor Hackney, M.A., read a paper upon "The Spiritual Aspects of the Twentieth Century Fund," in which he emphasized the evangelistic aims of the movement.

A remarkable paper was read on Thursday morning by Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., on "Social Problems." He dealt in a searching manner with the causes which underlie poverty and crime, and insisted upon the unwisdom of trying to grapple with effects while the causes are left untouched. Dealing with he mentioned that a deputation of publicans once waited upon him, and begged him to leave moderate publicans alone, and confine himself to the helping of drunkards. Mr. Cameron promptly replied, "For every drunkard I save, you make two fresh ones." Upon the question of purity, the speaker uttered some weighty words. "There must not be one law for the woman, and another for the man—every man demands that his bride shall come to him a pure woman; the bride has equal right to demand that her husband shall come to her a pure man." In the way of remedies Mr. Cameron declared that all Christians should insist upon the enactment of Government measures for the removal, as far as possible, of the causes of poverty and crime. Then, everyone had a personal responsibility to take in hand and to save the downtrodden and the abandoned. A case was cited of a minister who spent six years in trying to save one man from the curse of drink, and who eventually succeeded.

Mr. Cameron's paper made a deep impression upon a large audience. The missing note in it was supplied by Mr. Cuff, who has had wide experience amongst the poor, and who added that the Gospel was the great force, after all, for removing the causes of poverty and crime.

Mr. Shakespeare, the Secretary of the Union, announced at the closing session of the Assembly, that the sum promised up to date for the Twentieth Century Fund was £135,113. It is beyond question now that the quarter of a million aimed at will not only be forthcoming, but exceeded.

An oration by Dr. Clifford, on "The Demands of the Twentieth Century," concluded the meetings of the Assembly. The speech lasted for nearly an hour and a half, and was a comprehensive utterance. On the Thursday afternoon a supplementary meeting was held in connection with the "Baptist Ministers and Missionaries' Prayer Union." Rev. F. B. Meyer, presided, and there was a large audience. The subject chosen for consideration was "How our Churches may best meet of the Age." Very helpful addresses were given by Revs. Darlow Sargeant and J. Wilson (of Woolwich), both of whom have had wide experience in dealing with men and women. Mr. Sargeant's address consisted of a series of illustrations from life, showing how people outside all churches can be reached and brought to Christ. Mr. Meyer concluded the Conference with some practical words. In particular, he advocated the abolition of the pew-rent system, as being a great hindrance in the way of getting men to church; and, further, he urged the ministers to lay themselves out, as he had done with so much success, for young men and boys.

In points of numbers, helpfulness, enthusiasm, and devoutness, it is agreed on every hand that the meetings of this Spring have excelled those of any previous year.

The Protestant Alliance.

WHILE Rome's agents, and tendencies Romewards, are active and obvious, it is well that Protestants should be wakeful and diligent. Latimer's word of encouragement to Ridley was, "Be of good cheer; play the man!" It has reverberated and echoed to our day, and has entered the ears of many who hold most earnestly to Evangelical doctrines and practices. Steady and persistent work in the direction of instructing the people on the evils of sacerdotalism, and setting forth Reformation truth, is the great ministry of the Protestant Alliance, whose annual demonstration, held on Wednesday last week, was hearty in character and fruitful in stimulus.

In the afternoon the gathering was presided over by Rev. Dr. Kennedy Moore, amid many tokens of the unity of purpose which binds and combines the adherents of the cause. In some opening remarks the Chairman described the insidious manner in which the Romanists have been preparing to attack the liberties and Protestant Constitution of Great Britain. The number of Roman Catholics in the Houses of Parliament was urged as

A CAUSE FOR ALARM.

Are we to lose our liberty as Englishmen, and be bound in the fetters of the dungeon house of Rome? Men will be led to support the Protestant movement only as we enable them to feel that we are striving to uphold the truth of the Gospel and the honour of Christ, and aiming at the salvation of souls through the Saviour's mediation.

Rev. Dr. C. H. Wright moved a resolution asserting the vital importance of the preservation of the Protestantism of the nation. In the course of a vigorous address, he maintained that though differences exist as between the Established Church and Nonconformists, all Evangelicals are agreed as to the great verities of the Protestant religion. There must be a practical for the Church of England needs the help of Free Churchmen in defending her in this time of grave anxiety. Dr. Wright dealt with the teaching associated with the celebration of the Mass, and the practice of auricular confession, repudiating the claim of ministers to be channels of grace, any further than pointing sinners to the One who alone takes away the sin of the world. In order to accomplish their end, as Protestants, they had now to turn from the bishops to the State, if the plague of Romanism is to be removed.

The resolution was effectively supported by Rev. W. C. Minifie, who advanced various reasons why there should be no submission to Rome. We cannot accept her claim of infallibility, enforced by Papal decree. We cannot recognise her as the only true Church. The speaker declared himself "too much a Catholic" to become a Roman Catholic, and to submit himself to such a system of mental, spiritual, and

ECCLESIASTICAL DESPOTISM.

Mr. Minifie closed with an urgent call to "study, preach, defend, and above all to live, the truth."

Rev. C. Fenwick Ward advanced four reasons for objecting to the institution of the Mass—in principle it is unprimitive, un-English, unreasonable, and unscriptural. Neither sense nor science can prove or commend transubstantiation. We find it opposed to the teaching of the Word of God. The work of Christ needs no repetition, for it is a finished work; no amplification is possible, because it is a perfect work. A fourfold ground for opposing the confessional was set forth; auricular confession is degrading to the priest, dangerous to the poor penitent, opposed to the interests of the Church, and a usurpation of the prerogative of Christ, the only Mediator.

Rev. J. B. Barraclough, in a few stirring words, emphasized the importance of studying the Word in order to a refutation of error—not only the errors of Ritualism and Romanism, but also those of Rationalistic unbelief.

At the evening meeting the hall was crowded. Mr. B. Nicholson presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. W. Cuff, W. R. Mowll, H. Lindsay Young, and others.

The Railway Mission.

THE anniversary gatherings in connection with the Railway Mission were full of spiritual stimulus. The list of meetings was an extensive one. Three days were devoted to conferences, which were largely attended by workers and friends from various parts of the country, as well as by delegates representing railway work in foreign lands.

The proceedings culminated in an enthusiastic meeting held on April 25 at Exeter Hall. Sir H. H. Bemrose, M.P., presided, and Mr. R. Nixon, B.A., the secretary, gave some account of the Mission's progress. During the past year twelve new branches have been established, making a total of over 400. Gospel services, Bible classes, and special missions have resulted in many being brought to the Saviour. One notable case was that of an engine-driver, a slave to strong drink, who had been brought under conviction of sin. One afternoon, after a week of heavy drinking, when he was almost in despair, the mission workers visited him, and by his own fireside he cried to the Lord to save him.

HIS HOME BECAME ENTIRELY CHANGED, and the wife, who at first was sceptical as to the genuineness of her husband's professions, found salvation herself in a cottage meeting held in their home. This driver had been nicknamed "mad Peter," and one of his mates said he would give a shilling to hear his first testimony. The words, "kept by the power of God," which proved a source of strength to him, appear in a conspicuous place in the home.

At Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, Bradford, Glasgow, Cardiff, and other important railway centres, meetings are held regularly every week, during part of the meal hours, in messrooms connected with goods and other departments. During the last half of the meal hour a short service is conducted for the men, who welcome the joyous singing of hymns and the brief Gospel addresses. At these meetings the message of the Gospel has reached men who have not been in a place of worship for years, many, it is believed, being led into a new life.

Blessing has also attended the operations of the mission abroad. In India the work has been carried on chiefly on the East Indian Railway, the company having granted facilities to the Society's missionary, Mr. Thomas Pollock. Meetings were held at Jamalpur—where, in the locomotive workshops, there is a native staff of about 8,000 persons—Cawnpore, and other important centres. In the course of the year's itinerary, over 13,000 miles were traversed. Meetings were held in the institutes at the respective stations, and, where such places were not available, in the bungalows. Mr. Pollock was as well as to cast the good seed of the Kingdom into the soil, and had the joy of seeing a number of railway men turning to God.

In South Africa, at the important military depôt at De Aar Junction, as none but railway and military men were allowed on the railway platform, the duty of commencing Gospel work among the troops devolved on the Railway Mission evangelists. The only hall in the place being "out of bounds," a railway guard gave the use of his house and yard, for the purpose of starting a Home. In a few hours, with willing help, the house was furnished, and the commanding officer who inspected it put it "in bounds." In Japan, too, good work has been done, and a number of railway officials have been impressed. The prospects are of a cheering character.

The meeting was subsequently addressed by Messrs. S. Gurney Sheppard and Josiah Nix, the audience expressing especial satisfaction with such reports and comments as referred to the spiritual revivals which had broken out at various centres.

Christian Colportage Association.

SOME of the men employed by this society came up for the twenty-sixth anniversary in Exeter Hall last Thursday. There was very hearty praise, prayer, and testimony in the afternoon, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. A little later the second meeting was held, with another chairman, in the person of Mr. W. H. Seagram. No one who was present could doubt for a moment that the men take real delight in their labours for Christ; and some of the Association's supporters gave substantial evidence of their confidence in its aims and attainments. Colporteur Weaver, of Doncaster, told of men and women who received his saving message a year or more ago, living consistent, Christian lives, and influencing others for God. After Scripture reading and prayer,

Mr. H. D. Brown, Secretary of the Association, made brief reference to the printed report. The fearful extent to which the printing press is used in the service of evil, creates vast need for the work of carrying the Scriptures, and pure Christian literature, to the homes of the people; and this is done by earnest, godly men, who not only persuade the people to buy, but seize the opportunities thus afforded for speaking to them personally concerning their salvation. As a result of the determination to maintain the high character of the work as

A MISSIONARY AGENCY,

God's blessing very largely rests upon it. The Society has been exceedingly useful among persons who are shut out from the usual means of grace, particularly in lonely country districts. A staff of 134 colporteurs is now engaged in the work; and during the past year Bibles, Testaments, books, magazines, and text cards were sold, to the total value of £16,226. Besides this, about 700,000 Gospel tracts have been distributed free. A special feature of the past year's work has been the large circulation of the "Marked Testament," which has been used of God to lead many anxious souls into "joy and peace in believing." Some 2,000 villages and hamlets are regularly visited; but many letters are received, telling of the spiritual famine, apathy, almost heathen ignorance, drunkenness, and immorality which abound in some parts, and asking if colporteurs cannot be sent to these places. As to finance, nearly the whole of a legacy received during the year had to be applied to reduction of deficit, arising chiefly through failure to obtain needed help for old-established districts, where guarantors have passed away, and their places have not been taken by others.

The Chairman told how a man, who afterwards confessed himself a Romanist, had obtained from the Secretary full information concerning the working of the Association. Promulgators of error are practically recognizing that this is but those who enjoy a personal knowledge of Christ are, in his name, determined to make use of the God-given weapons of a vital faith in opposition to the deadening influence of mere religionists. Mr. Martin Hope Sutton had, under the infirmities of age, specially journeyed to London that he might speak of long-standing and warm interest in the principles and work of this society.

Valuable assistance rendered to evangelists by the colporteurs, and the happy effects of co-operation between these two classes of Gospel workers, formed the text of some earnest words from Commander P. Wolfe Murray, R.N. Colporteurs have, in their packs, books for every stage of spiritual attainment; and some of these publications are found to be very useful in the edification of new-born souls, and even in affording increased knowledge to local preachers. The work of this Association helps those who are serving God in the direct preaching of his Word. He strongly urged all friends of the Association to join the "Chain of Prayer" in connection therewith, even though they can give neither active nor monetary assistance.

Previous to the collection being taken, prayer was made that donors might be Divinely guided in their action; and it afterwards appeared that, in addition to small sums put into the plates, three or four larger gifts or promises amounted to £210.

An appeal for more colporteurs in the spiritually dark places of North Devon, was made by Mr. W. R. Moore, a resident in that county. He was convinced that infidelity creeps over the land as the effect of repugnance to doctrines which even simple peasants know to be contrary to the Word of God. Workers who are on the same social plane as the people, and who simply seek to commend the love of Christ, will find open doors and ready ears.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

THE record of the Reformatory and Refuge Union is a long and honourable one. It has originated and developed many movements for the improvement of the social condition of the country, and, as the years go by, the organization manifests no whit of lessening energy. A large number of organizations are affiliated to the Union.

At the annual gathering held on Thursday last at St. James's Hall, the reports of the year's work, furnished by the Secretary, Mr. A. J. S. Maddison, were received with interest by a crowded audience. Through the action of the council have been brought prominently before the public. Lord Leigh, a vice-president of the Union, was successful last session in obtaining the passing of a Bill entirely abolishing the sentence of imprisonment previous to committal to a reformatory in Great Britain. A Bill was introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Drage at the close of last session, with the object of safeguarding those children who are habitually tramped about the country by their parents or professing parents, with no settled place of abode. Efforts are also being made to secure an extension of the age of admission to reformatory schools, and to obtain for Ireland the improvements in the law which have been found so helpful to child-saving work in England and Scotland. A Bill embodying the necessary amendments is now before Parliament.

A special committee has carefully watched the working of the Inebriates Act, and has facilitated its operations by communicating with county and borough councils and with the managers of inebriate reformatories, by publications, and by a grant of £500 to a reformatory for men which receives all classes of inebriates. Two workers among boys and three rescue officers have been employed throughout the year, the former in the visitation and rescue of poor and neglected children generally, the latter more especially in the enforcement of the 1880 Industrial Schools Act Amendment Act, and the rescue of children living in immoral surroundings. Schools not under the Education Department, nor under the Home Office inspection, are visited by the educational inspector of the Union; a separate report is furnished to each school. Scripture examinations have been conducted in many schools, and prizes awarded.

A North Africa Pioneer.

THE LATE MISS HERDMAN.

IN reviewing the fruitful missionary career of the late Miss Emma Herdman, of the North Africa Mission, we are impressed both by the wide-spread effects of her labours, and the fragrance of her Christian character.

A member of a prosperous business family in the North of Ireland, Miss Herdman had every opportunity of indulging in a life of ease and comfort; but, obedient to the Divine call, she gave herself, in spite of drawbacks occasioned by physical weakness, to the proclamation of the Gospel. Her brother-in-law, Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of Bath, tells us, in the luminous sketch of her life recently published by Messrs. Partridge and Co., that the work of grace in her soul was first kindled through the instrumentality of some friends whose acquaintance she formed at a boarding house at Torquay. The divinely communicated faith was fanned into a flame under the instructive ministry of the late Dr. Edersheim, who at that time was a Presbyterian minister in the Devonshire town.

In 1869 the Herdman family settled in Bath, where Emma became an ardent worker in religious and philanthropic undertakings connected with the Church of England, of which she was a member, and also with Nonconformist bodies. During a visit to Paris, too, she laboured in Miss De Broen's mission work in squalid and atheistical Belleville. In the company of her mother, whose health was affected, Miss Herdman visited the North African coast, the occasion affording her an opportunity of becoming acquainted with

THE NEEDS OF THE NATIVES.

She was deeply affected by the dark and depraved condition of those votaries of Islam, and took advantage of an opening which was presented in 1884 for commencing Gospel work among them. In the first instance, she laboured at Tangier, under the auspices of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and through her efforts copies of the Scriptures were circulated both in the coast towns of Morocco and in the far interior. Miss Herdman now became associated as an honorary worker with the North Africa Mission, continuing for a time at Tangier. Her next sphere was Arzila, thirty miles south, on the Atlantic coast. There, as indeed was the case throughout her career, her medical skill was a prominent feature of the Mission's operations. People were wont to assemble in large numbers to seek advice, and, coming for physical relief, they remained to hear the story of Christ's love. At Laraish, still further south, scriptural instruction proved specially fruitful; then, in 1888 came a removal to the important town of Fez, the capital of the Moorish Empire.

Up to that time no consular agent or other representative of Great Britain had been settled in Fez. Operations were commenced, therefore, under difficult and dangerous conditions, but the opposition of the populace to Christian work was overcome. The mission developed rapidly, the converts showing a fervent desire to labour for their Lord. Soon it was found possible, after giving careful training, to employ some as colporteurs, and Miss Herdman was able, in consequence, to rejoice that native workers in all parts of Morocco, and in the Sahara and the Soudan, were spending their time and strength in

EVANGELIZING THEIR FELLOWS.

"Those who are educated," Miss Herdman wrote at this time, "teach the others. Nothing could be more economically conducted. Our colporteurs are strong on the very points controverted by Islam." And again, "In several of the native colleges, the New Testament is being studied, and one man is going the round of the schools, telling the masters of Christ."

In addition to directing these manifold operations which sprang into being with such spontaneity, Miss Herdman found time to visit some of the tributary and scattered peoples of the country, and signs of blessing quickly became manifest. "There is real repentance," she wrote. "Wherever we stopped, mid-day or evening, we had appreciative listeners. We distributed Scripture portions and a number of Testaments, leaving many persons instructing others." In order to defray the cost of the vast number of copies that were circulated, Miss Herdman gave generously from her means, saying, "It is a good investment." Her difficulties were many, but she laboured incessantly; her spirit is well illustrated by her pointed entries: "Last three days, roasting (103 in the shade) like a fire blowing. Soles of my feet sore still with heat of stirrups. But, sun or shade, storm or rain, I am thankful to be privileged to preach to 'the regions beyond.' Hold me up by prayer. The fatigue of riding long journeys, exposure to early dew and fierce mid-day sun, doctoring and teaching sometimes 100 patients, is great and risky, but for my age I am able to do a great deal, and . . . what joy to sow in virgin soil, and what a responsibility to know the language."

For eleven years Miss Herdman worked on behalf of these wild but interesting peoples. Her faith and simplicity were a continual encouragement to others, and the work went steadily forward. A characteristic bit, translated from the Arabic of Miss Herdman's diary, reads: "Sid Ali told me of a labourer whom he had formerly taught. This man, it appears, has been occupied in teaching some students with whom he travelled. It now turns out that they have become Christians, and have made up their minds to teach in Fez. One of our men is very anxious to seek the SALVATION OF SCHOOLMASTERS.

He is also working among the people in the leather trade. A muleteer came and professed to be a Christian, and his wife also. I had sent two New Testaments to two Shereefs. This resulted in their conversion, and they now teach their friends and neighbours. We have need of thanksgiving, especially for the large increase of converts and inquirers."

That the physical trials incidental to pioneer work in a semi-civilized land should tell upon Miss Herdman's constitution, was, however, to be expected. She had borne up well, but during April of last year suddenly showed signs of physical collapse. She was hastily removed towards Tangier, in order that the help of a doctor might be obtained; but she sank during the journey, and passed away on April 24. Her body was taken forward to Tangier by the sorrowing friends, and buried in the cemetery of that town. Her memory must long remain fraught with spiritual stimulus to the people among whom she laboured so well.

The Hands of Christ.

BY PASTOR F. E. MARSH, SUNDERLAND.

THE hands of Christ are symbolical of his power; hence, in speaking of the power of the Lord with John the Baptist, it says, "The hand of the Lord was with him" (Luke i. 66).

The hands of Christ are studded with the jewels of blessing, and they are so, because they were once nailed to the cross (Psa. xxii. 16). They were once gory with the blood of suffering, but they are now glorious with the blessings of salvation. He shews his hands to us (John xx. 20); let us view them and see what they can do. They are—

1. Strong to Save.—Peter found the hand of Christ strong to save, in response to his "Lord, save me" (Matt. xiv. 30, 31). He can pluck out of hell's mouth, sin's power, Satan's grip, iniquity's pit, the flesh's influence, self's pursuit, and the world's glamour.

2. Potent to Heal.—The touch of Christ's hand meant cleansing to the leper (Matt. viii. 3). Christ can heal, by his touch of power, palsy's sloth, pride's fever, temper's fits, heart's impurity, mind's blindness, knees' feebleness, and ears' dulness.

3. Skilled to Open.—Christ's hands upon the eyes of the blind man meant sight to him (Mark viii. 23). Christ alone can give the inner illumination which shall cause us to see the sinfulness of sin, the sufficiency of Christ's Atonement, the secrets of God's Word, and the splendour of his Person.

4. Sufficient to Supply.—"Thou openest thy hand, they are filled with good" (Psa. civ. 28). The statement is true, providentially, spiritually, and eternally. The good God saves by his good grace, to a good life, and for a good end. There is always more left after we have done taking—as is illustrated in the feeding of the five thousand—than there was before. Taking from God, enriches Him.

5. Tender to Bless.—"Put his hands upon them" (Mark x. 16) are the words which describe Christ's action in relation to the children. Christ has the touch of the sympathetic friend, the loving mother, the kind father, the gracious brother, the thoughtful sister, the good Samaritan, and the gentle Jesus.

6. Strong to Uplift.—"He laid his hands on her, and immediately she was made straight" (Luke xiii. 13). The poor woman was bowed earthwards, and could not lift herself up—like many a believer in Christ, who has life from Christ, but who has not liberty through Him.

7. Mighty to Keep (John x. 28).—None can snatch from the hand of Christ, because his hand is encircled by the hand of the Father.

The Witness of History.

THE Gospel is neither a Protestant idea nor a Catholic organization, neither a Greek philosophy nor a Latin law; but a living Person, including and transcending all of them, a living Person on whom faith can feed continually, and only faith, for it is a plain absurdity to fancy that anything else can have touch of spiritual things. The witness of history confirms the instinct of every spiritual man, that the questions of government, of discipline, of ritual, of dogma, which occupy the noisy world, are very minor matters, however needful it may be to get some of them settled. History points us back with solemn emphasis to Christ himself. All Christian doctrine is summed up in Christ's Person, all Christian morality in Christ's example.

Professor Gwatkin.

Mr. George Cadbury.

IT is said that four of the leading towns in the United States have each distinctive questions relative to a newcomer, which indicate the prevailing atmosphere of the city life. Thus, at Boston, the home of the blue-blood aristocracy of New England, the question is, "Who is his grandfather?" At Philadelphia, the chief seat of learning, the question is, "What does he know?" At New York, the prevailing monetary tone is seen by "How much money has he?" And at Chicago, the busy emporium of the West, the question is, "What can he do?" The subject of our sketch could successfully pass all four tests, and yet they would not exhaust his claims upon the respectful admiration of his fellow men, nor the reasons which enable us, like the converts of the Apostle Paul, "to magnify the grace of God in him."

Mr. George Cadbury is about sixty years of age. He is a native of Birmingham, to which town his grandfather removed from the West of England in the early part of the century. Mr. R. T. Cadbury was a public-spirited man, and was for nearly thirty years Chairman of the Town Commissioners, in the days before Birmingham was a municipal borough. His portrait is to be found among the group of the Anti-Slavery leaders in the National Portrait Gallery. Mr. John Cadbury, the father of our subject, was also a conspicuous figure in Birmingham life. He was one of the first teetotalers to sign the total abstinence pledge. Mr. John Cadbury and his brother were the first "Cadbury Brothers," who commenced the manufacture of cocoa in a small way in Bull Street, thence removing to Bridge Street; and, as all the world knows, at the present time the works are at Bournville, about four miles out of the City—mainly as the result of the indefatigable labours of Mr. George Cadbury; for when he came into the firm, as a young man forty-one years ago, it was a losing concern, and only employed twelve hands.

For many years Mr. Cadbury worked fourteen hours a day, until the business had taken the turn, and even now he gives personal supervision at the works from about 8.30 a.m. to 5.30 p.m. Prior to the death of his elder brother, the late Mr. Richard Cadbury, which occurred last year, the two brothers had worked together most harmoniously for nearly forty years, sharing the same tastes in religious and philanthropic enterprise, and dividing the responsibility at the works. Mr. George is now assisted in the business by the two sons of his brother, and his own two elder sons, but his thoughtful and generous spirit is ever on the look-out for fresh opportunities of adding to the health and comfort of the 2,400 employés at Bournville, of whom 1,600 are girls.

"I am happy, but I don't believe my surroundings and worldly success have made much difference; happiness depends on a consciousness of having in some measure endeavoured to do one's duty." So Mr. Cadbury is reported to have said to someone who questioned him on his success and its influence on his happiness. Those who know him best will readily believe that for him, as for everyone, happiness is the result of having tried to make someone else happy. As a teacher for nearly forty years in the Severn Street Friends' Adult School, he has had nearly 3,000 men pass through his class, and still has the pleasure of going every Sunday morning (leaving home at half-past six) seven miles into the town to meet his men.

His model village for the workpeople and others has taken a vast amount of time and thought, to secure conditions such as shall preserve the essentially country character of the estate. He established the meeting-houses in the three villages lying near to the Manor House, for the services and clubs connected with the branch adult schools of the Society of Friends. He was the founder, and for three years President, of the Evangelical Free Church Council of Birmingham, over whose interests he carefully watches, in such little things as recommending the establishment in connection with each church of a boys' club, whereby nearly forty clubs, with a membership of over a thousand, have been called into existence during the last two or three years. He had also advocated a parochial system of visitation; and the practical help he gives to the councils all over the country in the preparation of Free Church Parish Maps for the respective towns, is proof of an enlightened spiritual vision, combined with practical common-sense.

From Photograph by Mr. E. B. Mouell, 174, Broad Street, Birmingham.

Mr. Cadbury is ever ready to lend his valuable assistance to any question connected with the social welfare of the community, and not only can he propose plans, and find money, but what is infinitely more difficult, he can inspire others with his own enthusiasm, and so attract and retain the devoted co-operation, not merely of his employés, but of workers in all ranks and conditions of society. He is a supporter of Old Age Pensions on the lines recommended by Mr. Charles Booth, the Y.M.C.A., the Peace Society, the Liberation Society, the Liberal organizations all around him, the Education League, the Sunday School Union, Temperance and Christian Endeavour Societies, and a multitude of other agencies.

The Home of Rest for Female Christian Workers is a welcome haven to the Salvation Army officers, and to convalescent Sunday scholars, while his grounds are freely opened almost daily during the summer months for Sunday school treats and the Poor Children's Country Holidays. He is, in truth, not merely a well-known member of the Society of Friends, but a Friend indeed to all whose circumstances constitute any claim upon Christian sympathy, and in all his work he has the hearty co-operation of Mrs. Cadbury and their family. Personally one of the most unassuming of men, he is wonderfully catholic in his sympathies, tolerant towards the adverse opinions of others, decisive as to the course of personal duty, and unflinching in his assertion of long-cherished principles, and ever living "as in the Great Task-Master's eye."

Points and Outlines.

Question and Answer.

Wilt thou at this time restore? . . . It is not for you to know . . . But ye shall receive. . . . (Acts. i. 6-8).

I. Some things which are not for us. (a) It is not proper for us to know. (b) It is not profitable. (c) It is not possible. (d) It would not be good.

II. Some things for us to receive. (a) Mental power. (b) Moral power. (c) Spiritual power.

III. Something for us to be—witnesses. (a) Of what Christ has done. (b) To what He has revealed. (c) To what we have experienced concerning Him.

C. H. Spurgeon (Sermon, No. 2,330).

Real Service and Sacrifice.

Though I bestow . . . though I give . . . it profiteth me nothing (1 Cor. xiii. 3).

I. Beneficence without love profits nothing.

II. Self-sacrifice without love profits nothing.

Learn from this passage what services and sacrifices are truly profitable—those only that are prompted by love. D. L.

"I Know Whom I have Believed."

(2 Tim. i. 12.)

Note the state of mind expressed in these words. It is opposed to (1) all negative belief; (2) the spirit of self-reliance; (3) all vague belief.

To the Apostle, Jesus Christ was an undoubted, an intense reality. He had heard his voice speaking from the sky; He had seen Him in vision; he had obeyed his summons; and Jesus was now with him, his Friend and Master—his life, his aim, his all.

It is the end and aim of preaching to lead to this deep, living, personal trust in God.

E. Johnson.

Hear Christ!

Did the Father say, "This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him"? Then let every one of our hearts echo to this testimony given of Christ, "This is my beloved Saviour." Hear Him (1) ye youth, while it is called to-day; (2) ye old and grey-headed, that have one foot in the grave. He is God's Beloved Son: He came upon a great errand. Ye that have heard Him, hear Him again!

George Whitefield.

Christian Life.

(Phil i. 21.)

The words, "To me to live is Christ," afford an insight into the Apostle's heart, and open to view the fundamental principles of Christian life. They indicate:—

I. Entire self-renouncement.—Every form of evil may be traced to one source—selfishness. The text brings before us a man separated from the mass of men by the suppression of selfishness. He renounces self by receiving the fulness of Christ.

II. The Christian's devotedness to Christ.—He is no longer his own, because he has given himself to the Saviour. The aim and single purpose of his life is to please Christ, to honour Him, to serve Him.

This spirit of devotion to Christ is vital Christianity. It is not an enthusiastic state of excitement, but a rational, becoming, and necessary condition of a pious mind. Jesus Christ, to whom he lives, is worthy of heart and life service. (1) Because He is a Divine Person, in whom dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and (2) because He is a Divine Saviour, and has done and suffered for us more than our gratitude and service can ever repay.—J. C[illegible]ackson.

Père Jacob's Conversion.

A SINGULARLY interesting narrative comes to us from Pastor Ch. Merle-D'Aubigné, of the Société Centrale Protestante d'Evangélisation. It tells the story of "Père Jacob," of Monteynard, Isère, who was converted from Roman Catholicism, and did good service in the Gospel cause.

Père Jacob, as he was commonly called, had always been a religious man, and he was one of the most faithful parishioners of the curé of Sinard, near Grenoble, on the borders of the impetuous torrent of the Drac.

In 1866 a young soldier, just returned from the war in Mexico, called one day on Père Jacob. At the end of a long conversation on different topics, the good peasant pressed upon his young friend the claims of religion.

"Religion!" said the young man, "I have never troubled much about that; but I must bring you a book which speaks about God; it was given to me at Marseilles when I left for my last campaign. You will surely understand it, for I see you are up to those things; as for me, I could not make anything of it."

It was a New Testament. Père Jacob read it seriously, but profited nothing by it. The book was laid aside in a drawer, and remained there for many years without being opened. The ground was not yet prepared to receive the seed of the Word of God.

Twelve years later, in 1879, three Capuchin monks visited Sinard to hold a mission. Père Jacob and his wife attended the services regularly. They were so pleased with what they heard that they brought every day fowls, vegetables, or fruit to the curé to help him to entertain the missioners. At the close of the mission, a lecture was announced for men only, and our friend was one of the very first to take his seat in church. This time, however, it was very different; the sermon was a long string of abuse, coarse and violent, against all womankind and family life. Father Jacob was thoroughly disgusted—he left the church indignant, and returned home.

Before going to bed, Père Jacob went to the chest, opened the drawer, took out and went out to the stables, where he was sure to have a quiet time. There, after having fed the cows, he put his lamp on the milking stool, placed the book beside it, and falling down on his knees, he exclaimed: "O Lord, if what I have heard to-night is thy religion, tell me so; but if it is not the true one, then let me know it."

He opened the New Testament, and read where his eyes fell; it was the 8th of Romans. The scales seemed to fall from his eyes all at once; in a moment he passed from profound darkness and anguish into light and joy. The greater part of the night was spent in reading the Gospel and in prayer. In the morning he was a new man. A few hours had sufficed to turn a devout Papist into a disciple of Christ—more than that, into an apostle.

It all seemed too good to be true. Fearful of having been mistaken, Father Jacob rose early next day, and went to a neighbour whom he knew to be in earnest about spiritual matters. "See," he said to him, "what I have found in this book; tell me what you think about it."

This friend soon experienced a like change, and light shone into his soul. Days and nights were spent in the study of God's Word; the two friends could not tear themselves away from this precious study.

Having learned that there was a Protestant church at Notre Dame de Commiers, about ten miles from Sinard, the two friends resolved to go there, and on the following Sunday they were present for the first time at a Protestant service.

Henceforth Father Jacob's zeal knew no bounds. When he understood that salvation is the free gift of God, he burned to announce it to everyone. As he was much beloved, his neighbours listened well at first, but many began to say, "He has gone mad," and opposed him. But nothing discouraged him. In the end, his wife, one of his sons, and some others in the commune accepted Jesus as their Saviour, and renounced Popery.

On the other side of the Drac lie the important communes of la Motte St. Martin la Motte d'Aveillans, and the smaller one of Monteynard. This torrent forms an almost impassable barrier between the opposite sides of the ravine. The only bridge at that time was formed of two wire cables suspended over the foaming abyss, and placed one above the other; on the lower the passenger trod, while he held on by the upper one. But God had work for his servant to do on the other side, and he was not afraid.

One day he went to visit an engineer who lived at the foot of the opposite precipice—a serious man and a good Catholic—to speak to him of the Gospel. Their first interview was long, and they did not separate without prayer. This man began to study the Word of God, and after many visits from Père Jacob he abandoned for ever the errors of Rome.

Now began for Père Jacob a true work of evangelization. Without considering his personal interests, he left his farm for two, three, or four days at a time, to go to "les Mottes," where he held numerous meetings, and followed them up by visits from house to house. Whole nights were spent in earnest appeals to all whom he could bring together. Thus he succeeded in gathering around the Word of God a number of families who never afterwards entered a Catholic church, and this in a country where men and women are either bigots or atheists.

CALLED FOR FURTHER SERVICE.

But God was, during this time, only preparing his servant for more decisive work and a wider field of service.

In 1891 the commune of Monteynard was served by the Abbé Martin, a priest who was much beloved by his people. On his sudden removal from the place the villagers resented bitterly the bishop's action, and many decided they would not go back to the Roman Church.

But what was to be done? they could not do without any religion in their village. One of the most esteemed and influential men of the commune, Ed. Perrin, took counsel together with three others, and decided they would call the Protestants. They accordingly wrote to our friend, who was the only Protestant they knew, a letter which was thus addressed: "Monsieur Jacob, Protestant, at Sinard, on the other side of the Drac." The letter reached its destination, and the following Sunday Père Jacob, accompanied by a friend arrived at Monteynard.

"What a strange-looking priest this man is, in his peasant's blouse," said Perrin to his friends.

That very evening a meeting was held in an empty house. The men listened seriously, but with astonishment, to their "minister," but the women only laughed. Père Jacob, sometimes in patois, sometimes in French, spoke to them of free salvation in Jesus Christ, for nearly two hours.

At the close he said: "I hope you have been in earnest in the advance you have made to me; I have responded with joy to your call; but, mark you, I have not come to ask you to become Protestants, but to persuade you, in the interests of your souls, to become Christians. Do you wish me to come again?"

"Yes, yes," they cried from all parts of the room.

"Well, if that is so, I will remain here for a few days, and I will visit you in your homes."

For eight days the good man conducted meetings every evening, and paid many visits during the day. His words in public and in private were abundantly blessed, and a Protestant congregation was formed.

In 1892 the Evangelical Society of Geneva, helped in the last years by the "Société Centrale," sent a pastor to take care of the little flock; and in 1894 a small church was built in Monteynard.

That day Father Jacob's face was beaming with joy, and his heart overflowing with gratitude. "I wish," writes one who was present, "that I could reproduce the whole of his touching address. He reminded us of the aged Simeon taking the Saviour in his arms. No one was forgotten by him—the Société Evangélique de Genève, the Société Centrale, the friends who had come to bring God's Word to the infant flock, the devoted pastor and his wife, all were remembered with thanks to God; and he concluded by an earnest appeal to his brothers to give their hearts to the Saviour, and to confess the name of Christ boldly."

After this day his visits to Monteynard were rare. He suffered from asthma, which returned whenever he underwent much exertion. During the last illness of his wife his health seemed restored, but it was not for long. On October 11, 1898, our friend, having caught a chill, was obliged to take to his bed, and four days afterwards he slept his last sleep in the arms of his Saviour.

"I am nothing," he said, shortly before his death, "but when I pray, all God's resources are at my service."

The Christian's Faith.

A FAITH that trusts in Jesu's blood,
And proves the promises are good;
A faith that follows where He leads,
Who knows his children's hourly needs—
Such faith be mine!

A faith that trusts no human skill,
My pitcher at the fount to fill;
A faith that conquers in His name,
Who for our full salvation came—
Such faith be mine!

A faith that doth for blessing trust,
Tho' self be humbled in the dust,
And gladly takes the lowest place,
Sustained by undeservèd grace—
Such faith be mine!

A faith that, though the heart be rent,
Doth yet the Mercy Seat frequent,
And finds it in the hour of grief
A place of ever sure relief—
Such faith be mine!

A faith that looks time's shadows through,
And keeps eternity in view;
Yet with the talents God hath lent,
Is on some useful mission bent—
Such faith be mine!

A faith that, when life's day declines,
Can ever read between the lines,
Upon the glorious Gospel's page,
"How bright the Christian's heritage!"
Such faith be mine!

The London Spectacle Mission Society is an agency of incalculable benefit to the poor whose livelihood depends, more or less, upon their unclouded powers of vision. For several years the Society has worked in the West End; but now its operations are firmly established in the East End of London, where its beneficent efforts are more urgently needed. The number, of applicants continues to increase, and it is gratifying to learn that the interest of the public in the Mission has been manifest to an extent hitherto unknown. Every care is taken in order that only the deserving are assisted, and all needy persons are welcome to the benefits as far as the resources of the Mission allow. Many of the applicants have been enabled to retain their situations by means of the timely aid of the Mission. The hon. sec. is Miss C. Waring, 197, Sutherland Avenue, W.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 6. Psa. lxxxii.

ADDRESSED to judges and magistrates, this psalm deserves careful pondering by those who are called to give decision on the conduct and actions of their fellows. How inclined we all are to mitigate our sentences, and modify our criticisms, when the wealthy and influential stand before the bar of our opinion! Too often in society, and in the court of public opinion, judgments are warped by the position of those who have laid themselves open to criticism. Absolute sincerity is a difficult grace; indeed, it is only to be obtained when we enter into the meaning of the Greek word, which stands for "bathed in sunlight." It is only when we bring our judgment into the light of God, and allow it to be bathed there, that it becomes perfectly just.

"God standeth in the congregration." As in the church, so in the court of justice, He is present, holding an assize. Judges stand at his judgment bar; their decisions are referred to his consideration. Not unfrequently He reverses them! With unswerving rectitude He judges the cause of the fatherless and widow, and rescues the poor and needy. I have lately come on a case in which a firm of Jews in the East End has paid poor girls twopence for every suit of boys' clothes they have made. Is that likely to pass without some notice on God's part? It is impossible. Men who have acted thus must meet an inevitable anathema and sentence. In forming judgments on the events which are transpiring around us, let us pray that our judgment may be just.

One day Christ shall come by his own. He shall inherit all the nations. There are many recessions of the tide; but away back, in the ocean's heart, there is the inevitable pressure which is bringing on the moment of high water.

MONDAY, May 7. Psa. lxxxiii.

This psalm may be traced to that terrible crisis in the history of Judah described in 2 Chron. xx. It was written apparently before the Hebrews had received the assurance of victory, and when the first rumours of the confederacy were bruited abroad. The alliance of the surrounding nations threatened the very existence of the chosen people. Then it was that this psalm pleaded for the interposition of Jehovah, and challenged Him to do again as He had done.

See how the Psalmist seeks to implicate God in the quarrel. "They hate Thee," he said. "They take crafty counsel against Thy people." "Thy hidden ones" are concerned. The habitations, or pastures, of God (v. 12) are menaced. It is well when we can feel that for Christ's sake we are suffering reproach, when misfortune does not befal because of our own wrong-doing, but because of our identification with Himself. Dare to suffer with Christ. He will suffer with thee, and ultimately win a victory for thee and Him.

The strong threats of the Psalmist startle us. But we should notice v. 16, which asks that the trouble which should befal Israel's foes should lead them to seek God's name, and to know that He alone is Most High. Perhaps in heaven we shall come to see that God's most punitive dispensations were meant to lead us, and those in whom we are interested, to Himself. You have long been praying that such a one should be converted; you must not begin to complain because God takes some unexpected method of dealing with that soul. He always has his way "in the whirlwind and the storm."

TUESDAY, May 8. Psa. lxxxiv.

This psalm may belong to the same event in which the former originated. We read in 2 Chron. xx. that when God had answered their prayer and faith, the nation assembled in the Valley of Berachah to praise the holy name of Jehovah. Possibly this psalm may have been composed for that occasion, and first sung by that redeemed people.

It is full of memorable and beautiful expressions. That God's tabernacles are lovable, that He is willing to be my King and my God, that the highway to Zion may run through a man's heart, that it is possible to turn every valley of weeping into a place of welling springs, that life is an ascent or climb from ridge to ridge, that God is a Sun for northern climes where the light is dim, and a Shield where the burning heat is intolerable—what sweet thoughts are these! How they linger in the memory! Let us dwell on them.

It is, of course, impossible to dwell in the House of God, amid the demands of our daily life. It would be an ill day indeed, for the church, and the world too, if all God's troops were for ever shut up in their barracks; or, to use another illustration, if all the lamps were left in the truck on the station platform instead of being distributed to the carriages to light them as they enter the dark tunnels. But though we may not literally stay in God's House, we may carry the spirit of it with us into all places whither we are called to go. Look up, Christian soul, for grace, the bud of glory. Look on for glory, the crown and flower of grace. Receive the blessing which the Risen Lord gives thy faith, as thou goest forth to abide in Him.

WEDNESDAY, May 9. Psa. lxxxv.

This is a singularly beautiful psalm. As a literary composition it must rank very high. It dates from some time of great national deliverance, like that celebrated in the two previous psalms. God had already done great things for his people, and they now asked Him to give them as much spiritual quickening, as He had already vouchsafed temporal deliverance: "Thou hast turned thyself . . . Turn us again, O God of our salvation."

The eighth verse suggests a duty which we are too prone to forget. Be quiet, O Christian heart, when thou hast prayed. Listen to what the Lord God shall speak to thee. Thou wilt hear a still, small voice in thine heart, for God will speak peace. How true this is! God speaks Peace of Jesus Christ to the careworn, worried one, to the burdened and depressed one. Listen, oh listen! The voice is very still and gentle; but it thrills thy deepest nature, and produces a calm like that which spread over the troubled waters, when Jesus arose in the tempest-driven bark and said, "Peace, be still." Yes, dear soul, his salvation is nigh thee—nearer than thy enemies, nearer than thy anxieties. And his voice of peace is the precursor of his arm of saving power.

But God's peace is consistent with his righteousness. At the Cross of Calvary, and in Jesus Christ, the Son of his love, mercy and truth, which seemed going in opposite directions, have met; righteousness and peace, that might have appeared in antagonism, have kissed. Truth and righteousness answer to each other from earth to heaven. And after this, what good shall God withhold to those who make his footsteps a way in which to walk?

THURSDAY, May 10. Psa. lxxxvi.

This is the only psalm in the third book ascribed to David. It sounds like his. There is a lyric beauty and pathos about it, which are so characteristic of his work. He speaks of himself in the second verse as godly, not that he arrogated some special saintliness as his portion, but that he was conscious that his life was distinctly Godward and dependent on the supplies that God communicated.

It is remarkable to contrast his statement that he prayed all the day long (3) with the frequent statements scattered through Bramwell's letters. "My dear brother," he says, "my life is prayer. I assure you that I am just in heaven. It is the Lord." Again, "I never lived with God as at present. I can say, my life is prayer, and much in agony. It is continual prayer that brings the soul into all the glory." And yet again, "I see more than ever that those who are given up to God in continual prayer are men of business, both for earth and heaven. They go through the world with composure, are resigned to every cross, and make the greatest glory of the greatest cross."

But in order to have this life of prayer we must know the character of God, and base our prayers upon our knowledge. Notice that the psalmist says in the fifth verse, "Thou, Lord, art good;" in the tenth verse, "Thou art great;" and in the twelfth verse, "Thou art full." Meditate on these qualities of the Divine Nature, and you will not find it difficult to pray or praise with your whole heart.

FRIDAY, May 11. Psa. lxxxvii.

The words that pious Jews spoke of Jerusalem may be addressed by us to the Church of the Lord Jesus, using that term, as the Apostle Paul uses it, of all those who believe in Him, and hold Him as their Head.

The Church is founded on the mountains of God's righteousness and power, raised above the mists that brood in the valleys, in close converse with heaven.

> Glorious things of thee are spoken,
> Zion, City of our God!
> He whose word cannot be broken,
> Chose thee for his own abode.

To that city all nations shall send their tributary streams. They shall come from the north and south, from the east and west. The city had twelve gates, three facing each point of the compass, that the children of every nation, country, kindred, and tribe may feel that the city is theirs, and offers them its special welcome. It should be noticed, however, that the population of the Holy City, which is also the Bride, the Lamb's wife, is replenished by the new birth of individual souls. One by one men are born into the blessed citizenship, which becomes their birthright. The franchise is not given for deeds of prowess and victory, as is the case so often amongst ourselves. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."

How delightful the experience is, when the soul can feel that all its springs are in God; that it does not need to seek its supplies in its own energies or plans, but from the everlasting hills of the Divine nature; that it has within itself the well of water springing up to everlasting life. We may well exult when such is the case.

SATURDAY, May 12. Psa. lxxxviii.

A very sorrowful complaint, the utterance of a breaking heart. Some attribute it to that disastrous day when Josiah was slain in the Valley of Megiddo by Pharaoh-Necho, and the land became one great scene of mourning, which in after years became proverbial for grief. Or, of course, it may be the complaint of some weary soul, whose life has gone down into the shadow of death. But how marvellously it expresses the anguish of the soul when its hope seems dead. How many there will be whose eyes shall fall on these lines who will understand the experiences here described from the records of their own life, even if they are not at this time passing through the fires.

Notice that one argument which the Psalmist presses home on God is that his praise will be retarded, that his loving-kindness and faithfulness will not be declared, that his wonders and righteousness will be relegated to forgetfulness. O eager soul, is this thy one complaint? Dost thou forget thyself in thy great concern for the honour of thy God? Hast thou less thought for thyself than for Him? Yet, bethink thee, it may be that thy desire is being realized more nearly than thou knowest, and that God is being more magnified in thy living death than in thy deliverance. Had the Psalmist not suffered, this psalm had never been composed for the expression and alleviation of countless sad hearts. God was being magnified more than the singer knew. And it may be that thy contribution to the wealth of the Church is to come from thy present pain. Be of good cheer, and await the far-off interest of tears.

Lover and friend may seem far away; but since the time that this psalm was composed we have come to know of the Divine Man who was perfected through sorrow, and has become the faithful High Priest who is able to sympathize with, and help to the uttermost, all who tread the pathway of the cross, which is still flecked with his blood.

Other Lands.

From Orlando to Tuskegee.

FROM Orlando we went to Tuskegee, the very suitable locale of the Normal Industrial Institute for coloured young men and women, founded and superintended by Mr. Booker T. Washington and a staff of able helpers in every department, prominent among whom is Mrs. Washington. There are over 1,000 students, of whom about three-fifths are men. A detailed account will follow in a later letter.

This work appears to indicate the most likely way to peace and quietness in the South. A large proportion of the teachers and students are Christians. The men neither drink, nor smoke, nor chew. They would not be retained in the Institute if they did. They are intent on improving themselves, most of them learning a trade, some preparing to be teachers. Their early rising and going to meals to the sound of the bell; marching out from each meal two and two; beginning and closing the classes to the tick of the clock—all this trains them in punctuality, order, and precision. They gather in the church for family worship between 8.40 and 9.30. Thus the atmosphere of the place is religious, industrial, intellectual, and social.

The chief cause of trouble in the South after the war was the conferring of the franchise upon the freedmen without distinction or qualification; and, on the one hand, the endeavour of the party which had liberated them to secure their votes, which it was very natural for the freed slaves to give them, and, on the other hand, the endeavour of the opposite party to deprive them of their vote. Then they were placed in various positions of trust and office, which excited the animosity of the Southern whites; who, having lost them as slaves, could not endure them as holding any semblance of authority over them in the capacity of policemen, or other and higher grades of public service.

Had President Lincoln not been vilely assassinated, this state of things might never have arisen. That wise and able man would in all probability have required some educational and property qualification, which would have prevented such a large number of votes being suddenly precipitated on the country, to be the determining factor in every election.

The Institute at Tuskegee will filter gradually into the body politic a succession of men trained as above described, and not amenable to the ways and schemes of wire-pulling politicians.

When a young man from this Institute goes into a locality seeking employment, he often, like others, finds it difficult to obtain it. But if he wears the Tuskegee regulation cap, or some part of the uniform by which he may be recognised, he is likely to be sought out and employed, because the moral and industrial training given there is regarded as producing a desirable hand; and self-interest leads to his employment. The same applies equally to young women.

It may be asked, What are a thousand such men and women among millions? Very true, but we are daily learning the influence for good or evil of little things, and as Hampton produced Tuskegee, so Tuskegee will produce other similar institutes.

I have strange thoughts about the downtrodden races who are regarded by some as condemned to servitude by the act and curse of God. Jesus taught that the path of service is the way to rule, and God's Elect Servant is his King, whom He has set upon his Holy Hill of Zion. Our Lord summed up his own character and that of the Father in two sentences: "I am meek and lowly in heart," and "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Whosoever takes his yoke upon him and learns of Him finds rest to his soul.

When I look upon the patient faces of these people, and into their pathetic eyes, and hold intercourse with them, I find in many a meekness and subduedness which reminds me of the primary beatitude, the foundation of all the rest: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Here God's King strikes the keynote of his kingdom, and the following notes are in harmony with it: "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

Then my memory takes hold of the Divine assurance: "The first shall be last and the last first." "Many are called, but few chosen." "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." I cannot doubt that in the resurrection, when the Ethiopian shall have changed his skin by the power of God, and colour prejudice has gone the way of all the earth, then in the new heavens and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, many of these men of sorrow will be glorified together with the Man of Sorrows, and their position will be very different from that to which they have been subjected here.

In the Far North.

WRITING to friends in England, Rev. Edmund James Peck, Blacklead Island, Cumberland Sound, gives some encouraging particulars of his missionary station:

"As the snow-house (says Mr. Peck) in which I am living is the largest in the village, our congregations gather here from time to time. The women sit on the raised bank of snow used for sleeping. I stand near the Eskimo lamp, and others crowd round me. Our meetings are simple and hearty, and I find that God makes up to one often by inward power and peace for what we lose in the way of outward comfort.

"I was led in faith to claim for Christ the Arctic wastes still unevangelized. Having heard that some Eskimos were living on the ice in the north, I thought it well to visit them to try to do something for their spiritual good. After passing through some very rough ice, which was piled up in great heaps some 10ft high, we crossed some smooth ice, reaching our friends in the evening. There were some nine snow-houses with fifty souls. These poor creatures, living but a stage above the brutes, put a carnal meaning on almost everything one tells them. It is extremely difficult to make them understand the spiritual aspect of God's character.

"We have been busy enlarging our grammar and working out difficult points connected with the dialect spoken here. Our surroundings, through the nature of the country, are gloomy enough. We finished to-day our 'spring and summer terms.' For fourteen weeks we have been studying the language with scarcely a day's intermission. We cannot feel too thankful to God for his goodness in giving to each the needful health and strength.

"The Theodora left this morning, taking some Eskimos, so must call here again before finally leaving. On Sunday nearly every soul on the island came to the services. Mr. Jansen, who is in charge of the American whaling station of Signia, came here. No ship called at his place last year, and his stock of provisions is almost exhausted. He left a few days afterwards, the Alert not having arrived. The ship came a few days later, relieving the anxiety of the friends out there, and when she left she brought Mr. Peck home. The voyage was good till they neared the Scottish coast, when, a violent gale springing up, they were driven to and fro, and finally after seven days were picked up by another steamer, the Alert being almost a total wreck."

Correspondence may be addressed to Mrs. Peck, 15, Carnarvon Road, Reading.

Congo Native Evangelists.

THE evangelization of heathen lands must I believe, be most largely accomplished by native agency. This, indeed, is what is going on in all parts of the mission field, with a success, particularly in Africa, which proves it to be according to God's plan. The glorious spiritual harvests in Uganda, Nyassaland, and in the cataract region of the Congo, have been, in their great development, largely due to the instrumentality of the native evangelists. Yet, it must not be forgotten, the blessing is the direct fruit of the soul-travails and the patient labours of the beloved missionaries from the home land.

From our Congo Balolo missionaries, in their great field of labour on the Upper Congo, come tidings from time to time of our native workers, for which we praise God. We are encouraged to continue in prayer for them, and to ask that He would multiply their number manifold. Some years ago at Bongandanga, one day a tall powerful man, noted as a "brave" amongst his people, came into the mission house, with an air of unusual seriousness about him. "God has spoken to me," said the man, "and so I come to you, white man, to teach me his word. I want to follow Him." They very simply told him the story of Jesus and his dying love, and how he could be saved by believing on Him. There and then, the strong man, kneeling a humble penitent at the feet of Jesus, yielded himself up to Him for salvation, and went away a new creature.

A few days afterwards he asked leave to give his testimony at a large gathering of the people in the station chapel. Constrained by the love of Christ alone, he went almost daily into the distant towns, testifying to his power to save, and giving out what he had learned from his Word. For long he continued to do this work without remuneration, but as it was evident that to this work, the Church at Bongandanga set him apart as an evangelist.

The work at Waka began in a remarkable way. A lad belonging to that place had been converted at Ikau, where he was not considered very bright. He returned to Waka, and at first did not witness for the Lord; but, becoming very ill, "Here am I," he thought, "a child of God, and I have not told anyone the Word of God." The Lord raised him up again, and he immediately began to give the people the Gospel, gathering them together in his father's house for that purpose. The first intimation of it which reached the station was when the Waka people sent down to ask for teachers. At the time it was not convenient for any of the brethren to go up river, but two native Christians were sent, and they found six professing believers, and a general spirit of inquiry in the town.

At Mbompona a number of the men were converted, and became at once concerned about the souls of those in the towns lying in the forest beyond them. They had at their own charges bought the land, and built a comfortable chapel for themselves, but they thought of those who had seldom heard the Gospel, and, without any suggestion from Miss Clarke, they proposed to her to go with them to these towns to preach, which she was very glad to do. Frequently they went to distant towns, and would be absent from sunrise till sunset preaching.

What a splendid opportunity this gives of advancing the Lord's kingdom in the heart of Africa, and of rendering much needed succour to his faithful servants who are toiling for Him in that malarious climate. But for the kindness of our sister missions, who are helping us with their steamers in the emergency, our brethren would be in sorer straits. Adequate means of transport are indispensable to the carrying on of the work on the remote Upper Congo. The health and even the lives of the workers are sometimes endangered for the lack of nourishing food or suitable medicine, not forwarded for want of a steamer to bring them.

Supplies for the Famine.

WE briefly mentioned in our last issue that a first shipment of foods for the famine sufferers had gone by one of the vessels of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Co. No charge for freightage will come upon our funds, as the P. and O. Company have relieved us of that, thus supplementing the generosity of the various firms, who, in addition to executing our orders at the lowest trade prices, have in most cases contributed an equal amount of goods as a donation. So that for an expenditure of about £100 we have been able to send out fully £200 worth of specially nourishing preparations.

Messrs. Nestlé sent eight cases of their food and twenty-four cases of condensed milk.

Messrs. J. R. Neave and Company: fifty-four dozen of their food.

Mellins' Food Company for India, Limited: £20 worth of their special preparation.

The Frame Food Company, Limited: 480lbs.

The Infant and Invalid Food Company: seventeen dozen tins, comprising two different preparations.

Natural Food Company, Ltd.: £10 worth.

Messrs. Rowntree and Company sent five cwt. of specially manufactured cocoa.

Messrs. Dunn and Hewett: £10 worth cocoa paste.

Messrs. Liebig: £10 worth of meat extract.

Messrs. Brand and Company: a suitable selection of their preparations.

Bovril, Limited: six dozen four-ounce bottles of Bovril specially manufactured for abroad.

Messrs. Peek, Frean and Company: £20 worth of biscuits.

In addition to the above (100 cases), which went per s.s. Sobraon on Thursday last, is in preparation for shipment on Thursday, 10th inst., per s.s. Egypt. It will consist of—

A SECOND CONSIGNMENT

Thirty-six dozen of Messrs. Allen and Hanbury's foods.

Twenty-four dozen of Messrs. Clay, Paget and Company's farina.

Messrs. Carr, of Carlisle, are sending £10 worth of biscuits.

Messrs. R. Lehmann and Company: £8 worth of condensed milk.

Messrs. Symington and Company, of Market Harborough: cocoa and milk paste.

The three last-mentioned firms are making a free gift of their consignments. A number of other firms to whom we have written have not yet replied; but we confidently anticipate that this second shipment will be as large as the first, and we are hoping to have a third of equal value a fortnight later.

The need is so great that, while thankful to those who have enabled us to accomplish what has been detailed above, we feel constrained to redouble our exertions, and to ask for the continued and

INCREASED HELP OF ALL OUR READERS.

We have received already nearly £6,000, in sums ranging from £1,000, contributed by one family, to a few stamps, sent by one of the Lord's poor. Jesus Christ still sits "over against the treasury;" and, as we remember that many of the starving natives of India are our fellow-Christians, surely we shall be constrained to cast into the treasury, not only of our abundance, but through our self-denial.

Doubtless there are many other claims, not only those that are always with us, but of a special nature, such as the various war funds, &c.; in this connection it is interesting to note that an amount of £5, which we acknowledge in our donation list this week, is from "a few friends in Lovedale, South Africa." In sending this sum they express regret "that the amount is not larger owing to the many demands upon us in these days of war and distress."

We were able by last mail to send out nearly £2,000. This went to twenty-seven missionaries of various denominations labouring in the affected districts. That the missionaries form the best medium for distributing relief has been abundantly proved, and we are sure our readers approve of their gifts going through them. In a letter received a few days ago, enclosing an amount for the Famine Fund, the donor requested that it should "pass through the hands of some good missionary who distributes the Bread of Life with the bread that perisheth."

From the devoted men and women who are working among the famine-stricken we receive by every mail of the distress prevailing.

Some of the reports that we have already published in our columns have been reprinted in a four-page leaflet, and the illustrations which appeared in our issue of April 12 have been included. Apropos of these, a correspondent writes:—"The sight of those poor skeletons of children in THE CHRISTIAN of April 12 ought to be the means of getting enough British money to supply the necessities of the Hindoo children."

These leaflets can be obtained from our publishers at the following rates, post free: 100, 2s.; 500, 8s. 6d.; 1,000, 15s. They will be found very useful for distribution, either privately or at meetings, and cannot fail to arouse the sympathy of all into whose hands they may come. We shall welcome the help of our friends in scattering them far and wide in the interests of the perishing millions of India.

Some Chinese Converts.

IN a letter from Shuen King, Rev. Albert Evans, of the China Inland Mission, tells of earnest united prayer for the gathering in of converts. Petition to the throne of grace was signally answered, and some particulars are given of the first converts:—"The country people, three men, one woman, one youth, were all brought to us by a young man named Yang Ksing Loh, who was converted and baptized last year at Hauchong by Mr. Easton, and since returning home has been most persistent in witnessing for Christ amongst his relatives and friends. These men and two boys have attended service over a year, walking to and fro, a distance of sixteen miles. Often they have come through rain and mud, rather than miss the joy of meeting with us. This year we hope to assist them to get a place near home, where the women also may meet with them.

"Three of the city converts—two men and one woman—are members of one family, named Lang. Last year the whole three were laid up with bad ulcers. The father, having come to us as a water carrier, asked me to attend to him. The mother and son, at first suspicious, after a few days, seeing the improvement, asked me dress their sores. For some time I visited them daily. It was a time when there was a very bad feeling in the city, and as I passed through the streets I was loudly jeered at, and sometimes cursed. This made me pray the more for the poor people attending, and to our joy, some two or three months after their recovery, they tore down their idolatrous papeas and became inquirers.

"The remaining two are members of our household, relatives of an old Christian who had to be suspended some time ago at Paoning. We were able to receive him back again at the same time, so that our little church got an accession of eleven new members that day. Besides the joy of baptizing these ten, we had the added joy of accepting four new catechumens, one of them our teacher, for whom many prayers have ascended to the Throne of Grace."

Our Countrymen in India.—A drawing-room meeting was held at the house of Mrs. Studd, 2, Hyde Park Gardens, W., on Friday last, in aid of the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society. Colonel F. W. Major presided, and addresses were given by Rev. Patrick R. Mackay and Mr. Andrew Stewart, who have just returned from India. The far-reaching importance of the work of the society was shown by many facts and arguments; and appeal was made for more workers.

Notes from New York.

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, proprietor of the (New York) Christian Herald, has left for London, on his way to India, where he will make all arrangements for the reception of the 200,000 bushels of corn to reach Bombay on the first relief ship authorized by the Navy Department. Before leaving London he expects to arrange with the Secretary of State for India for the immediate despatch of another steamer, granted by the Indian Government, for the second cargo.

The pastor of the East Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church at Cleveland, Ohio, is rejoicing over the success of the self-denial of the ladies of his congregation in the matter of Easter bonnets. This action was taken in order to wipe out the church debt, and resulted in the contributing of 1,600dols. for that purpose on the Sunday. The male members of the church were so charmed with the example set them, that they subscribed or promised the balance of the mortgage. Many husbands knew nothing of the scheme till they saw their wives start out for church wearing "old" bonnets.

The Chicago Presbytery of the Presbyterian body, in reporting on its acceptance of the resignation of Dr. Hillis, pastor of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, admits that the words of chapter 3, sections 3 and 4, of the Confession of Faith, as quoted by Dr. Hillis, "are to certain minds a source of misunderstanding and embarrassment." Resolutions were unanimously adopted, overturing the General Assembly to appoint a committee "to take into consideration the whole matter of a statement of our doctrinal standard and to report to the next General Assembly." Dr. Parkhurst, one of the most widely-known Presbyterian ministers in the country, and always regarded as orthodox and conservative, declares for a new Confession of Faith. The two sentences from his sermon which have, perhaps, attracted the greatest attention were these: "Our own doctrinal prospectus advertises us as believing that little children—perhaps the babe at your bosom—is damned, already damned, damned before it was born, damned from everlasting. We pray that the time may be hastened when this libel upon the grace of God shall be erased from our records." He also said that it was a surprising thing that the Presbyterian Church was able to do as much as it did with "such an incubus strapped to it;" and went on to say that he could get along with a Confession of Faith containing little else than the words of Christ to Nicodemus in John iii. 16.

The Methodists are proposing changes in their Discipline. Three Eastern Conferences have voted to change that part of the Discipline that prohibits dancing, theatre-going, card-playing and attending horse-races. As a substitute, the New York Conference suggests a paragraph, part of which reads: "It is urged that all members of our churches shall 'redeem' the time—making wise use of the time—which God has committed to the keeping of every man, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; that they be not lovers of pleasure more than of God; that they abstain from all diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus; that they avoid the very appearance of evil, and that if anything causeth offence they will deny themselves for the sake of their weaker brethren."

Dr. Buckley, Editor of the New York Christian Advocate, a prominent organ of the denomination, on being asked his views on the matter by a representative of The Tribune, said: "The clauses referred to are really the great promoters of the worldliness which now honeycombs the Church. All specifications of this kind are contrary to the doctrine of St. Paul. The only thing that should be prohibited are those which are essentially immoral. Nine-tenths of the operas are more debasing than the majority of the theatrical plays. Still, a Methodist can attend an opera every night in the week." And the doctor is not usually regarded as by any means a champion of progressive ideas, either.

A Talk About Cowper.

A GREAT deal has been said and written lately about the Cowper Celebration at Olney, and it struck me that the young readers of The Christian would like to hear what it means. First of all, will you bring your atlases and find the county of Buckingham in the map of England? then look in the north of the county, near the Northamptonshire border, and you will see Olney marked as standing on the river Ouse.

On Wednesday last week thousands of people were assembled there from all parts of England to see the town, not for any merits of its own, only that in it William Cowper had lived for eighteen years, and had written about it in his poems. So everyone wanted to see the place for themselves. He was not born there, but at a vicarage in Hertfordshire, where his father was rector, and where his mother died when he was only six years old. Some of you have read or learned his verses on receiving a likeness of his mother, given to him fifty years afterwards, and you will remember how tenderly he loved her and mourned for her. He missed her all his days, for no one can take a good mother's place. I hope my young readers are good, obedient children to their fathers and mothers.

William Cowper died on April 25, 1800, so that is why last Wednesday was kept in his honour. He is buried at East Dereham, in Norfolk, and many went there to see his grave; but most preferred to visit the town where he had lived for so many years. Cowper's house at Olney has now been given for a museum to the town. It is in the market place, and is much as it was when he wrote his hymns and poems. In front of this house all the children of the town were assembled on the commemoration day to hear an address, and to sing Cowper's beautiful hymn—

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform.

They behaved splendidly, and seemed much interested in the address, which was about Cowper and his love for animals; and lessons were drawn from that, showing how every child might care for animals and birds, and be kind to all things.

Two reasons were given for this, (1) because it is right, for God cares for them; and (2) because children who do this will grow up to be kind and useful men and women. So I hope, dear children, you will lay these lessons to heart, and be very kind to your pets.

The children all wore a medal with a green and buff bow, which were the favourite colours of the poet. He used to wear a green coat and a buff waistcoat; rather curious you would think that now, wouldn't you? In the fields on the banks of the Ouse grow quantities of the large yellow "butter-burrs," and with these some of the windows were filled; they were Nature's own decoration for the occasion.

The Ouse flows peacefully along, as it did 100 years ago, and the water lilies grow there, as they used to do then, when Cowper and his dog wandered along by the side. It was in this river, one day, that the poet saw some beautiful lilies, and tried to reach them with his cane; but, failing to do so, his spaniel, "Beau," sat down to consider the case. At length the master whistled him off, to continue their walk. As they neared the spot, on their return, what was Cowper's surprise to see his dog plunge into the water, and, breaking off a lily, swim with it triumphantly to the shore, laying it proudly at his master's feet. Cowper commemorated the deed of his dog in some verses; the last two are:—

Charmed with the sight, the world, I cried,
Shall hear of this thy deed;
My dog shall mortify the pride
Of man's superior breed.

But, chief myself I will enjoin
Awake at duty's call,
To show a love as prompt as thine,
To Him who gives me all.

The spaniel's loving thought for his master taught the poet a lesson. May we not learn one, too? Do we love the Lord Jesus Christ who has done so much for us, and if so, are we trying to do what He would have us do?

Springtide Voices.

Hearken to earth's springtide voices,
Lambkins play and birdies sing;
Butterfly with bee rejoices,
All the air with joy doth ring.

Wavelets on the sands are playing,
Flowers their smiling heads upraise,
Sunbeams fair his will obeying,
Join in their Creator's praise.

But his little lambs grow weary,
And his blossoms droop and die.
Wounded sore in dwellings dreary,
Do his fragile birdies lie.

Who his flowerets frail will cherish,
Bind each bruiséd leaf and stem,
Kiss with lovebeams lest they perish,
For his sake who died for them?

Who his tiny lambs will pity,
Let them in his meadows play,
Bid these birdies of the city,
Midst the woodland trees, be gay:

Or on sands with blue waves playing,
Be as his own sunbeams free?
You will hear Him to you saying,
"Ye have done it unto Me."

Christian Endeavour.

TOPIC FOR MAY 6.

How Christians Grow (Mark iv. 26-29).

THIS parable is a perfect gem. It traces the story of a seed from its planting to its ingathering; but it tells, also, Christ's love for natural processes. How eagerly in his young life must the Youth of Nazareth have pored over the book of Nature spread open to his view. It was written by his Father, and the laws that prevailed there were duplicates of those that prevailed in the unseen and eternal.

The Sowing. "A man cast seed upon the earth." This should be our daily endeavour. We must not stint the seed-casting. By books and tracts, by sermons and chance words, beside all waters, and at all hours, whether in season or out of season. We can never tell whether this or that shall prosper, because we do not know what preparatory work may not have been done by the Divine husbandry. If I may speak for myself, I may say that I have felt that I could not do any great thing in the world, but would go on taking every opportunity of sowing, and I am beginning to see great results and harvests from many things which I never expected to yield special results. Go on sowing seed. You may pass away, resume your avocations, sleep by night, and rise each morning to new labours, but the seed will spring up and grow. Perhaps the Lord will teach us that it is no use to worry about our work. All we can aspire after is to sow the seed, leaving the results with God. He cannot fail. He will watch, whilst we sleep. He will give the increase, when we have gone away. Yes, and when we sleep in death, much of the seed we have sown will come to light, and go on thriving. Your duty is to sow beside all waters; it is God's province to care for the results.

The Growing. "The seed springs up and grows." This is due to its opening a minute and almost microscopic door to the energy of nature, latent in the soil. The seed abides in the soil, and the soil in the seed; and it is through their union that the tiny rootlet is thrust downwards and the green spire upwards through the heavy clods. "The earth beareth fruit of herself." But who can tell the secret of these marvellous processes? "God giveth a body as it hath pleased Him, and to every seed its own body." But, though we cannot understand, we may believe that in the heart, which in childhood or afterwards has received the Divine Word, those great processes are at work which shall eventually yield "seed to the sower and bread to the eater." Notice the silence, the mystery, the gradualness of growth in the natural world—also its persistency by day and night—and expect the counterpart of each in the spiritual. Take care how you ruthlessly pluck up God's seeds to see if they are growing. Beware, too, of forcing them into unnatural precocity. The greenhouse and hothouse is not the best place for God's young plants; they may be forced to a premature development which will exhaust their powers at too early a stage. Don't expect the full corn when there should be the ear, or the ear when there should be the bud. Everything is beautiful in its own time. Give me buds in spring; I have no desire for ears then. Buds in spring mean the full corn in the autumn.

The Sickle. "When the fruit is ripe." The brown hue of the corn is a delightful spectacle to the husbandman, and there is a precise moment when the experienced eye knows that the sickle must be put in. Only God knows when the fruit of our lives is ripe. "There is a reaper whose name is death." Well, but death is only the swarthy servant of God, who sends him to reap in the ripe grain. No Christian dies before his time. The stroke may come in young life, but it is the sign that, in God's eye, the fruit was ripe. Alas, for those who are cut down and cast into the fire, not because they are ripe, but because they have not the root of the matter in them, and will never come to perfection, and they are removed to make room for others.

"Jesus at the Pharisee's House" (Luke vii. 36-50). Golden Text.—"Thy faith hath saved thee" (50).

Introduction.

A PHARISEE invited Jesus to his house; He went (36). A centurion wanted Him (Lesson for April 22); He went (Luke vii. 6). Jairus called Him (Lesson for April 15); He went (Mark v. 24). And so we could go on. Jesus was so kind He never refused anyone who wanted Him. Do you want Him in your house? In your heart? He will come if you do (Rev. iii. 20).

Look at the customs of the country mentioned in our lesson to-day.

"Sat at meat" (36); reclined on couches.

House open (37); anyone could come in who liked.

Feet of guests outward from the table, sandals left at the door (38).

It was usual "to wash the feet," which were dusty, before meals (44).

The "kiss" of welcome generally given to visitors (45).

"Oil" used for anointing and refreshing after a journey (46).

"Alabaster box," a vase or flask, often of beautiful shape (37).

Key to Blackboard Plan.—The vase represents one of the various shapes used for the anointing oil; the woman gave her best (37, 38, 46). Her deep love (47) and great faith (50) brought sweet peace (50) into her soul; and above and around all her life hereafter is the grand word from the Master's own lips—"Forgiven" (48).

Let us glance at the little parable Christ uses (41-43). Two debtors—the woman and Simon. The creditor—God. Debt owed by one, 500 pence—£15 12s. 6d.; by the other, fifty pence—£1 11s. 3d. Both had nothing to pay. Both were forgiven. One loved much; one loved little. The lesson we learn. We all owe God a great debt. We have nothing to pay. God freely forgives (see Acts viii. 20; Isaiah i. 18; lv. 1-7; 1 John iv. 10-19; Psalms ciii. 33).

Jesus paid it, paid it all,
Long, long ago.

The Woman.

She was a known sinner (39). She knew her own sinfulness; she came to the right place to have her sins forgiven (38), "at the feet of Jesus." She came in the right spirit (44), the spirit of true humility and sorrow for sin; she brought her best, she gave her heart's love (37-47); she made no fuss, entered into no argument, she never spoke a single word the whole time; but Jesus knew all, everything; and He said to her, "Thy sins are forgiven" (48).

It is very interesting to trace all the people Christ spoke these words to; for example see Mark ii. 5, &c.

The Pharisee.

As we turn to Simon we see at once the great contrast between him and the woman; in fact, the opposite in most points.

He was of good position; the sect of the Pharisees was the aristocratic sect; he was proud, and had asked Jesus to his house out of curiosity. He treated Jesus in a discourteous manner, not even offering Him water for his feet (44, 45, 46). He was careless and indifferent to his guest, even speaking of Him almost with contempt (39).

Oh, how clearly does Jesus read his inmost thought—how He understands Simon's every motive! What a wonderful illustration is the whole lesson of how Christ saw deep down below the surface of human character! He seems to read the woman and Simon through and through.

There is so much to learn from every verse of the portion to-day that we cannot draw any one special point; but let us answer a question in 49—"Who is this?" (Matt. xvi. 15, 16; John vi. 69, xi. 27); and remember that true faith in this Christ of God brings full forgiveness of all sin (Matt. ix. 22; Mark x. 52, &c.).

And after the forgiveness comes "the peace that passeth all understanding" (Phil. iv. 7; John xiv. 27).

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Spring Conference of the Western District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held on the 25th ult. at Wells, Somerset. There was a large gathering of delegates. Rev. Preb. Beresford gave an address at a devotional service. In the afternoon Mr. S. Houlton, of Cheltenham, read a paper on "How best to work Associations in small towns;" and Mr. Oliver McCowen, representative for Burma of the National Council, gave an address which greatly interested the delegates, on the foreign work the Y.M.C.A. is undertaking.

On Sunday afternoon last, Mr. Oliver McCowen spoke to the Young Men's Bible Class at Aldersgate Y.M.C.A., giving a stirring missionary address, with special reference to Y.M.C.A. work in Burma.

On the 27th ult., by kind permission of Lady Ashburton, a drawing-room meeting was held in behalf of the foreign work of the English National Council at Kent House, Knightsbridge. Mr. F. A. Bevan occupied the chair, and addresses were given by Mr. W. H. Seagram (chairman of the Foreign Department), Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, LL.B. (Rangoon), Mr. W. R. Arbuthnot (Madras), Mr. Charles Fermaud, M.A. (Central International Committee, Geneva), and Mr. J. Campbell White, M.A. (Calcutta). Including the provision of a building for student work in the city of Bombay (which will cost approximately £8,000), the Council needs, in order to carry out plans which it has made for work in the foreign field during the next five years, the sum of £13,600, towards which £7,130 has been given or promised.

"Keswick" at Manchester.

THE third annual Convention was held at the Y.M.C.A. on April 23-26. These Conventions have been held chiefly to give to those Christian workers in Manchester who have neither means, time, nor opportunity of going to Keswick in July, an opportunity of hearing Keswick speakers in Manchester, and thus participating in the blessings which their more favoured brothers and sisters in Christ have enjoyed for so many years in the Cumberland town. That the right class of people have come, has been evident from a glance at the eager and expectant audiences which have assembled from day to day.

The first meeting was held on the evening of April 23, and on each of the following three days there was a prayer meeting at eleven, a Bible reading at 11.30, and general meetings at 3 p.m. and 7.30 p.m. Captain Tottenham occupied the chair at all the meetings, and the speakers were: Revs. John Brash, R. W. Colquhoun, E. T. Reed, and F. S. Webster, and Mr. A. B. Stoney, LL.D. The clear and simple setting forth of the fulness of blessing promised in the Scriptures to all believers who are willing to receive it by faith, was a great help to those who came hungering and thirsting for more light and life, and many were sent away rejoicing. The committee have been much encouraged by the testimonies of blessing received.

The May Meetings.

The Children's Home.

SAVING the children, body and soul, for Christ's sake—the great work to which the best energies of Dr. Bowman Stephenson have been devoted for many years—engaged the attention of a fully-attended meeting of appreciative friends gathered in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, last Friday evening. Rev. F. W. Macdonald, President of Conference, and the venerable Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers, were prevented, by pressing calls elsewhere, from taking part in this meeting, as announced. The choir of the Home enlivened the proceedings by singing; and these fresh young voices, praising the Redeemer, seemed to come as a powerful appeal in favour of the good work. Mr. THOS WALKER, J.P., treasurer of the Lancashire branch, was Chairman.

After the exercises of praise and prayer, Dr. STEPHENSON gave his thirty-second annual statement, "the biggest and best," telling of larger success, a more assured position, and a brighter outlook than in any previous year. The gifts for current necessities had amounted to £23,431, an increase over last year's income, despite demands upon the Christian public in other directions. Dependence upon free-will offerings, given with heart and hand, has been fully justified. Enlargement of the work would seem to have co-operated with prayer in producing large results. If God is to trust us with more money, He may well expect that we shall trust Him by

UNDERTAKING MORE WORK.

Including homes, cripples' aid, girls' protection, and other agencies, 1,435 children were under care; while systematic visiting and guardianship is also maintained over 500 more. A variety of pitiful claims have arisen; and the whole scheme is warmed by evangelical fire. Despite the contentions of political economists, action is founded upon the example of Jesus, who certainly thought that the weak and helpless should not be consigned to extinction. Alleviation has been wrought among epileptics; and some of the little ones, orphaned by tragic events in South Africa, have been received into the Home. The family system, with its home atmosphere and influence, is still carefully maintained, the majority of the workers being motherly women. Healthy work is a recognised element in the management; and religion stands as a first aim. Looking back upon thirty-one years of labour for Christ, statistics cannot compass the visions of moral and spiritual transformation that come into view.

A declaration of increasing interest in this movement as the years go by, was made by the CHAIRMAN. Like everything that is of God, the enterprise, small in its beginnings, had shown wonderful growth. Actual witness of the varied training given to the children had given him cheerful anticipations for their future; and much praise is due to Dr. Stephenson's devoted workers, who show much aptitude for their work.

Rev. WILLIAM GOUDIE, a missionary from India, remarked that those at the head of the Children's Home are for those who, in a normal condition of things, are his highest gifts to our infancy; and there can be no more beautiful institution upon earth than that which provides for natural deficiencies in this respect. The speaker's experiences abroad showed that there is no complete home life, and no adequate discharge of parental duty, outside the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Christian missionary often has to be a parent to outcast Hindu children; and seeing these little ones trembling on the verge of death, he puts aside the cynical utterance of the mere scientist, for the missionary is sent that the dying body, as well as the soul, may have life. The Children's Home is a constant inspiration to the missionary, in remembrance of its costly nature as a monument of Christian love. She is no mother who can only be such to her own children. The true mother is she whose tender love goes out to the fair face of every child she sees,—whose sheltering love gathers to the bosom of its care every needy little one she knows. If that privilege were realized, there is not a motherless child in our own land or in India who would not find a foster-mother; and God's beautiful provision—the home in its beauty and strength—would be realized in every land, as it is here.

Warmly expressing his abiding interest in all that concerns the Home, Rev. W. L. WATKINSON looked upon the institution as an effort on the part of the Christian Church to pay what he called a "magnificent debt," to realize a sublime obligation in regard to sympathy, compassion, and assistance for those whose need is very great. Good done through an organization like this, is like water flowing through a landscape and making its surroundings beautiful; whereas, to do "dabs of good" here and there, is like drops of dew swallowed up in the sand. This work of Christian philanthropy, carried forward by men of wide views, based on careful tests, and put upon a stable basis, is changing the desert spots of the nation into places of beauty and of blessing.

Rev. ANDREW CROMBIE and Mr. Jas. E. Vanner also advocated the claims of the Home.

The Boys' Brigade.

HOW to save the lads of the poorer classes just at the time when the hottest temptations of life assail them, is a problem to many Christian parents and workers among the young. When boys are about to leave school and commence a business career, the steps downward are easy; and it is exceedingly difficult for them to avoid the road to indifference, inebriety, and infidelity. It is not easy to name any movement which has so laid hold upon young lads and influenced them for good as the Boys' Brigade, the annual meeting of which was held at the Queen's Hall on Friday last.

In the absence of the Earl of Aberdeen—the honorary president of the Society—owing to the death of the Dowager Countess of Aberdeen, the chair was taken by Mr. J. CARFRAE ALSTON. The report shows that in the United Kingdom alone there are 800 companies, with 2,900 officers and 37,000 boys; besides at least 33,000 more in the United States, Canada, and other parts of the world. The definite object of the Brigade is "the advancement of Christ's Kingdom among boys, and the promotion of habits of obedience, reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards a true Christian manliness." The methods employed include boys' Sunday services, company Bible classes, Scripture Reading Union, drill meetings, ambulance classes, athletic clubs, swimming clubs, instrumental bands, classes of all kinds, "boys' rooms" for reading and recreation, and summer camps. It is most gratifying to learn that over 1,000 boys have professed being led to Christ during the past year.

Rev. E. GROSE HODGE, M.A., Rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, delivered a stirring address to the boys, in which he said there were three things which they needed for a truly successful career: (1) strong bodies, (2) strong and well-cultivated brains, and (3) strong characters. The latter, he said, could only be secured by receiving the Lord Jesus Christ; and he made an earnest and impressive appeal to the boys at once, and not to put off the day of salvation.

Professor G. ADAM SMITH, D.D., as the examiner in the recent competition, spoke of the good which was being effected all over the world through the Boys' Brigade. He was exceedingly gratified with the naturalness and honesty of the papers, from which he learnt how the boys loved their officers, praying for them every night, and how much they appreciated their labours on their behalf. He said, too, that, from the almost universal testimony in the papers, the chief means of boys going astray, and forming evil habits, was the older boys, and especially the men with whom they had to work—the one vice was gambling. Everywhere boys confess extraordinary temptations to betting and gambling, which led to untruthfulness and dishonesty. The speaker paid a warm tribute to the excellent service rendered by the officers, and said he was deeply impressed with the privileges of the post they occupied.

The brass band of the 2nd West Kent Company of Old Boys, and the bugle band of the 60th London Company, enlivened the proceedings with selections of music; while the dumb-bell display, the company and physical drills, the display on the parallel bars, the ambulance waggon and stretcher drill, and other exercises, won the applause of the immense audience, and contributed very largely to the success of the meeting.

Commercial Travellers' Christian Association.

MEETINGS in connection with the twenty-seventh year of this Society's work were held in Exeter Hall on Saturday last. In the afternoon, Mr. WILFRED NICHOLSON presided. The secretary, Mr. LEONARD COURTNEY, reported that during the year 454 new members had been enrolled. "Libraries," or complete sets of books, had been sent to hotels at Wexford and Portsmouth, and renewals have been sent to eight other hotels. "Good Lines," which contains the most complete and reliable information with regard to early closing days, &c., has had 2,229 new annual subscribers added to the list, with the result that £100 was handed over to the Beneficent Fund. Grants to the number of 643 had been made from this fund to deserving widows and others who need assistance in commendable effort at self-help.

Branches of the Association at Birmingham, Belfast, Bristol, Dublin, Leicester, Manchester, Newcastle, Southsea, and Sunderland have been doing a good work, and many young men have been enrolled and are heartily co-operating in the work of the Association. On the whole, there is cause for praise to God that and that witness-bearing has been maintained by the members in consistent Christian lives and pointed testimony for Christ.

Personal reminiscences of life "on the road," beginning some sixty years ago, were given in an interesting, and even amusing, manner by the Chairman. It was his belief that commercial travelling is a good school or a bad one, according to what a man chooses to make of it. Religion and politics will disturb any commercial room; but if a man can only take up the sound Christian principles begotten in him, and bring them to bear on his associates, without a dictatorial or dogmatic spirit, and in a circumspect way, such action must make a good and lasting impression.

Rev. DINSDALE T. YOUNG, styling himself a "fellow-traveller"—that is, in the commerce of the skies—congratulated the Association on having had a prosperous year, and on being such a formidable, numerous and increasing company. He had been impressed by the many opportunities commercial travellers have for bringing tremendous influence to bear upon their fellows. Influence is a precious gift, but a very precarious one, and it may bless or it may blight. Much of it is unconscious; and he whose sermon is a good life can never preach too long. But let us remember that indiscretions of manner may spoil the most earnest word. For the encouragement of busy men, it may be said that prayer is not a voice, but an attitude or temper of the spirit. If we have no time for more, let us daily snatch at a few verses of the Book that has made every other good book.

Mr. CHAPMAN, one of the oldest members of the Association, gave earnest counsel concerning the force of Christian character when faithfully maintained in business life.

Another meeting was held in the evening, with Mr. J. ELLIOTT VINEY in the chair, speeches being delivered by Rev. F. S. WEBSTER and others.

Baptist Missionary Society.

A DEEPLY interesting story was unfolded at the annual meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, held in Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last. Having some years ago entered upon its second century, the organization combines experience with high purpose; it has "influenced" many other societies into being, and it continues with us, vigorous in evangelistic endeavour, and exemplary in enlightened administration. The friends and supporters mustered in a very encouraging manner, and a spirit of gratitude to God for the great past, and of confidence in regard to the immediate future, was stimulated by the addresses delivered.

Mr. John Marnham, of Boxmoor, presided, and there was an influential platform of "fathers and brethren." In the course of preliminary devotional service, Rev. W. E. Blomfield, of Coventry, acknowledged the great privilege of fellowship with God in the evangelization of the world, and invoked the Divine blessing in enlarged measure upon the men and women who have left friends and hazarded their lives for Christ. In some remarks in place of a report (for such a document is never presented at the public meeting), Mr. A. H. Baynes, the secretary, said the note of the report about to issue from the press, will be one of devout thankfulness to God for in all the fields occupied by the workers of the Society. In India, the oldest field, there has been a larger number of converts than in any previous year. Several new stations have been opened, and there has been great improvement in the vernacular Christian schools. In China, the native Christian church has developed rapidly into independence and self-support, and there have been more baptisms than in any other year. On the Congo there have been large additions to the native church, and many Christian evangelists have been thrust out into "the regions beyond," and are being maintained entirely by the contributions of the native Christians. At San Salvador, quite recently, a large chapel was opened, wholly paid for by Christian natives.

Mr. Baynes went on to speak of the financial situation. Including donations amounting to £5,280, given specifically towards the relief of the famine plague, the income reached a total of £77,642. The money available for the general work of the Society was, however, considerably less than the expenditure, which amounted to £73,716. After transferring £2,500 from the legacy account, the Committee found a deficit of £4,123, which it was a joy to hear (at the close of the meeting) had been all but met by the generosity of friends of the work. The increase of expenditure was largely due to the obligations falling upon the Society through the extensions made under the Centenary Scheme, in reliance upon which had been sent out. In some further words, Mr. Baynes pointed out that financial straitness need not hinder development. The committee had received offers of service from a number of earnest and well-equipped young men. There is no lack of men; means to send them out is the lack. The China Mission was launched into being in a year that opened with a large deficit; so also was the Congo Mission. In the China field there are 5,000 baptized converts and hundreds of independent churches, supporting their own ministers; while the story of the Congo Mission was behind none in heroic episodes, and great promise for coming days. Hence, though debt is a difficulty, it need not be a hindrance.

After hearty words by the Chairman, who urged greater liberality in the support of the Society, a powerful address was delivered by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, President of the Wesleyan Conference, who spoke of the development and expansion of organized effort to spread the religion of Jesus Christ throughout the world, as a distinctive feature of the closing nineteenth century. The speaker enlarged upon the greatness of missionary achievement, and dwelt upon the accumulated capital of missionary labour. Not only have the Scriptures been translated into hundreds of languages, in many cases reduced to writing by missionary labour and devotion; but the workers, men who would adorned any station in social life at home, have become the stimulus and example of the Church at large. Our fathers based their acts upon the commands of Christ, having nothing more to go upon. We have the privilege and joy of pointing back upon a century of illustration, experience, and applied principles of work. In a word, history puts the seal upon what was prophecy a century ago. Mr. Macdonald spoke in a striking way of the more tender side of missionary labour, as originating not in mere philanthropy, but in for sinful men, shed abroad in the hearts of Christian people. In conclusion, he suggested that we are on the eve of times in which the Lord will push on his great designs, in order that God's kingdom may speedily come throughout the world.

Rev. E. W. Burt, M.A., of Chouping, described work in the classic province of Shantung, North China. It is among the peasant farmer class that the best work has been done, 90 per cent. of the converts being from that section of the community. Mr. Burt cordially eulogized the native evangelists, whose assistance is of the greatest value, and who promise to take an important place in the native Church, which is anticipated as properly following the present missionary period during which the foundations are being laid. The people think nothing of proceeding ten or fifteen miles to worship on the Lord's day; and then they conduct Divine service among themselves, welcoming the missionary on his occasional visits. They build their own places of worship; through floods and famines; and endure much through the wickedness of the Boxers and other lawless men. Speaking generally, Mr. Burt expressed the opinion that the Christians of China compare well with the members of the home churches.

THEY FACE MANY TRIALS,

The last speaker was Rev. P. E. Heberlet, of Sambalpore, Orissa. In that great region, between Calcutta and Madras on the Bay of Bengal, there are 8,000,000 of people, with eight missionaries labouring among them. It is the seat of the great Lord Juggernaut, and from all parts of the country natives flock to prostrate themselves before the idol. The Oriya is very religious, but his religion is not moral; and those who talk of the "primitive moral conceptions" of the Hindus, in terms of compliment and appreciation, go wide of the mark. Having shown the great need of Gospel teaching in Orissa, Mr. Heberlet spoke of the Brahmo-Somaj, which has plainly recognised India's great need of Christ, and allowed Christ's claim to India. Mr. Heberlet told his story in a vivacious and striking manner.

Palestine and Lebanon Nurses.

THE annual meeting of the Palestine and Lebanon Nurses' Mission was held on Friday afternoon last in Exeter Hall Parlour, the President, Rev. F. Paynter, M.A., in the chair.

The special feature of the report, which was read by Rev. A. Carnford, was the great need for a men's ward in the little Cottage Hospital, the efficiency of the work being sadly handicapped through the want of it.

Two ladies returned from Baakleen gave interesting accounts of the difficulties and prejudices to be overcome peculiar to the people amongst whom the work is carried on. The position of a Druse after baptism would seem to be almost identical with that of a baptized Jew, he being cast off by his family, and indeed his life endangered by remaining amongst them. Then again, too, a baptized Druse incurs the displeasure, and that which follows, of the Ottoman Government.

There are also, perhaps, even more difficult obstacles to be surmounted in the religion which the Druses profess. The doctor who is in attendance at the hospital is a converted Druse.

Medical Missionary Association.

THE annual meeting of the Medical Missionary Association was held on Friday afternoon last, in the Lower Exeter Hall.

Rev. Alexander Connell, of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, presided, and, in the course of a hearty address, said he could speak with conviction about foreign Medical Missions, because, during a visit to the Far East, he had both seen and heard enough of them to know their value. To the sick and sinful and sorrowful abroad—and at home, too—the coming of the medical missionary is often as the coming of Jesus Christ.

Dr. Maxwell, Secretary of the Association (49, Highbury Park, N.), urged the necessity of nearness to Christ and knowledge of the Medical Mission cause, before our hearts can be in a position to help in the service. He recommended a study of the monthly records of the work, which are published as a means of increasing knowledge. This valued society deliberately trains young men for the life of the fully qualified medical missionary, and prepares children for the same service by claiming their interest and practical aid.

Dr. Edwards, of Tai-yuen-fu, China, who followed Dr. Harold Schofield, said that even as a work of philanthropy, there was scope for the exercise of medical and surgical skill in China.

THE CHINESE MEDICINE

is often unmentionable, the surgery not only crude but cruel, while the nursing is nil. The work for those who at present carry on medical mission stations is overwhelming. Since Dr. Edwards left, his colleague had been called two days' journey to the south, then two to the north, then eight to the north, and, later, two to the east, to care for cases of severe illness. Where he could not go, other members of the mission house went, and meanwhile at the centre itself there was an outbreak of typhoid and typhus among school girls and students. On these, and similar facts, Dr. Edwards founded a powerful appeal for women doctors and nurses—women of resources—for the work of Tai-yuen-fu.

Miss Greenfield, of the Charlotte Hospital, Lodhiana, could duplicate Dr. Edwards' Chinese experiences by her own in India, but her theme to-day was of the Lodhiana Medical School, conceived and founded by Dr. Edith Brown. This school for the education of native Christian women as nurses, compounders, and medical assistants, is the natural outcome of the last twenty-five years' growth of WOMAN'S MEDICAL WORK IN INDIA.

A doctor needs carefully trained and qualified assistants, and Dr. Brown determined to relieve lady medical missionaries from the anomalous position of being dispenser, anæsthetist, assistant, and nurse, as well as physician-in-chief to their patients. Why was the school founded in Lodhiana? Chiefly because of the presence of the Charlotte Hospital, partly also because of the adjoining unoccupied premises, all ready for the purposes of a school. The students are Christian women preparing for Christian work, and their teachers speak highly of their health, courage, kindliness, spirituality, and success.

Miss Greenfield pleaded earnestly for help to finish new hospital buildings to hold seventy additional patients, and to pay for a dwelling house for the ladies which a native, seeing the urgency of the case, has built, in full faith that one of these days he will be paid. Till then he is content to wait; £2,000 is needed for these purposes.

Dr. James Maxwell, jun., of the Islington Medical Mission, began and ended on the same keynote. "If Medical Missions are essential abroad, they are certainly essential at home. If they are according to the will and mind of Christ, it is not the colour of the patients that will determine their usefulness." His address was filled with telling points and suggestive incidents that certainly determined the value of the Medical Mission agency for the north of London in any case.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

EXETER HALL on Monday morning was crowded to its utmost capacity on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Society. The enthusiasm of the gathering, manifest from beginning to end, was itself a token of the deep earnestness of Wesleyans in their efforts to reach the heathen.

The expansion of the society during the past year has been marked by fruitful and far-reaching operations. There are now 315 central or principal stations, with 2,450 chapels and other preaching places. The missionaries and assistant missionaries number 366, while no fewer than 3,090 other agents, day-school teachers, &c., are employed. Missions under the immediate direction of the Wesleyan Missionary Committee and Conference are to be found in India, China, West Africa, the Transvaal, Mashonaland and Rhodesia, British Honduras, Bahamas, and various countries in Europe. The total home income on current account for the year amounts to £108,180 12s. 1d., and there is a balance of over £19.

In addition to the ordinary income, contributions have been received for the special fund for extensions, £200; the West Indian Methodist Distress Fund, £1,874 13s.; for the relief of famine in India, 1,358 13s. 4d.

The chairman of the meeting in the morning was Mr. Edward Aston, of Manchester, and on the platform was a large number of prominent ministers and laymen. The

PRESIDENT OF THE CONFERENCE,

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, in the course of his opening remarks, explained that for various reasons—one of them being the illness of Rev. G. W. Olver, joint secretary—it had been found impossible to prepare the usual detailed report for the meeting; the document would, however, be circulated in due course.

Mr. Macdonald referred to the mission stations in the Transvaal Republic, which had shown some of the highest types of growth and fruitfulness. No centre of missionary enterprise had been more promising than that in the provinces of the Transvaal, now suspended. The success of twenty years has exceeded the most sanguine hopes, and before the cloud of war overshadowed that territory, there were no fewer than 12,000 Church members and 36,000 attendants at public worship. "We do not (he said) consider our missions in the Transvaal as finished. Whatever the issue of the war, whatever flag may float at Pretoria, it is certain that the wealth buried in its soil will remain to attract the mechanic and all the industries which crowd around that centre; it is certain that tens of thousands will once more concentrate into the regions from which they have fled." The president also emphasized the difficulties of the existing missions on the West Coast of Africa. But even here, in the face of circumstances of severe trial, there are now sixty-three ministers of the Gospel, 11,000 church members, 20,000 scholars, and 65,000 attendants at public worship.

Rev. William Goudie, from India, gave a telling description of the native races of our Eastern Dependency, and how they are being brought to rejoice in the light and liberty of the Gospel.

WHAT CANNOT BE PUT INTO WORDS,

the missionaries are striving to put into deeds of human kindness. The Pariah comes with his trouble, led by the hand of God, as much as he who comes to seek salvation. The speaker moved the hearts of the audience as he pictured the darkness and ignorance of the natives of India; and, in a touching appeal, pleaded for sympathy and support in work for their enlightenment.

Mr. Henry Bisseker dwelt upon the progress of missions in South Africa, the scene of his labours for many years. The work amongst the natives has to be begun at the bottom of the ladder; they have to be civilized, educated, and Christianized. The sad raw heathen state of the natives, in their awful misery, was compared with the happy conditions which now prevail in the home life of the Christianized natives of to-day. The order, cleanliness, and industry is the outcome of the work of the Missionary Society. "The outlook is sad in the extreme, but it is only the scattering of the units. We believe that God will not give the natives back to the terrible life they have had to live."

Rev. J. A. Elliott, who for twenty-three years has laboured as a missionary in North India, conveyed some encouraging information as to the work in the Indian villages. The opposition of the Mohammedans and the Hindus had been overcome, and by earnest, persistent endeavour all sorts and conditions of men had been brought to a saving knowledge of the Truth. Many illustrations were given, pathetic and amusing, of the life and conditions of the people of India.

Another meeting was held in Wesley Chapel in the evening, under the presidency of Mr. D. F. Shillington, of Wandsworth.

Church Missionary Society.

VARIOUS meetings were held throughout Tuesday last in connection with the one hundred and first anniversary of this great Society, which maintains an ever-increasing world-wide reach in the work of evangelization. It goes without saying that long before the commencement of the proceedings at the morning meeting in Exeter Hall, a vast audience began to stream into the building. Sir John Kennaway, President of the Society, was in the chair; and we here present a few of the main points from the voluminous general review of the year which was presented to a large body of intensely interested listeners.

Many illustrations of the oneness of spirit so signally manifested by the subjects of the Queen are to be seen also in the missionary army. While Australians and Canadians have fought side by side with British troops in South Africa, Australians and Canadians have done admirable service in the mission field. Oneness of spirit has also been manifested in an interesting Centenary contribution. The Japanese workers in the missionary diocese of Hokkaido, Japan, have resolved to give one per cent. of their salaries for five years, in commemoration of the Centenary, to evangelistic work in Palestine, and the money is appropriated to the support of a native evangelist in Mount Gilead. The Society, as is well known, has no missions in South Africa; yet the Bishop of Pretoria, in the day of his calamity, expelled by the Boers from his diocese, remembers the Centenary, and sends £5 to the fund. Although the Society's missions have not been touched by the war, has caused much anxiety; and now the terrible famine is throwing arduous responsibilities upon the brethren, especially those labouring among the Bhîls and the Gônds in the forests of the great central districts. The organization of independent native churches has before been announced as one of the tasks of the new century. Special committees in Salisbury Square have been for some time considering the grave questions involved, and important draft papers on the subject have been ordered by the General Committee to be sent to leading missionaries, friends, also leading native Christians for their opinion. Remembering the care taken to instruct and to test the converts, adult baptisms (8,260 for the year) are a cause for thankfulness. The number of acceptances for missionary work has been 128, fifty-two men and seventy-four women.

THE PLAGUE IN INDIA

THE FINANCES OF THE YEAR

have doubtless been somewhat affected by the gathering of the Centenary funds, as well as by the extraordinary claims on the benevolence of the country for the alleviation of famine in India and East Africa, and the support of sufferers by the war in South Africa. Notwithstanding, the gross income of the year, including Centenary and other funds, has amounted to £404,906. Of this, £80,620 has been derived from Centenary gifts, and £20,611 from special funds, leaving £303,673 as the sum of general and appropriated contributions of the year, as compared with £307,660 of the previous year. On the other hand, the general expenditure has reached £353,266, to which figure must be added the payments for special funds £14,002, making the grand total £367,268. The excess of payments over receipts in the general fund, mainly due to the extension of the Society's work abroad, has been met by a transfer from the Centenary Fund.

It is to prayer, fervent intercessory prayer, that the English Archbishops and Bishops have, in a letter signed by them all, summoned the Church to give herself during this present year. The most important place in the appeal was given to the missionary enterprise. If the whole Church of Christ would but respond to this summons, as the Empire did to the call of its rulers, with "one heart," with "one voice," and "as one man," the most truly effectual step would be taken not only towards the evangelization of the world, but towards the deliverance of the Church from the dangers and confusions of the time. Missionary work has made marked advance during the last hundred years, but still two-thirds of the human race lie outside the allegiance of Christ. The great work which remains to be done is another call to prayer.

War, pestilence, and famine, said the Chairman, have brought us, as a nation, to our knees; let us take care that we remain there. Greater blessings should accrue to us than if we had not suffered and sorrowed. God's voice to us, in the condition of the unevangelized world, is that the time is short, and that we must go forward in his work. The Society has to face a financial position sufficiently serious.

EXPANSION MEANS EXPENSE,

and this policy has been sanctioned by friends of the Society. The staff of missionaries has been increased from 649 to 811; therefore, the ordinary income must be increased by from £50,000 to £60,000. Prayer and effort is needed: ask the Lord, and tell his people. Men are needed, as well as means; for the stations are terribly under-manned. At the Chairman's suggestion, a fraternal greeting from the meeting was ordered to be cabled to the International Conference on Missions in New York.

A comprehensive resolution, moved by the Bishop of Ossory and Ferns, dealt with Report and Committee, and the speaker enforced considerations of vastly increased responsibilities from the growth of the C.M.S. and its possibilities.

Viscount Cross, in the unavoidable absence of Sir Richard Webster, rejoiced to show his interest in the Society. Our empire, he said, has been given to us not for our own national glorification, but as a sacred trust that we may humanize, evangelize, and Christianize the world. He added earnest words about the necessity for Christian consistency among those who go abroad, and for increased liberality to the cause of foreign missions.

That all circumstances, political, moral and religious, are leading to the victory of Christ in India was the cheery message brought by Rev. W. H. Ball (Bengal). In his opinion, the burden of work there must be thrown more and more upon the Indian Church. There is needed, however, financial help, the putting of Divinity schools on a proper footing, prayer, and a sufficiency of missionaries.

Rev. A. Elwin (Mid-China) told of numerous reform results which he connected with the presentation, made some time ago, of a Bible to the Dowager Empress. He mentioned that, among certain books supplied to the Emperor, was one containing four sermons by the late Mr. Moody. After reference by Mr. W. D. Carr to missionary work in Persia, the necessity of further prayer that the Holy Spirit may fit native Churches to meet their responsibilities for the evangelization of their fellow-countrymen was the subject of addresses by Chancellor P. V. Smith and Rev. T. W. Drury.

Gospel Work at Epsom Races.

Visiting Epsom Downs on the occasion of the recent spring races, Mr. Bob Johnson, the "converted minstrel," accompanied by a friend, sang the Gospel, both to the pleasure seekers and pleasure makers. Mr. Johnson, who was brought to Christ some seven years since under the influence of services conducted on the course by Mr. Josiah Nix, is well known to the various musical entertainers who frequent race meetings. Numbers of these men listened with interest to Mr. Johnson's testimony as he spoke and sang. Gospel literature was also distributed, the bag which contained the tracts, &c., being regarded with curiosity by the racegoers on account of the word "Eternity," in large, gold letters, being inscribed upon it. An old comrade begged for a copy of a hymn to sing to his wife and children, and a number of persons, both carriage people and minstrels, appeared to be impressed.

Mr. W. R. Lane at Pontypridd.

A ten-days' united mission has been held at Pontypridd under the auspices of the Free Church Council. The services were conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. The largest hall in the district, capable of holding 2,000 people, had been engaged, and ere the meetings were over it was taxed to its utmost capacity. Mr. Lane's addresses dealt with a variety of subjects bearing upon the practical life of a Christian. He spoke in emphatic terms concerning some prevalent sins of the day, and made special reference to gambling. The climax was reached on the Sunday. In the afternoon Mr. Lane spoke on "Purity" to a large assembly of men, and a solemn meeting was the outcome. In the evening the hall was crowded, and the gathering was of an impressive character. On Monday, April 23, Mr. Lane concluded the mission by a lecture on "The Pilgrim's Progress." The presence of God was realized throughout the mission services, and Christian workers throughout the district have been refreshed and inspired to renewed efforts. None are more grateful for blessing received than the ministers of the town.

Rev. John McNeill at Belfast.

This well-known evangelist recently paid a visit to the northern capital of Ireland in order to preach on behalf of the Shankill Road Mission, and also to undertake a service for the local Y.M.C.A. Mr. McNeill first visited Belfast in connection with the Moody-McNeill Mission of 1892, when meetings were held in a large and specially constructed wooden building capable of seating fully 10,000 persons. From that date any opportunity that arises of hearing the evangelist has been eagerly seized by the people of Belfast and of Ulster.

Mr. McNeill's services were held in the large Albert Hall connected with the Shankill Road Mission, an auditorium designed to seat 2,000 persons. It was filled to overflowing. In the morning the preacher spoke with freshness and acceptance upon "Christ Stilling the Tempest."

In the afternoon, Mr. M'Neill again preached to an immense congregation in the Y.M.C.A. large hall, on the subject of Daniel, and was listened to with rapt attention. In the evening he again conducted the service in the large Albert Hall, but on this occasion the building could have been filled twice over. Every corner had its crowd of standing listeners to the story of salvation. Mr. McNeill preached upon the man with the withered hand, and evoked both smiles and tears as the sermon proceeded. Miss Lucy Montgomery sang "At Jesus' feet," and in the after-meeting Mr. McNeill gave a short address to seekers, and subsequently dealt personally with inquirers in the vestry. There were several cases of hopeful decision for Christ.

Rev. H. Montgomery made a short statement regarding the large pile of mission buildings, of which the large Albert Hall forms a part. In all about £14,400 had been spent, and about £10,000 received, a balance of £4,400 remaining as a debt against the mission property. A constant band of helpers continues to operate in this teeming district in Belfast, with many tokens of Divine favour. Communications respecting this large but most necessary undertaking may be addressed to Rev. Henry Montgomery, Hon. Supt. Shankill Road Mission, Belfast.

Much interest was aroused by the meetings conducted by Mr. Henry Varley at Maidstone on Sunday last. The Corn Exchange was crowded, and there were prospects of a glorious work being done. Mr. J. J. Sims, the Canadian evangelist, has concluded a six-weeks' mission at Cambuslang, N.B. Deep interest was evinced by Christians, and on the the last two Sundays the large hall of the institute was filled. A number of the unconverted sought the Lord. Mr. R. F. Beveridge, and several ministers took part in the gatherings.

Mr. William Day visited Epsom Downs on the occasion of the recent races, and exhibited his large banner, which is inscribed with striking passages from Scripture. Mr. Day is now conducting services in Boardman Hall, Grimsby. A six days' mission has been held at Hull by Mr. Henry Thorne in connection with George Street and Courtney Street Baptist Churches. The Bible readings in the afternoons were well attended, and were of a helpful character. In the evening meetings there were evident manifestations of God's presence. Inquirers, young and old, were dealt with, and there is every reason to believe that many found the Lord.

Request for Prayer.

That the war may be speedily settled, and righteousness and peace reign.

For blessing on meetings to be conducted during May in Croydon and Southend-on-Sea, by Mr. Herbert R. Francis.

Alcohol and Medical Science.—In delivering the second Lees and Raper Memorial Lecture on Friday night last at St. James' Hall, Professor Victor Horsley spoke on "The effect of Alcohol upon the human Brain." In the course of his remarks Professor Horsley said that even with a small quantity of alcohol—a quantity which would be called "dietetic"—there was a very distinct and depressing effect upon the highest centres of the brain. It was scientifically true that wine was a mocker. He wholly excluded alcohol as a diet. From the scientific standpoint, the contention that small doses of alcohol, such as people took with meals, had no deleterious effect, could not be maintained. From the scientific standpoint total abstinence must be their course if they were to follow the plain teaching of truth and common sense.

About Books.

THE GENIUS OF PROTESTANTISM.

DR. R. M'CHEYNE EDGAR places the Protestant cause under a large debt of obligation by his new book, The Genius of Protestantism. (6s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) For many years past he has conducted a class of senior Freshmen in Trinity College, Dublin, in studies relating to the history of the Reformation. In the preface of his book he tells us that the more he studied the inner history of the Protestant movement, and acquainted himself with the writings of the Reformers, the more convinced he became that it was an honest effort to get back to what was primitive and apostolic, and that it stands for all that is best and most hopeful in the last 400 years.

From a Christian scholar with these experiences and convictions, one may reasonably expect help such as will be timely in our day. And the book before us more than fulfils our high expectations. The result of wide reading and deep thought—embodying facts and arguments stated with calmness and digested with care—the volume is one of the most useful that has appeared for many years. The pages are not merely instructive, but impressive in a remarkable degree. Old positions are asserted in newest terms, and brought into relation with the latest developments of Romish error. We emphasize most heartily the claim of the title page that this is "a book for the times."

THE LATE DR. CHINIQUY.

The cause of Gospel simplicity had a vigorous champion in the late Dr. Chiniquy, author of "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome." For several years previous to his death, at the beginning of last year, this convinced (and convincing) Protestant was engaged upon another volume, equally striking in style and substance, Forty Years in the Church of Christ. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Though not an autobiography, this book affords a good idea of the remarkable career of Dr. Chiniquy. What he could not write in person has been supplied by others, including Professor John Moore, of Boston, and Principal MacVicar, of Montreal. All who followed the life-course of the sturdy reformer and devoted evangelist will agree with the latter in thinking that, as a broad-minded, far-seeing Christian patriot, Dr. Chiniquy's name deserves a permanent place in the history of Canada.

This handsome book opens with an outline of the early life of Dr. Chiniquy and the dawning of the saving light upon his soul. Then comes the story of his struggles and trials, conflicts with Rome combined with exertions in Gospel ministry. The pages recount plots by wicked men, and deliverances by the God of all mercy. Entering the Presbyterian Church in 1860, he launched out in active work, and as the years passed learned more of Christ—and of Rome as well. Becoming convinced that Rome's baptism was a caricature of Christ's ordinance, he was rebaptized by a Methodist minister, and ever afterwards pointed to this experience as exemplifying Evangelical Alliance principles. As a man of war, travelling in many lands to advance the Protestant cause, he is still remembered by Christians of all denominations. He was persecuted by Rome, and not always understood by his friends; but he fought the good fight, and finished his course with joy on January 16, 1899. Knowing full well that Rome would, if possible, claim him in death, he took the precaution, six days before the end, to make a final declaration of his adhesion to the Reformed faith, and of his reasons for leaving the Papal Church. This interesting document, duly attested, is given in the last chapter of the book. There is a good portrait of Dr. Chiniquy.

Play the Man, by Herbert Reid (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), is a series of friendly talks with boys. The author dedicates the pages to "my boy friends of the Boys' Brigade, past and present," and his general subject is "the battle of life." Those who are engaged in work among lads will find here addresses that are models, alike in matter and manner.

The Story of the Kings of Israel and Judah, a combined history in the words of Scripture, by Henry Hill, is a book of which we spoke in high terms when it was issued a few years ago. It is a pleasure to learn that the work has been warmly commended by men of learning. The price (6s.) has necessarily limited its sale; but being convinced that many Bible students and others would find it to be of interest and service, Mr. Hill is willing to supply copies at 2s. 6d. post free. (H. Hill, Dilston House, Upper Norwood.)

Notes & Comments

THE Christian Church is mourning the sad and unexpected decease of Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. In the present issue we give his portrait and some particulars of his career, as well as of the funeral service. The interment took place at Aberdeen on Tuesday. His influence, for so young a man, was exceptionally widespread, especially in the student communities at home and in America. May God raise up others to take his place!

The new Moderator of the Synod of the English Presbyterian Church, Dr. John Watson (better known as "Ian Maclaren"), delivered his presidential address last week at Manchester. The following utterance, which we cull from his speech, is peculiarly welcome, coming as it does from the author of "The Mind of the Master." Dr. Watson is now evidently standing upon firmer ground than when he wrote that most unsatisfactory book. He said:—

> There are doctrines with which the Church must not alter to conciliate any person, or any school of thought, but which she must put in the forefront of her creed; which she must preach wisely and tenderly, relating them carefully to human life and human thought; but which she must preach without rebate and with all authority; and the chief among them is the Incarnation of the Son of God. Without the Deity of Christ, Christianity has lost her meaning and has lost her force. She is no longer a salvation. She is only another system of morals. She is no longer a living body, inhabited by the Spirit of God, but only another ethical and philanthropic society.

Dr. Denney, of Glasgow, who was in London a few days ago, preaching on behalf of foreign missions, gave utterance to some sentences which will bear pondering over again and again, for they go down to the roots of things. For example:

> There is no beginning of Christianity in a man's life until he sits down at the foot of the cross and makes himself Christ's debtor for ever and ever.
> Take the atonement out of the Church's faith, and adoration dies upon her lips.
> The saint never lived who did not build his sanctity upon the atonement.

At last, after ten months' consideration, the Archbishops have given their "opinion" upon the matter of Reservation of the Sacrament. They have decided most definitely against the practice. Perhaps the most important part of the "opinion" is that in which the Primate declares that the "Holy Communion is not to be treated as if it worked like a magical charm"; and further, that "co-operation on the part of the recipient is essential." But it is a mere "opinion," so it seems, for the Archbishop of York took the sting out of the decision by making it clear that he spoke only as "a father in God." The lawless Romanizers in the Anglican Church have already made light of the former decision concerning incense, and it is not likely that they will respect the later decision, since it purports only to be an "opinion."

The importance of the Archbishop's decision will undoubtedly go far to determine the future attitude of those of the High Church party who have gone so far in the downgrade movement towards Rome as to seek this and other nearly related departures from the practice of the Church of England. The laymen who have supported the clergy in the movement in favour of Reservation may well take to heart the Archbishop's advice to the effect that > the truest way to be prepared for the hour of death is to be faithful in the use of privileges and blessings in the days of health and strength.

The real fundamental question has, however, been passed over. "Reservation" and all the other questions upon which an opinion has been offered are quite secondary to the primary question, What is the Holy Communion? Ritualists declare it is a sacrifice, Evangelicals declare it is a memorial only, and both quote the Prayer Book; both cannot be right. Evangelical Churchmen would be glad if the Archbishops will state plainly what their Church teaches concerning the nature of the Communion. High Churchmen also demand a similar pronouncement. Mr. Athelstan Riley, in a letter to the Church Times, pertinently says, "On the question of the Eucharist is the Church of England Catholic or Protestant?" This is a fair question, and demands an answer. Until this is given there will be no rest in the Church. Compromise is impossible in the present situation. Neither party is satisfied. The question of the Communion—sacrifice or memorial—is the radical question which must be settled. When a definite pronouncement is made upon this matter, we shall know where we are.

How slowly most of our required reforms are brought about! It required a twenty years' agitation before the "Ten Hours' Bill" affecting workers in cotton mills was passed, and a measure limiting the hours of labour of miners to eight per day has now been brought before Parliament for ten years, and has not yet become law, though the amount of opposition to it has become less on each occasion. Yet who will say that the period named in the Bill is not long enough for men and lads who have to toil under such conditions. The health and future of the race in the mining districts depend upon the passing of the measure; yet our legislators hesitate to deal finally with the subject.

At the annual meeting of the National Temperance League, presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury, a very unpleasant light was thrown upon the inconsistency of numbers of Christian people, part of whose incomes is derived from undertakings the success of which is based to a large extent upon the demoralization of their fellow-creatures. Rev. David Davies, in stating that the temperance cause had still much way to make among ministers of religion, added that in a list of shareholders of one of the great breweries, there appeared the names of no fewer than 178 clergymen, including bishops, deans, archdeacons, and canons. It is to be hoped that the cries of "Shame!" with which the audience received the statement may reach some if not all those who are thus, perhaps thoughtlessly, aiding and deriving profit from a traffic which is destroying the bodies and souls of men.

The Countess of Warwick, in giving an address at Leamington the other day, took occasion to say that, > at the risk of giving offence, she would like to point out the absurdity of sending thousands of pounds out of the country to so-called foreign missions, when there is plenty to do at home.

She ignored the fact that those who contribute to send the Gospel to the heathen are just those who are readiest to recognise the needs of Christian and philanthropic work at their own doors. The objection raised by the Countess is one with which we are unpleasantly familiar, and it generally comes from those who are not over anxious to help with their means either form of Christian work.

The Anglophobia of the Paris Press has decidedly moderated since the opening of the Exhibition. Whether this is due to a better temper, or whether it is simply a question of one excitement temporarily neutralizing another, remains to be seen. In any case, all lovers of peace should do their utmost to foster a better understanding between these two great nations. It would be a misery beyond the power of conception if France and England came to war. Much may be done by our public journals to create a better feeling. The "pin-prick" policy should be for ever renounced. Whatever the gutter press of Paris chooses to do in the way of publishing inflammatory articles, our English Press should not retaliate. Papers like the Figaro and the Aurore are not against us. Let us reciprocate their good feeling and treat the rest with dignified silence.

Very much good can also be accomplished by private persons. Many thousands of Englishmen will visit Paris during the next few months. If each of these would make a special point of acting the part of peacemaker, the total result would be very considerable. One way of doing this is to practise those little courtesies which are everywhere appreciated. So far as possible, it is well for visitors to conform to the habits of the people amongst whom they visit. To the French let us be as French, that we may gain the French. Above all, it should be the unceasing prayer of every Christian that peace and goodwill may reign amongst the nations. The political situation is highly strained on every hand. May God grant us moderation.

In the course of a recent interview, Mrs. Bishop, the author of the interesting "Unbeaten Tracks in Japan," expressed somewhat pessimistic views in regard to the results of missionary work in that country and in China, and attributed the slow progress not only to the general indifference to all religion, and the fact that most of the Eastern students who come to England return imbued with the theories of Huxley, Darwin, and Herbert Spencer, but also to the far more painful fact that "neither the manners nor mode of living of European lay residents commend Christianity to the natives of any country."

Mrs. Bishop, however, paid a high tribute to the Christian missionary, and furnished some striking food for thought in her statement that:

> Whilst we have baptized only five million heathen during the present century, two hundred millions has been the increase of the heathen world. Thirty-five millions of these heathen pass annually in one ghastly, reproachful, mournful procession into Christless graves.

The second of Rev. W. W. Peyton's papers on "The Crucifixion as an Evolutionary Force," which appears in the current number of the Fortnightly Review, should prove helpful to those writers who, like Gibbon, have endeavoured to account for the growth of Christianity by a theory of favouring circumstances and accidents, and have ignored, or failed to recognise, the primary force—the death and resurrection of Christ. If Mr. Herbert Spencer and others, instead of persistently groping in the twilight, had consulted Christianity from the standpoint of the Gospel, and recognised the vivifying power in the individual life and in the progress of nations of "the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all" (Heb. x. 10), they might have found that twilight break into day. As Mr. Peyton says:—

When we have grasped the historic truth that the Crucifixion is an evolutionary force of the first rank to which the Western mind has become responsive, we shall find our way to some of the primary affections, in which are the sources of religion which have eluded the search of the philosopher. We shall then arrive at one prime causation working in the Christian centuries, and reconstructing the societies of the Western world, which historians have failed to cognise.

Our contemporary, The Quiver, contains a very interesting paper on "Christian Work in Paris Slums," from which a good idea may be formed of the excellence and the success of the undenominational Protestant agencies at work in the back streets of the French capital. Altogether the outlook is a very cheering one, and it is quite bracing to read of the marvellous blessing which God has given to those who are holding up Christ in the slums of a city so greatly under the domination of the worst forms of Romish superstition. One of the missions referred to by the writer held last year 15,000 meetings for adults, and 7,000 for children, and has its Gospel meetings, Bible classes, adult and children's Sunday schools, temperance meetings, soldiers' meetings, and free dispensaries, and its only motto is "We preach Christ Crucified," and in that motto may be found the secret of its success.

A minister, who shall be nameless, has just resigned the pastorate of the church which he has held for more than forty years. When he commenced his work there was neither church nor place of assembly. When he resigned his charge there were a large building seating 1,000 people, always crowded; several mission stations in a flourishing state, and a perfect network of Christian agencies. Yet this minister is a man of less than average ability—he himself being the first to admit it. The secret of his marvellous success has been his goodness, his Christlikeness, and this has attracted to him people of every station in life. It is not given to every man to be clever, but it is given to every man to be good, if he will. To live well is better than to speak well. Nothing is more eloquent than Christian goodness. Brilliance without sanctity, says a great Frenchman, resembles "a trumpet which sounds the charge without going to the battle; a staircase leading to an apartment which it never enters; a signboard which indicates the route without following it."

There is a sentence in the Revised Version which may help some disappointed workers to take heart again. Speaking to his disciples, our Lord said, "Love your enemies and do them good, and lend, despairing of no man" (Luke vi. 35). Frequently it is of the man to whom we lend anything that we despair. Inability to repay the loan makes the debtor shy of his creditor, and the latter comes to feel that he has lost his money: he despairs of ever recovering it. Now, says our Divine Lord, do not despair, even of him. In the sphere of every Christian worker are men of whom he is tempted to abandon hope. They remain obdurate despite tears, prayers, and good will. But let us take heart—Jesus bids it. We must despair of no man.

Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington, who is now for a time in America, writes home recording his astonishment at the "considerable and elaborate gambling" which prevails on the principal steamships. During his voyage, betting freely occurred on the question of the ship's daily run, and at night guesses on the next day's run were put up to auction. Mr. Williams declares also—what seems almost incredible—that the boys of his Sunday school have betted in the church on the length of his sermons. Most truly does he add that "gambling is everywhere," and that, in his opinion, "the ruin wrought by gambling in individual cases is more complete and more tragical than the misery created by drunkenness."

But gambling will not be arrested amongst respectable young men by merely protesting against it, or expressing a personal abhorrence of it. Teachers need to show that this sin is a deep offence against God and man. Mr. Mackenzie published, through the Sunday School Union some time ago, an excellent book entitled, "The Ethics of Gambling," in which the subject is thoroughly treated. Every man ought to read it, and in particular those men who encourage "mild betting" in the home circle.

The Great Missionary Conference.

THE keynote of the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, just held in New York, cannot be said to have been struck at the great, representative, and enthusiastic gathering by which it was inaugurated on Saturday night, April 21. But as a preliminary and prefatory assembly it was of great importance.

Some have criticized the arrangements by which the President of the United States and the Governor of the State of New York were asked to inaugurate this gathering for a purely spiritual purpose. But as we are exhorted to honour the powers that be, who are God's ministers to us for good, and as missionaries in foreign lands cannot be wholly independent of their governments, it seems right that they should pay the Government of the country, when such a Conference as this is held, the respect and courtesy of asking and receiving its practical recognition.

And the Government honours itself in thus honouring God in the persons of his servants engaged in fulfilling his supreme command, "Go ye unto all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Nor must it be overlooked that President McKinley and ex-Governor Harrison are themselves members of evangelical churches, and that Governor Roosevelt not only spoke in personal sympathy with missionaries and their work, but gave a graphic account of a visit which he had made to an Indian reservation in the West, and of the missionary work proceeding there.

The keynote of the Conference itself was struck, clearly and loudly, with no uncertain sound, on Monday morning, by three noble utterances by Dr. Augustus Strong, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, and Mr. Robert E. Speer.

Wield the Sword!

"The Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

"WE don't read the Old Testamen now; in the New we find all tha is necessary to life and godliness." So said the sister of an eminent cleric speaking for her brother and herself. An how many there are in our churches wh could say the same! And many more wh "profess and call themselves Christians" read even less.

Nothing is more appalling in the Church o Christ to-day than the ignorance, on the par of intelligent people, of the Bible. Nor, i some places, is the pulpit much better tha the pew. A text forms a peg on which t hang an essay. Well thought out and wel expressed the latter may be, but what th people need is to "understand the Scriptures."

"Why not give Paul a chance?" asked member of his minister, after listening to sermon in which Emerson and Browning were freely quoted; "some of his thoughts ar even more to the point than those you hav referred us to to-day."

"The Book of Genesis has been set for m to teach my class," said a school-teacher "and a nice job it is to tell what is true an what isn't." This is the kind of seed th Higher Criticism has been sowing, the out come of which is either barrenness or fruitles leaves.

Yet surely the Master is "an hungred" fo fruit to-day as much as when He came to th tree by the Judæan wayside; and well may H ask, concerning his Word, "Did I not sow good seed in my Church? From whence the hath it tares?" Congregations are not far t seek which are full of activities in the way o "Dorcas," "improvement," and "literary" societies, but are practically at a standstill a to spiritual growth and service, even though their church rolls receive additions from tim to time. Neglect to use the sword of the Spiri in preaching or in private life, and

STAGNATION MUST ENSUE.

Endless theories and plausible notions gai currency through the "religious novels" o the day, and young people (to say nothing o many parents and pastors!) assent more o less readily to them. And why? Becaus they know so little of the Word of God, whic alone can make them "wise unto salvation," and help them to discern between the true an the false. One shudders to think of the terribl awakening that must one day come upon them

Meantime souls are perishing, and the cit appeals loudly to the suburb for help. Bu "what the eye doesn't see, the heart doesn' grieve over," and many comfortable suburba congregations hear not the cry; or, if the hear it, answer not, because the Word o God is not burnt into their souls.

But let us not be too sweeping. In ever congregation there are devout believers t whom the Scripture in its entirety is mor precious than life. They are the salt whic stays corruption; they are the light whic relieves the darkness. They have learned o their own condition as it is mirrored in th Word of God; they see the lost state of th world as He has revealed it; and they "go ou into the highways and hedges" to "seek an to save that which was lost."

But only in proportion as Christians stud and "search the Scriptures" are they stirre up to the needs of a perishing world. It i not the "be-all and end-all" of religion t preach or listen to ethical discourses, be the ever so true; or to learn to appreciate ever he good and God-given thoughts of our best oets and authors. Bricks cannot be made ithout straw; warmth cannot be engendered ithout fire; ropes cannot be made with sand. Ve must lay foundation before we can build, hether for ourselves or for others. Doctrine ust precede practice, and only with a firm grip f what God has taught us can we formulate our leas aright. We are to be messengers of his Vord, and not promulgators of our own onceptions.

We know many well-disposed and (comparaively) earnest young Christians who want to ake their lives and gifts useful in the world, ut who are like a helmless ship, for lack of he guidance which only an experimental nowledge of God's Word can give. The vangelist who holds "Bible-readings for hristians," in conjunction with his Gospel reaching, is frequently met with such exclamations as these from Christian church embers: "I had no idea the Bible was so nteresting." "I have heard sermons all my ife, but never heard the Bible expounded like his before!"

One of the strongest sources of Mr. Moody's ower was the tenacity with which he clung o systematic Bible teaching. Witness the plendid work being done for God, the Church, nd the world, by the men and women trained n the Bible Institutes of Chicago and Glasgow, nd in his "schools" at Northfield. Oh, hen will Christians awake to the glorious ossibilities of a Bible-grounded mind, and to he corresponding powerlessness arising from ts lack?

To all we urge, read, read, READ the Bible—ld Testament as well as New. Let it speak or itself. Whatever view of Inspiration you old, read the Word. Study it; pray over it; will assuredly vindicate itself, and you will e convinced of the fact of its inspiration, hatever your theory be.

In this connection we cordially welcome and ommend to our readers, old and young, the ow being conducted by Professor White—articulars of which are announced on page 30 —in the hope that they will be largely attended, nd fulfil abundantly their intended mission.

Those who were privileged to attend the Ten Veeks' Bible School, conducted by Professor Vhite last spring, will not need urging to follow nother course of study on similar lines. Men nd women of profound Biblical attainments nited with those less cultured and experinced in heartily endorsing both the natter and manner of the lectures then elivered.

Professor White comes among us with a igh purpose, and actuated by the most erious motives. He aims at opening up the criptures; he presses their message upon elievers, and seeks to satisfy doubters as to he Divine claim. His record for years ast is that of a teacher who looks to God o give blessing to the uttermost, alike to inner and saint, as a result of a faithful nforcement and exposition of the Word of Truth. He is not alone in the conviction that Revival will come along the lines of a renewed nterest in Scripture, and a recovered reverence or its demands upon the soul.

We trust that, as was the case last year, any doubters and scoffers will be induced o attend the lectures; and, moreover, that s a result of the instruction given, many will nd a solution of their doubts and see the folly f their scoffing. That Professor White "wields the sword" was the testimony of many ast year; and we hope the testimony this year vill be that many have learned to wield it for hemselves.

The Dream of a Lifetime.

By Rev. JAS. MURSELL.

"I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness" (Psalm xvii. 15).

EVERY lifetime has its dream; every man worth calling a man has a purpose which dominates his thought and directs his activity.

One dreams of being rich. He grew up in a poor home; he learned by harsh experience the meaning of what the Roman poet called "Angustae res," and he made up his mind that when he was a man he would be rich. He would have a town house and a country seat; he would be chief partner in some great commercial concern, with mines and ships and incalculable wealth. He dreams about it, he toils for it. "When I awake, I shall be satisfied with—millions of money."

Another dreams of knowledge; its acquisition is his passion and delight. He is a student; he loves books, and the company of those from whose stores of knowledge he can increase his own. History, science, philosophy, poetry—he longs to lay them all under tribute to his mind. "When I awake, I shall be satisfied with—having all knowledge."

One dreams of fame; another of beauty. One dreams of being an engine-driver; another of being an author. One dreams of writing cabalistic letters like M.P. after his name; another of adding a thousand souls to the kingdom of heaven. By day and night one vision floats before them, now dim and now distinct. It is the dream of their lifetime. "When I awake, I shall be satisfied with . . ." You can fill in the gap with your own dream.

Here is a man who does so. "I shall be satisfied with thy likeness." This is a man with an ideal. He has a Hero whom he seeks to imitate. He is not satisfied with being like himself; he cannot dream about himself; he cannot shape his own life into a vision of beauty; but this Hero of his has a nobility that captivates his soul. If he can get away from himself and enter so far into the

as to grow like Him, then, indeed, he will be satisfied.

And who is this Friend, likeness to whom must be the dream of the Christian's life? It is the great and the eternal God. It is the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. In Gospel language, Christ is this man's Hero and Ideal. The Apostle Paul touches the same thought when he tells us how he longs to be "found in Christ, not having his own righteousness which is of the Law, but the righteousness which is from God upon faith." Paul and the Psalmist were alike in this: both of them had got a glimpse of God—both had beheld his face in righteousness, and the sight had captivated them. "Oh! that I could be like Him!" they exclaimed. They were no longer satisfied with or satisfactory to themselves. Their choicest gold was dross compared with what they saw in Him. Wherever they went, his face beamed on them from the blue or through the black. Likeness to Him! They prayed about it, they thought about it, they dreamed about it. It was the dream of their lifetime. "When I awake, I shall be satisfied with thy likeness."

What such a man dreams, he does. The dreamer is supposed to be unpractical. "Behold, this dreamer cometh." But the dreamy boy grew up into a man of deeds. Dreams are the seeds of which deeds are the flowers. Dreams and drudgery are two sides of one thing. "A mere drudge," says the wisdom of fools. But the drudge has a dream: he dreams while he drudges, and the dream makes drudgery beautiful.

The nature of the dream determines the nature of the deed. The dream of wealth makes the merchant, the thirst for knowledge creates the student, the vision of beauty the artist, the love of his fellows the philanthropist. So, too, it is the vision of Christ and the dream of being like Him that make the Christian. "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision," cried a man to whom it came. And this is what the vision made him do: "What things were gain to me, those I have counted loss for Christ." The dream of Christ-likeness has driven martyrs to the stake, missionaries to nameless but heroic souls to the work of faith and the labour of love. To be like Christ was the dream, and so the daring and the doing of their lifetime. They said, "We know that when He shall be manifest we shall be like Him." "We all with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, shall be changed into the same image from glory to glory."

The man who dreams such dreams can never be the same again. "Everyone who hath this hope purifieth himself." He may do many things, but every one of them is done in the transfiguring light of the dream of his lifetime. "When I awake I shall be satisfied with thy likeness."

What such a man dreams, he is. In a sense, your dreams tell what you are. Tell me the thoughts that haunt your wakeful hours at night, or tinge the dreams that visit you by day, and I will whisper in your ear the secret of your life. "We are such stuff as dreams are made on." Our possessions are what we have, our dreams are what we are. Our ideals are our realities. You are not what you have, but

WHAT YOU HAVE NOT, YET DESIRE.

We measure men by their attainments; God measures us by our aspirations. We are the men we feel that we are not, yet dream of being, and pray and strive to be. The likeness that he longed for must have shone, although he knew it not, upon the Psalmist's face when he exclaimed, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

Pray to dream noble dreams. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, whatsoever virtue and whatsoever praise there is, think on these things," dream about them, aspire after them; and do so constantly, deeply, with the whole force of your being.

The intensity of a dream is the measure of its impact on our life. A young man dreams of being prominent in the athletic world: the thought is never out of mind; it governs all he says and does; he is always pressing towards the mark. If we all dreamt of being Christ-like as he dreams of being athletic, how like Christ we should be. But we don't. There is too little force about our dream of Christ-likeness: it is a faint and fitful aspiration, not the steady and determinate ideal of every day; and so the likeness in us to our Lord is faint and fitful, hard to detect when easiest to see, and oh! so seldom seen at all. Here is a man whom nothing less than perfect likeness to his Lord will satisfy.

NOT A DIM RESEMBLANCE,

not to be something like Him. Thy likeness—nothing more, but nothing less will satisfy him.

What such a man dreams, he gets. When Solomon dreamed in Gibeon. God said to him,

"Behold, I have done according to thy words." Some men's dreams are all for this world: their vision and its fulfilment have to do only with time. That is what the Psalmist means when he says, "Men of the world whose portion is in this life." "Thou, in thy lifetime, receivedst thy good things," our Lord said of such a man. Temporal dreams have temporal fulfilments. When such dreamers wake from their sleep in the eternal world, their dreams and their fulfilment will have vanished away.

But this man had the thing he dreamt about. "I shall awake with something," he exclaimed. But men who dream only of time will wake without the thing they dreamt of having. Their wealth is left behind; their knowledge has vanished away; their famous name is not written in the Lamb's Book of Life; they would rather be without the likeness with which they wake, for it is one of pride or selfishness, and not of Christ. They never dreamed of eternity, they only looked at the things which are seen; and now their life's vain dream is over, its fulfilment is proved vanity. Only a man made humbly bold by faith dare lift his face to God and say, "I want to be like Thee, and can be satisfied with nothing less." Be sure that nothing less will satisfy. Will it satisfy you when you awake to have been rich? Will it satisfy you to have been well read? Will it satisfy you to have been famous? There is no satisfaction in "have beens." Not what I have been in the past, but what I am and have to-day must ever satisfy or dissatisfy me.

DARE TO DREAM DARING DREAMS.

"Thy likeness." "And God said, Let us make man in our own image after our likeness." The likeness has been lost. But, thank God, He has left the dream of it to linger like the glow of sunset in our hearts. Be brave enough to dream of recovering the lost likeness. If you will look away to Jesus you will see the likeness on his face. To be like Him! It is a big dream. It carries our shrinking spirits up to the throne of God and of the Lamb, where burns the fire of the eternal Love.

To dream this dream is pain unspeakable and joy unspeakable. It fills us with despair, and yet with hope; it makes us feel how utterly unlike our Lord we are, yet makes us liker to Him than we know. Every day it is fulfilled, yet every day, still unfulfilled; for it shines upon us like the morning star, and calls us nearer God; and we shall only know how much of it has been fulfilled when we awake to find his likeness crowning us with the one satisfaction that means growth, not decay; progress, not stagnation; life, not death.

Rev. F. B. Meyer.

HAVING received an urgent invitation to attend the Northfield Convention, Rev. F. B. Meyer is arranging to visit the United States again this season. Out of a desire to do all in his power to promote the great projects of the late D. L. Moody, he goes, at considerable personal inconvenience, after Keswick Convention.

On the Sunday after the Keswick meetings—i.e., on July 29—Mr. Meyer hopes to preach in the tent, morning and evening. On the following Wednesday he leaves England in a "White Star" liner.

Reading for the Blind.—Moon's Society for embossing the Bible and other books for the blind has been instrumental in providing the means of instruction for the afflicted in 476 languages and dialects. Since the commencement of the work, 614 volumes have been stereotyped in English, and 260 volumes in foreign languages. Nearly 226,000 embossed books have been sent out by the Society to all parts of the world. The home-teaching societies of Great Britain, of which there are about eighty, are doing diligent service among the blind in various towns and districts. The annual report may be obtained from Miss Moon, hon. treasurer, 104, Queen's Road, Brighton.

The Indian Famine.

NOTES FROM WORKERS.

THE efforts that are being made in various directions to awaken increased interest in the question of famine relief, tend to inform the public mind. Much, assuredly, remains to be done, as may be judged from the announcement in a London daily paper that "no deaths have occurred!" The following extracts from letters which we have received from missionaries afford fresh evidence of the appalling character of the visitation:—

Rev. Dr. G. P. Taylor, writing from the Mission House, Ahmedabad, says, after thanking our readers for help received: "News was brought that on the main road leading to Ahmedabad the was lying. I went out and found the body. Only a few paces from it were the woman's two children, a girl and a boy. They had to be carried; the boy was painfully wasted, his arm being barely thicker than my thumb. The two were nursed back into health. A venerable Hindu came to me lately and said, with emotion, 'Sahib, on my way here I saw the dead body of a man, and beside it a little child. To save that child would be a deed of merit.' We started out, and in a field adjoining the high road lay the body, with a tiny girl seated beside it waiting till her father should wake up from his strange sleep. After a moment of hesitation, she clasped my outstretched hand and walked with me to my new home. On another occasion I noticed in a field a prostrate human figure. It was motionless, so with some misgiving I pressed through a gap in the hedge, and found, lying prone with face to the ground, and absolutely naked,

THE BODY OF A MAN.

Drawing near to touch it, I well-nigh sickened when I saw a huge hole, bigger than a man's fist, where the flesh had been torn away from the right arm and the chest. Some fifty paces further on, I came across a woman lying just beside the road. The slight heaving of her breast showed life was still in her, and when I stooped down to ask if she was in much pain, she opened her eyes and moved her lips, but was unable to speak. I arranged for her to be taken on a litter to the neighbouring Government Poor House, where, however, she died a few hours after admission. Shepherds in a field close by told me she was the wife of the man whose dead body I had seen, and added that the evening before an infant child had been with them. Not a trace of the babe was now to be found, and one can only hope it was dead before the jackals began to devour it. That same morning on setting out on my walk I had counted huddled together on the leafless trunk of a tree not twenty feet high."

We have referred on several occasions to the extreme need of Rajputana. Help forwarded by our readers has been utilized by a number of societies, and in connection with one of these, the mission of the United Presbyterian Church, the synod treasurer forwards us the new issue of the Missionary Record, containing extracts from letters written by Dr. William Huntley, who speaks of "the results of one day's starvation, from thirty to forty dead bodies huddled together waiting burial at the close of the day." Dr. Huntley goes on: "The wail of the children met us on all sides, and their pinched anatomies, stark naked in many cases, pierced eye and heart. Strong-limbed villagers tottered along the roads. What sights! I have seen the pariah dogs carrying off bodies of children; I have seen the vultures gorging themselves on human flesh; I have seen skeletons here, there, and everywhere, and from the fields; I have seen men in the fresh years of youth stretching themselves out on the path and expiring; I have seen the mounds and trenches outside the city swollen with the heaps of the starved, growing and extending from day to day; and I have heard for months past the wail of the starving, far into the night the piteous wailing has reached me. I have heard in all the lanes of the city the one cry for grain! . . . What a pleasure it is to see a cartload of youngsters moving out of this grim death zone!

Our readers will be interested to hear that Rev. Dennis Osborne has arrived at his sphere in Poona, whence he writes: "The hot weather is now upon us, and earth, air, and sky glow with fervent heat. The famine is raging sorely, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of Government and missionaries. The relief I brought with me has brightened a few of the sorest places, and will save not a few from perishing."

SUPPLIES FOR THE FAMINE.

Since our last issue we have received promises from:—

Quaker Oats, Limited, who, in addition to executing an order for £10, are giving £10 worth of their well-known preparation.

Messrs. McVitie and Price, of Edinburgh, who are making a free gift of 12 doz. 7lb. tins of their biscuits.

The Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Company, who are executing an order for £20 worth of their milk at an exceptionally low price, viz: 80 cases—3,840 tins.

Messrs. Carr and Company, of Carlisle, have generously offered a second donation in addition to the 30 casks of biscuits which they have already given.

The second shipment goes to-day, per P. and O. steamer Egypt, as mentioned in our issue of last week. We are now planning for a third consignment to go per s.s. Paramatta, on 23rd inst.; and, as there are still a number of firms to whom application has been made but who have not yet responded, we are hoping to make as large, if not larger, shipment on that date.

We have again to express our indebtedness to the P. and O. Steam Navigation Company for their kindness in taking the goods freight free; and to Messrs. William Watson and Company, of 7, Waterloo Place, for the valuable assistance they are rendering, both in London and Bombay, in connection with the shipment of the these foods for the relief of the famine sufferers.

THE PREVENTION OF FAMINE.

Major H. M. Conran, writing from Ixworth, sends the following interesting communication on the irrigation question:—"At the present crisis of famine in India, various schemes are in project for supply of the deficiency of water. Many parts of South India now lying uncultivated from want of water—I speak of my own time fifty years ago—were once well cultivated, being irrigated from reservoirs, which, since our occupation of the country, have been allowed to fall into ruin through neglect. Is it not a wrong principle to look alone to grand enterprises of Government like the Ganges Canal? Should we not rather seek to develop the enterprise of the native by encouraging various means of irrigation, even to digging wells, which have answered so well in Algeria? A missionary in the Central Provinces has experimented in artesian wells with good prospects of success. That the even in failure of the Monsoon is certain, if we only study a good map of India, not merely by magnificent rivers like the Ganges, but by innumerable streamlets running amidst its hills and valleys, which, as the feeders of its rivers, have to be traced back to their sources in the valleys. From twenty-five years' travel through the country, and other sources of information, I have no doubt that India contains abundant stores of water available to render it independent of all failure of monsoons if rightly stored and developed.

COUNTRY IS WELL WATERED

"It might be advisable to observe that the quality of the water is also a matter of importance; for some rivers, like the Ganges, deposit a large quantity of fertilizing mud, like the Nile; whilst others, like the Jumna, are nearly destitute of fertilizing matter. Here, therefore, is ample scope for scientific study and research before engaging in any great enterprise for irrigation. If so much effort and finance have been expended in railways, and even in the opium trade, some such efforts might well be expended for the great factor of life—the food of man."

Baptism unto Repentance.

Studies of John the Baptist.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

AT the time of which we are speaking, an extraordinary sect, known as the Essenes, was scattered throughout lestine, but had its special home in the oasis Engedi; and with the adherents of this comunity John must have been in frequent sociation. They were the recluses or hermits their age.

It is clear that John was not a member of is holy community, which differed widely om the Pharisaism and Sadduceeism of the ne. The Essenes wore white robes, emblematic the purity they sought; whilst he was content th his coat of camel's hair and leathern rdle. They seasoned their bread with hyssop, d he with honey. They dwelt in brotherhoods d societies; whilst he stood alone from the rliest days of his career. But it cannot be ubted that he was in deep accord with much of e doctrine and practice of this sect.

John the Baptist, however, cannot be counted for by any of the pre-existing conitions of his time. He stood alone in his od-given might. That he was conscious of is appears from his own declaration when he id, "He that sent me to baptize with water, e said unto me." And that Christ wished to nvey the same impression is clear from his estion to the Pharisees: "The baptism of hn, was it from heaven or from men?" oreover, the distinct assertion of the Spirit of od, through the fourth Evangelist, informs : "There came a man, sent from God, ose name was John; the same came for tness, that all might believe through him." The Word of God came unto John, the son of acharias, in the wilderness. And he came."

I.—Let us hear the Summons to Repentance.

cannot be too strongly emphasized that pentance is an act of the will. In its beginng there may be no sense of gladness or conciliation with God, but just the consciousss that certain ways of life are wrong, misken, hurtful, and grieving to God; and the sire, which becomes the determination, to rn from them, and seek Him.

Repentance may be accounted as the other le of faith. They are the two sides of the me coin: the the act of the soul, which brings it into right lation with God, is described as a turning und, to go in the reverse direction to that in hich it had been travelling, then repentance ands for its desire and choice to turn from n, and faith for its desire and choice to turn God. We must be willing to turn from sin d our own righteousness—that is repentance; e must be willing to be saved by God, in his vn way, and must come to Him for that rpose—that is faith.

Repentance is produced sometimes and ecially by the presentation of the claims of hrist. We suddenly awake to realize what He , how He loves, how much we are missing, the oss ingratitude with which we respond to his gony and bloody sweat, the beauty of his aracter, the strength of his claims.

At other times repentance is wrought by the eaching of John the Baptist. Then we hear the axe laid at the root of the trees, and the nquenchable fire for the consuming of the chaff: nd the heart trembles. At such a time as this, e soul sees the entire fabric of its vain conidences and hopes crumbling like a cloud-ilace, and turns from it all—as Mary from the epulchre, where her hopes lay entombed—to nd Jesus standing with the resurrection ory on his face and radiant love in his eyes.

For purposes of clear thinking it is well to scriminate in our use of the words Repentance nd Penitence, using the former of the first act will, when, energized and quickened by the pirit of God, it turns from dead works to serve e living and true God; and the latter, of the notions which are powerfully wrought upon, s the years pass, by the Spirit's presentation of all the pain and grief which our sin has caused, and is causing, to our blessed Lord. We repent once, but are penitents always. We repent in the will; we are penitent in the heart. We repent when we obey his call to come unto Him and live; we are penitent as we stand behind Him weeping, and begin to wash his feet with our tears, and to wipe them with the hair of our head.

If John the Baptist has never wrought his work in you, be sure to open your heart to his piercing voice.

LET HIM FULFIL HIS MINISTRY.

See that you do not reject the counsel of God, as it proceeds from his lips; but expose your soul to its searching scrutiny, and allow it to have free and uninterrupted course. He comes to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make through the desert of our nature a highway for our God.

II.—The Signs and Symptoms of Repentance. (1) Confession. "They were baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins." There, beneath the strong pressure of inward remorse and bitterness of spirit, men of notoriously bad life, as well as those who had never abandoned themselves to the mad currents of temptation, but were none the less conscious of heart and hidden sins, stood up, "confessing and declaring their deeds," as in a memorable scene long afterwards (Acts xix. 17-20).

The formalist confessed that the whited sepulchre of his religious observances had concealed a mass of putrefaction. The sceptic confessed that his refusal of religion was largely due to his hatred of the demands of God's holy law. The multitudes confessed that they had been selfish and sensual, shutting up their compassions, and refusing clothing and food to the needy. The publican confessed that he had extorted by false accusation and oppression more than his due. The soldier confessed that his profession had often served as the cloak for terrorizing the poor and

VAMPING UP WORTHLESS ACCUSATIONS.

The air was laden with the cries and sighs of stricken multitudes, who beheld their sin for the first time in the light of eternity and of its inevitable doom.

Confession is an essential sign of a genuine repentance, and without it forgiveness is impossible. "He that covereth his transgressions shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall obtain mercy." "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us." So long as we keep silence, we toss restlessly, though on a couch of down. But on confession there is immediate relief. "I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, and Thou forgavest me the iniquity of my sin."

Confess your sin to God, O troubled, from whom the vision of Christ is veiled. It is more than likely that some undetected or unconfessed sin is shutting out the rays of the true sun. Excuse nothing, extenuate nothing, omit nothing. Begin at the beginning, and go steadily through. Directly the confession leaves our heart, nay, whilst it is in process, the Divine voice is heard assuring us that our sins, which are many, are put away as far as the east is from the west, and cast into the depths of the sea.

But such confession should not be made to God alone, when sins are in question which have injured and alienated others. If our brother has aught against us, we must find him out, while our gift is left unpresented at the altar, and first be reconciled to him. We must write the letter, or speak the word; we must make we must not be behind the sinners under the old law, who were bidden to add a fifth part to the loss their brother had sustained through their wrong-doing, when they made it good. The only sin that we are justified in confessing to our brother man is that we have committed against him. All else must be told in the ear of Jesus, that great High Priest, whose confessional is always open, and whose pure ear can receive our dark and sad stories without taint or soil.

(2) Fruits worthy of Repentance. "Bring forth, therefore, fruit worthy of repentance," said John, with some indignation, as he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees coming to his baptism. He insisted that practical and vital religion was not a rule, but a life; not outward ritual, but a principle; not works, but fruit. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, and figs of thistles?"

You will never get right with God till you are right with man. It is not enough to confess wrong-doing; you must be prepared to make amends so far as lies in your power. Sin is not a light thing, and it must be dealt with, root and branch.

(3) The Baptism of Repentance. "They were baptized . . . confessing their sins." The cleansing property of water has given it a religious significance from most remote antiquity. Men have conceived of sin as a foul stain upon the heart, and have couched their petitions for its removal in words derived from its use: "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean. Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." They have longed to feel that as the body was delivered from iniquity, so the soul was freed from stain. In some cases, this thought has assumed and men have attributed to the water of certain rivers, such as the Ganges, the Nile, the Abana, the mysterious power of cleansing away sin.

There was no trace of this, however, in John's teaching. It was not baptism unto remission, but unto repentance. It was the expression and symbol of the soul's desire and intention, so far as it knew, to confess and renounce its sins, as the necessary condition of obtaining the Divine forgiveness.

It is not necessary to discuss the much vexed question of the source from which the Baptist derived his baptism—whether it was from the habits of the Essenes, or the practice of the Rabbis, who are said to have subjected to this rite all proselytes to Judaism from the Gentile world. It is enough for us to see that in his hands the rite assumed altogether novel and important functions. It meant death and burial as far as the past was concerned; and resurrection to a new and better future. Forgetting and dying to the things that were behind, the soul pressed on and up to better things before; assured as it did so that God had accepted its confession and choice, and was waiting to receive it graciously and love it freely.

It is easy to see how all this appealed to the people, and specially touched the hearts of young men. At that time, by the blue waters of the Lake of Galilee, there was a handful of ardent youths, deeply stirred by the currents of thought around them, who resented the Roman sway, and were on the tip-toe of expectation for the coming kingdom. How they spoke together, as they floated at night in their fisherman's yawl over the dark waters of the Lake of Galilee, about God's ancient covenant, and the advent of the Messiah, and the corruptions of their beloved Temple service! And when, one day, tidings reached them of this strange new preacher, they left all and streamed with all the world beside to the Jordan valley, and stood fascinated by

THE SPELL OF THE GREAT PREACHER.

One by one, or all together, they made themselves known to him, and became his loyal friends and disciples. We are familiar with the names of one or two of them, who afterwards left their earlier master to follow Christ; but of the rest we know nothing, save that they clung to their great teacher, until they bore his headless body to the grave, after which they joined themselves with Him, whom they had regarded with some suspicion, as his rival and supplanter.

How much this meant to John! He had never had a friend; and to have the allegiance and love of these noble, ingenuous youths must have been very grateful to his soul. But from them all he repeatedly turned his gaze, as though he were looking for someone who must presently emerge from the crowd; and the sound of whose voice would give him the deepest and richest fulfilment of joy of all, because it would be the voice of the Bridegroom Himself.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 13. Psa. lxxxix.

GOD'S faithfulness is the keynote of this psalm, which forms a worthy close to the third book of the Psalter. The psalmist, perhaps, hardly realized how fully his purpose would be accomplished of making it known to all generations.

The Divine faithfulness is specially illustrated by the life of David, with whom God entered into covenant relationship. Not all his fluctuations, nor the sins of his children, could undo the promises which God had made with him. He might chasten, but He would not take his mercy utterly away. It is into such a changeless relationship that Jehovah enters with each of us, when He adopts us into his family, and places his Name upon us. We may not believe, but He abideth faithful. We may fluctuate, but He is the same to-day as yesterday, and so He will be for ever. O believer, be sure to draw a clear distinction between thy faith, and the emotion of thy faith, and the changeless covenant of God, in which is all thy confidence.

The beloved child of God may dare sometimes to expostulate with his Heavenly Father, as in the concluding paragraphs of this psalm; and it is good to notice the tenacity with which he presses his claims. "How long, Lord?" "Lord, where are thy former mercies?" "Remember, Lord, the reproach of thy servants." You will remember what the Scotchwoman replied when someone suggested that God might cast her into hell: "In that case," she said, triumphantly, "He will lose more than I shall." God cannot lose credit for his faithfulness.

MONDAY, May 14. Psa. xc.

The imagery of this ancient and noble psalm is borrowed from the wilderness, in which Moses spent a third of his life. The watch of the camp fires at night; the brief flood of the mountain stream, caused by the melting snows, and soon dry; the grass which grows up in the morning, but is withered by noon; the tale that is told by one to another in the brief night-watch, but which soon comes to a close—how characteristic is each of these of the tiny incidents which stand out conspicuously amid the solemn procession of mighty natural phenomena!

The one permanent abiding-place for man is God. The passing generations find their home in his eternity, which overspans the brief course of human history, as a rainbow does the narrow streamlet in which some small segment of its arch may be mirrored. How little are our days to his! They are few and small when compared with the mighty processes of Nature, but how absolutely insignificant when compared with the everlasting years of God's right hand!

The psalm includes many specially appropriate prayers. For the sinner—that God would return, and repent, and show mercy. For the young—that life's morning may witness entire satisfaction of the heart-hunger, as a prelude to never-ceasing joy. For the aged—that his work may be allowed to appear, so that the weary heart may see some results of its long life-toil. For the uncomely—that they may be mantled over in the divine beauty. For the worker—that his work may be established through all coming time. Behind us come our children. Oh! that they may share in God's glory up to a full measure; that through the ages, as they pass, the light of God's face may be reflected through all generations!

TUESDAY, May 15. Psa. xci.

Three voices speak here. That of the psalmist in the first verse, in the assurances with which the first thirteen verses are filled; that of the individual soul in the second verse, "I will say of the Lord;" and ninth verse, as it appears in the R.V., "For Thou, Lord, art my Refuge;" and the voice of God in the three verses that conclude the psalm.

The Resolve of the Saint (vv. 2, 9). Put your hand upon God, and claim whatever He has and is. You are perhaps fearing something; dreading the result of sin or the hatred of men; dreading the results of some mistake; and you have been trying to throw up earthworks to defend yourself. But now, in the depth of your heart, say: Thou, Lord, art my refuge. Do not wait to feel it; dare to affirm it. Put God between your lonely heart and everything, as the oyster puts its strong corrugated shell between its tender pulp and the abrasion of the rock.

Comfortable Assurances. The first about the body and its safety (vv. 3-8). You may not be saved from sickness as a discipline, but as a punishment. In the precincts of God's keeping care you are absolutely safe when travelling or in times of epidemic. Secondly, about keeping power from sin and evil (vv. 9-13). Such evil is delineated by four graphic similitudes: the unexpected capture of the soul in the fowler's snare; the devil as a roaring lion; the fever of the adder's sting; the belching forth of the dragon's breath in persecutions. But God is able to keep us absolutely "in our all ways" from known and conscious sin, unless we cast ourselves down from the mountain in foolhardiness.

God's Voice assures us of his deliverance on two conditions. We must set our love on Him, and we must know his Name; that is, the attributes of his glorious character.

WEDNESDAY, May 16. Psa. xcii.

This is a psalm for the Sabbath day—yes, and for every day. Happy are they who can begin and end the day with song. The soul that can go through life with a voice of praise and thanksgiving will always have something to praise for. Whatever your lot, God's loving-kindness and faithfulness will always afford themes for holy exultation.

God makes us glad through his work (v. 4). "Therefore," as Luther says, "my dear brother, learn Christ and Him crucified; learn to sing to Him, and, despairing of thyself, to say to Him, constantly: Thou art my righteousness, but I am thy sin. Thou hast taken me unto thyself, and given to me what is thine; Thou hast taken on Thee what Thou wast not, and hast given to me what I was not. Take care not to aspire to such a purity that thou shalt no longer seem to thyself a sinner, for Christ does not dwell except in sinners. For this He descended from heaven, where He abode with the just, that He might abide with sinners. Meditate on this love of his, and thou shalt drink in his sweet consolations. He has made thy sins his, and his righteousness He has made thine."

Closely allied to the life of triumph in God's work of justifying righteousness is the daily anointing (v. 10). The day should never pass without our standing afresh under the unction of the Holy One. It is only as it abides upon us that we shall learn how to abide in Christ. It is only by the constant renewal of the Holy Spirit that we can be fruitful as the palm tree, strong as the cedar, and remain full of sap and green. The upright Lord cannot be unjust to his Son, or unfaithful to his servants. Be of good cheer, He will not fail even to old age.

THURSDAY, May 17. Psa. xciii.

The surge of the Atlantic or Indian Ocean has often made me think of this psalm. Perpetually as I have walked the deck I have said to myself, as I have listened to the breaking wavelets cleft by the steamer's prow, "The floods have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice, the floods lift up their waves." It is a very striking metaphor, and often it has seemed as though the waters were speaking sweet words of peace, or hoarse words of threatening. So do men speak around us.

It may be that some who read these words have been called to forsake father and mother, wife and children, and all things for his dearer love. Before them lies the martyr's or apostle's solitary path, and all around are breaking the strong waves of hatred and opposition; but when God calls to such a life by the clear voice of Providence, there is no alternative for the obedient soul. "All that is not duty is sin; all that is not obedience is disobedience; all that is not of love is of self; and self crowned with thorns in a cloister of our own choosing is as selfish as self crowned with ivy at a revel."

Look away, O troubled, persecuted soul; the Lord reigneth, He holds the winds in his fist, and the waters in the hollow of his hand. No wave can outstep the limit He assigns; "the Lord on high is mighty." His voice may be detected far above the rush of the storm, saying, "Peace, be still."

FRIDAY, May 18. Psa. xciv.

What an experience is here! Outside are the proud and the wicked, the arrogant and the workers of iniquity, who boast themselves against the saints of God, and afflict his heritage. They hide themselves, as they suppose, from his searching gaze, in the shadow of their excuses, or beneath the pall of secrecy. Because God does nothing, they suppose that He is indifferent. As though it were possible for the Creator, who loves us infinitely, to be one whit indifferent to the souls whom He has redeemed!

But why does He permit the enemy and avenger to lift himself up against his chosen! Ah, there is an inner secret for it all. He uses the hatred of men as a refining fire. The persecutor is his rod; those threats and blows are part of the Divine chastening. Fear not, the rod is in the hands of Love. You have given reverence to your earthly father; now be in subjection to the Father of your spirit, and live. This chastening is not for his pleasure, but for your profit, that you may partake of his holiness. Blessed are you—presently God will give you rest. God has not cast you off, and cannot. Judgment shall return to righteousness.

In the meanwhile let God be your high tower and the rock of your refuge. You need Jesus Christ Himself. Not this or that truth about Him, but Himself. Not the acts of his holy life alone—not even his atoning death; but his very Person, human and divine—Himself living, dying, conquering death, freely bestowing life. Would you find Him? He is within, waiting for you, with the multitude of his consolations. "This Priest," said Luther, "is with me always. I make my confession to Him every evening, or oftener, if I need it; and as often as I confess He absolves, and bids me be of good courage, go and sin no more. He dwells in the holy of holies, which never more is empty, like the solitary sanctuary of the old Temple."

SATURDAY, May 19. Psa. xcv.

Canst thou not praise thy God alone, O saintly heart? Why call in thy fellow saints, saying, Come, let us sing, let us make a joyful noise! "Ah," saith he, "it seems as though my heart could not sing loudly enough, by itself. It makes so feeble a strain amid the Hallelujah Chorus of nature; and it seems so unworthy of the claims of the Lord. Know that He is a great God, and a great King."

But where dost thou find materials for thine abounding joy, O happy, holy soul? "Ah," he says, "I cannot look down into the deep places of the earth, without remembering the depth of his love and compassion, and crying, 'Oh, the depth!' I cannot behold the heights of the mountains, where the pure air roams, and the fresh waters are oxygenated, without climbing the snowy peaks of his purity; I cannot look on the wide expanse of the sea, pouring all its waves up through the inlets of the coast, without recalling his tidal waves of blessed fulness; and as for the land, did not his hands form and mould it as a potter does the clay? Is He not our God, our Shepherd, and am I not one of the sheep of his pasture, whom He has redeemed, going out and in beneath his care, and finding green pastures and waters of rest?"

And then the saintly singer turns to us, saying: "To-day, hear his voice and harden not your heart. Remember the fate which befel the rebels of the wilderness march, who murmured in their tents, and missed the land of promised rest. Believe in Him as thy Saviour, Shepherd, King; so shalt thy heart seem full of singing-birds, and thy joy shall kindle other souls with its rejoicings."

Home Missions.

Christian Union for Social Service.

A PERUSAL of the general facts and financial statement contained in the annual report of this Union will afford much satisfaction to its numerous upporters and friends. The opening of the ew buildings at the Training Colony at ingfield, which is founded on an economic asis, and has received the hearty approval of ie Local Government Board, was the event f the year. The cost of the additions, which mplete the building operations in both parts f the colony, amounted to £170.

In accordance with general experience, the ear was one of loss so far as agriculture was ncerned, corn, roots, and fruit having failed a great extent as a result of the long drought d other causes. The tenant right has still rther increased by £181. Three of the four editors, whose loans of £250 each were cured under the second mortgage, have surndered their claims, while the fourth has gnified his willingness to do so for one-half of ie amount, on condition that the other half is paid within six months. In consequence of this lease it has been resolved that a single new ortgage for £3,600 upon the property of the lony, now valued at £10,000, will be adequate, hich arrangement has been duly executed.

Men are received from twelve boards of uardians, epileptic children from seven. here are at present fifty-two inmates of the rm premises, while at the Homestead there re, besides the directors' family, thirty-seven ildren, teachers, servants, farm pupils, &c.

Experience has abundantly confirmed the elief that strong drink presents the greatest ndrance to restoration of every kind. The rsistency of the morbid appetite, and the f separate treatment, are constantly illustrated, me of the best workmen having frequent lapses even after intervals of a year. The ost urgent need of the colony at present is an iebriates' Retreat. The London County ouncil have renewed communications with ie authorities of the colony respecting the rection and maintenance of a reformatory for iebriates, and it is hoped that the issue will e an arrangement for a permanent building r this purpose.

The care of epileptic children presents many fficulties, and often taxes both n the course of a detailed report to the Local overnment Board, the director says:—"We elieve this is the first and only Home where ileptic children are gathered together, and us taught and observed with some approach scientific method." The report of the edical attendant on the happiness and comrt of the inmates reflects much credit upon e sympathy, patience, and able management Mrs. Brooks and her staff.

The character of the work on the whole is mewhat unique as a Christian and undeominational institution, co-operating with the overnment and boards of guardians for the aking of independent men out of inmates, d often wrecks of workhouses, and giving epileptic children, otherwise doomed to ibecility, the happy experience of an adapted hool and a country home.

Copies of the annual report and other informaon may be obtained from the resident, rector—Rev. J. L. Brooks, Training College, ngfield, Surrey.

Y.W.C.A.—At the annual meeting of the Dundee W.C.A. held last week, the report showed that the ar's work had been of a fruitful character in the angelistic and other departments. Lady Kinnaird s re-elected hon. president, and Miss Jessiman, ting president.

West London Mission.

THE recently issued report of the West London Mission is full of interesting information regarding the work and its many ramifications. It is written by a country minister, who recounts his experiences in visiting the various centres of the work.

In the following terms the author describes an after-meeting on a Sunday evening at St. James's Hall:—

"In the absence of all unhealthy excitement, the people who voluntarily remain are urged to instant decision, and on every occasion since the commencement, some have responded. On the night of my visit twenty-six adults were assisted in others were dealt with in the hall itself by carefully selected stewards and sisters.

"In charge of the men's inquiry room was a young provincial, whose paintings had been hung in the Royal Academy; and assisting was another student, who told me that they had commenced Christian work in the Academy Art School, and that several had already joined their little society. Looking over the inquiry room register, I copied from one month's entries particulars, amongst many ordinary cases, of a backslider from the Isle of Man, a medical student from St. Thomas' Hospital, two privates of the Coldstream Guards, leaving for South Africa in a fortnight, and a traveller from Sydney.

"The question may be raised, 'What is the value of this work, and are the results permanent?' Well, about a hundred are received into the Mission Church, quarterly, at the Public Recognition Service for new members, and they are mostly gathered into society classes. Look, for instance, at Sister Lily's class. The average attendance is between seventy and eighty a week, and in it you find

SIXTEEN HOSPITAL NURSES!

One young person rescued and brought under Sister Lily's care had never seen a New Testament, and had no idea what the words meant. There are a number who are employed in the houses of the Foreign Embassies, and no less than three are in the Queen's Palace. Here is an officer's wife who stood up as an inquirer, and requested Sister Lily to go to her house to instruct her, and who had invited four other ladies to meet her as inquirers. In the free sisterly intercourse of that class what problems are solved and what needs are grappled with! Take just one illustration. 'If a friend had betrayed you, Sister Lily, would you be expected to forgive and also to forget it altogether, as though it had never happened?' Well, Sister Lily is diplomatic, and set the others answering; and at last a lady asked to speak. 'When a piece of valuable china is broken, we send it to an expert to be repaired, and sometimes it is so cleverly done that we cannot see where the crack was, but if you tap it with the knuckle it hasn't got the ring; so I think it is with friendship.' And very probably that is the final word on that subject."

The annual gatherings in connection with the Mission were held on Friday last at St. James' Hall. In the afternoon, Lady Hope presided at a at which Mrs. Price Hughes and two of the Sisters of the Mission gave pathetic accounts of their work amongst the poor.

In the evening there was a large gathering under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Lile. Rev. H. Russell Wakefield, rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, said he was there to express the sympathy of the Established Church with this Mission. He hoped they would never have that uniformity for which some people longed; but they did want union for work on the social side of Christianity.

Sir H. H. Fowler, M.P., said the Mission was an enormous agency for good, and good not only of a local but an imperial character. It was attacking ignorance, vice, and suffering. At the base was a completely organized Methodist Church; yet every shilling given was applied exclusively to the service of the miserable and friendless, without distinction of race, class, or creed. In the course of the meeting, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes announced that the Mission was out of debt.

Jews in Whitechapel.

THE current issue of the Scattered Nation (Morgan & Scott), the quarterly record of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, contains particulars of the proposed new mission premises which are to be erected. "On the last day of 1899," writes Rev. David Baron, "the troublesome business of the site, which has occasioned us a good deal of sorrow on account of the almost endless delay, was at last brought to a satisfactory settlement. Then the first question which arose was if the dilapidated building now standing on it could at least be partly utilized; but after careful examination by the architect and surveyor, their reports were even as we anticipated; namely, that there was nothing for it but to take it down and build premises to the requirements of the mission."

The plans were submitted for the builders' estimate, and it was found that to carry them out in full and to provide the accommodation desired would cost more than was at first anticipated. As stated at the annual meeting last week, £4,750, leaving a sum of £2,500 still to be raised.

"We feel it to be God's will that we should proceed at once, without waiting till the whole sum is in hand; but in the hope that while the building is in progress, and before it is finished, which we hope will be by next August or September, the hearts of God's stewards will, for Christ's sake, be moved to come forward to the help of his cause."

Building operations are progressing rapidly, and the property is being put in trust of several representative Christian gentlemen.

Correspondence for Mr. Baron may be addressed to 23, Boscastle Road, London, N.W.

A Village Need.

DEAR SIR,—About eighteen months ago, a friend, a Christian gentleman owning property in Devonshire, became aware that many of the people living on or near his estate were in a state of spiritual destitution. Very few attended either church or chapel, or came in contact with any good influence.

My friend determined to do what lay in his power to remedy this condition of things, and undertook to have a simple service every Sunday afternoon, alternately in a farmhouse and in a cottage, conveniently situated for the purpose. This afternoon service has been continued without a break since its commencement, and has been much blessed by God. At first only some half-dozen persons attended, but now as many as fifty to sixty persons assemble every Sunday afternoon to hear the Gospel message of salvation through Jesus Christ.

Both farmhouse and cottage have become too small to accommodate the increasing numbers. The people value their service, and of their own initiative have started a subscription list, and taken collecting cards, in order to obtain the means to purchase an iron building which will be capable of holding 100 persons; but they are very poor, chiefly agricultural labourers, earning about 15s. per week. After a month's effort they have collected £20. My friend has promised to give a sum equal to whatever amount may be raised by the people, and will provide, free of expense, a site for the building.

It is estimated that the cost of an iron room, preparing the foundation, and purchasing absolutely necessary furniture will be from £150 to £175. There thus remains to collect from £110 to £135.

Doubtless there are Christian people disposed to help this poor congregation to obtain the amount required. I shall be glad to acknowledge any donations sent to me.—I remain, dear sir, faithfully yours,

Philip Story (Lieut.-Colonel retired).

Believers' Meetings in Dublin.—The annual gatherings for believers in Merrion Hall, Dublin, are fixed for June 11-14. The main object of the conference is instruction and edification by the ministry of the Word. Reports of work at home and abroad will be received. The chief daily fixtures, after a preliminary meeting on the evening of June 11, are at noon, 4 p.m., and 7.30 p.m. Communications may be addressed, Mr. T. Ormsby Beaumont, Blackrock, Dublin.

THE LATE

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor.

FUNERAL SERVICE AT NOTTING HILL.

SOLEMN impressiveness and tender pathos were the chief characteristics of the funeral service held at Trinity Church, Notting Hill, on Monday afternoon last. A large congregation filled the building to overflowing, and many were unable to gain admission. Immediately in front of the Communion rail, which, with the pulpit, was massed with wreaths of white blossoms, in sight of the whole assembly. Behind it, sat Principal Dykes and the members of the North London Synod of the English Presbyterian Church. In the pulpit were Revs. Alex. Connell, F. B. Meyer, and Johnston Ross. The front pews contained a large number of leading ministers, in addition to many friends connected with the religious and philanthropic agencies of the Metropolis.

THE COFFIN RESTED

The service began with the "Dead March" in Saul, the audience standing while the sad strains were played. After prayer, Rev. A. Connell, with suppressed emotion, paid a loving tribute to the memory of the departed minister. He pictured Mr. Macgregor as the quick, intense preacher, the fervent pastor, who, it seemed, they could so ill afford to lose. It was difficult to realize here among the shadows, that he had passed away. Referring to the beautiful fancy which called death "the kiss of God," Mr. Connell stimulated his hearers to renewed faith and consecration. They would do well, over the ashes of the beloved dead, to do

HONOUR TO THE WILL OF GOD.

It would be a poor tribute to his memory if they were to fold their hands in dumb sorrow; rather let their hands be lifted in consecration to God, who forgets not his work nor his workers, and who doeth all things well. Mr. Macgregor was ever intent on seeking the fullest enduement that is able to transform human life; let them, then, go forth to pray and to toil for the Master.

Mr. Connell followed his moving address with prayer that Divine comfort might be extended to the widow and the little ones nestling close to her, that they might hear the voice of Jesus from the tomb, saying, "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Rev. F. B. Meyer, who was also deeply touched, desired, in the first instance, to speak of Mr. Macgregor as one of the inner circle of Keswick leaders. He pictured the departed minister, incisive, active, and fervent, influencing crowds to find greater joys and greater power in God, and to yield Him more whole-hearted service. Next Mr. Meyer recalled how, with equal energy, Mr. Macgregor would devote time between the meetings at Keswick dealing with inquirers, explaining and inspiring. Passing in review other departments of public work in which Mr. Macgregor had laboured, at conferences and conventions, by sermons and addresses in various parts of Great Britain, notably at Birmingham and at Glasgow, Mr. Meyer went on to refer to recent utterances to young people, and mentioned how greatly Mr. D. L. Moody loved Mr. Macgregor, and valued his work at the gatherings at Northfield. Remarkable blessing, too, had accompanied the addresses to ministers at Chicago and other important centres in the United States. By his contributions to literature, also, he had exercised a wide influence that made for spiritual revival. Concluding with a note of victory and solemn rejoicing that the dauntless soldier had passed into the presence of the King, Mr. Meyer engaged in prayer that God might vouchsafe to the world, in his Providence, many more such men as the one who had passed away.

Mr. Connell announced that later in the day the remains would be removed to Aberdeen for interment.

Pastor Frank White followed with brief prayer, and, pronouncing the benediction, concluded a hallowed service that will long remain fresh in the memories of those who were present.

In Memoriam.

Rev. George H. C. Macgregor.

Swept away in a moment,
Yet 'twas the hand of Love!
We can but stand and wonder,
And dumbly gaze above.

We thought a mighty future,
Prepared by God's own hand,
Seemed thronging in upon thee
In this and many a land.

We knew thy rare equipment,
Thy spirit's rapier thrust,
We knew thy burning ardour,
We knew thy simple trust.

We knew thy soul's ambition
To wake the Church of God,
To herald in her Bridegroom—
With garlands strew the road.

Now all is rent asunder,
The dream of life is o'er;
The gates of the Eternal
Break open at our door.

Thy Keswick comrades miss thee,
The Church of Christ doth mourn,
God's angels stoop to shelter
Her left on earth forlorn.

But, brother, O, my brother,
Though shadowed be our ranks,
The warrior-host of Jesus
Sends up a shout of thanks.

Thanks for thy noble witness,
Thanks for thy life's accord,
Thanks for thy saintly valour—
Heaven's dew upon thy sword.

Thanks for thy glorious battles,
Thy bugle blast, "Saints, higher!"
No marvel Christ hath caught thee
Home to his breast in fire!

Charles A. Fox.

Obituary.

MRS. W. R. RICKETT.

THE death of Mrs. W. R. Rickett, in her sixty-third year, removes a gracious and spiritually-minded lady who had long exercised a helpful influence in religious and philanthropic undertakings. Her zealous labours were given, up to the last, to the cause of various missionary movements of which her husband, the treasurer of the Baptist Missionary Society, is a munificent supporter.

MR. J. K. NUTTALL.

The death is announced, at the age of sixty, of Rev. J. K. Nuttall, the esteemed pastor of Great George Street Congregational Chapel, Liverpool. Mr. Nuttall was educated at Rotherham College, and after nine years of service at Bradford, laboured at Sunderland, where his evangelistic efforts proved fruitful. After a stay of sixteen years, Mr. Nuttall went to Liverpool, and by his enthusiasm and industry soon raised up an earnest band of workers. It was in connection with the P.S.A. movement, perhaps, that Mr. Nuttall became most widely known, his P.S.A., Great George Street, having the largest membership of any in the kingdom, and exercising in a variety of ways many influences for good.

MRS. JOHN FORDYCE.

Many in Britain and India mourn the homegoing of one richly gifted by nature and grace, in the person of Wortley Montague Augusta Fordyce, who passed away recently in clearest light and perfect peace at Cambridge. As the wife of Rev. John Fordyce, for forty-eight years she did what she could in Christian service. At Calcutta she took an important part in organizing the Zenana Mission in 1855, and in other efforts for India's daughters. Joining her husband in some of his evangelistic tours, she travelled in many parts of India, and once in Burmah, always ready for good works. After returning to Britain, in 1885, India was still in her heart, and she carried on as a labour of love the Anglo-Indian Ladies' Union, which has done much good in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society. Mrs. Fordyce was in her eighty-first year.

CAPTAIN JAMES CHALMERS.

The late Captain James Chalmers, who recently passed away at Durban, was widely known, both in Scotland and in Central and Southern Africa, as a man of earnest Christian character. He was the means of conversion of many who came into contact with him in his middle life, some of whom are now in the ministry. Captain Chalmers was an elder of Rothesay West Free Church, and had active sympathy with the various forms of Christian work in Bute. He was endowed with the true missionary spirit, and Rev. Donald Fraser, who lately accompanied him from the Zambesi to Durban, writes of him: "Captain Chalmers was highly esteemed by whites and natives. His life was blameless, and he was a very decided missionary force. We members of the Livingstonia Mission all looked on him as a friend, and almost as one of our staff. His memory will long be kept green at Lake Nyassa."

Scottish Notes.

A CHEERING note was introduced into the meeting of the Free Synod of Moray the other day, by Rev. Mr. Macpherson of Findhorn, who was able to tell of a congregation to whose Bible class a considerable number of farm servants have been attracted from neighbouring bothies, with the result that they are taking a lively interest in the subjects taught. Is there not a hint here for other districts, that the teaching of Scripture has not lost either charm or power, when presented in the proper way?

Within the last few years the Glasgow and South-Western Railway Company has brought into existence the village of Corkerhill, in the vicinity of Glasgow. The inhabitants already number over 600, all the men being in some way employed in connection with the various departments of the company's service. It is to the credit of the company that no licensed premises are permitted in the district, "and," adds one familiar with the circumstances, "consequently no gaol is required." A number of the men belong to the Railway Mission, and much earnest Christian effort is put forth among their neighbours.

At the Wesleyan Methodist Synod in Dundee last week, attention was called to the fact that this is the fourteenth successive year in which an increase of membership has been reported; and it is further gratifying to learn that satisfactory additions have been made to the junior classes and Wesley guilds, as the result of times of blessing in various parts of the country during the year. The gifts to the Twentieth Century Fund promised from Scotland now amount to 7,280 guineas.

At the Congregational Union of Scotland, which also met in Dundee last week, a committee was instructed to prepare a draft of a new hymnal, to consist of five or six hundred hymns. A pleasing feature of the meetings was the evidence of a wish on the part of "the minority churches" to arrange some footing on which they might be received into the Union.

Last Thursday General Booth opened at Dundee a new Women's Rescue Home and Metropole, which will make a valuable addition to the agencies of the Salvation Army in the East of Scotland. Ground, buildings and fittings have cost £8,050, and the Rescue department is expected to involve a loss of about £150, a sum which it is hoped the Christian public of the city and district will provide. In the Metropole will be accommodation for 175 persons, the charges for beds being fourpence and sixpence per night; and the income from this department is expected to meet outlay. Thirty inmates can be received in the Rescue Home.

The May Meetings.

Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission.

THERE was a large gathering of friends of Mr. John A. Groom's Mission, at the celebration of its thirty-fourth anniversary, held last week. Mr. Robt. Scott presided over a bright meeting in Shoreditch Town Hall, and spoke of eight-and-twenty years' acquaintance with the superintendent and his work. Good Lord Shaftesbury was long a friend of this worthy effort.

Some action songs by the children here varied the programme, and then Mr. Groom had a few words to say about his efforts on behalf of the women and girls who sell flowers in the streets and market-places of our great city, many of whom have become street lights to show Christ's glory and tell of his love. The Mission seeks to remove all children and young girls from the dangers and evils of the street. Mr. Groom does not recognise the necessity for any young girl to remain in the streets; hence his institution offers to receive abandoned and motherless babes, waifs, and destitute little girls, crippled and afflicted children, into its homes. All young girls are offered the advantages of and such as accept the offer are provided with outfit and situation, a general oversight being maintained with regard to them. For the flower women there are six branches in various districts, each branch being a centre of Christian and philanthropic activity; though, for reasons of economy in management, all funds, grants, &c., are controlled by the Council, thus saving the heavy cost of separate staffs.

There are over 3,000 regular street flower sellers, over one-half of whom are enrolled members of the Mission clubs. The Mission has branches in all parts of London, and its varied operations begin with the very little children. Full recognition is made of the fact that drink lies at the root of a great amount of London's sin and misery; and, consequently, total abstinence has a prominent place in the work. Something like twenty meetings are held every week for the simple preaching of the Gospel, attended by nearly 2,000 street women and girls. The Mission has rescued the perishing, and cared for the homeless; and the little ones present, with their bright faces, showed that God had blessed the Christian care exercised on their behalf. The Lord had used instruction from his Word, to the salvation of over since the last annual meeting. Mr. Groom closed his address with some faithful exhortation and godly counsel to mothers and daughters present, belonging to the classes among which he loves to labour.

The Orphan Girl Handbell Ringers illustrated how their training is pleasantly combined with a due amount of play.

Pastor H. Thomas was introduced as one who is intending to devote his time and énergies to the assistance of Mr. Groom in this Mission. The children, he said, were being saved and are in good hands, learning the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and giving good evidence that they know Him; but he appealed to fathers and mothers to ask themselves the question, How am I to know the blessing of salvation? He bore personal testimony that, through a mother's Christian faithfulness and prayerfulness in the presence of her child, he came to know Jesus as his own Saviour. God was looking after these children. Let parents give themselves to Him, and they would know the blessedness of sins forgiven. The proceedings came to a close with a display of musical drill, a clever handbell solo on "The Lost Chord," and a braiding of the maypole, in anticipation of May Day on the morrow.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

A YEAR of mingled joy and sorrow was recorded by this Society in its ninety-sixth annual statement presented to the meeting held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday morning last week. On the one hand, the work accomplished has been far larger than had ever before been achieved in a single twelvemonth. On the other hand, the receipts have fallen below those of the previous year, and leave a heavy deficit. Sorrowful experience has again shown that while God carries on his work He buries his workmen; and the Society has to mourn, among other losses by death, the decease of its late president, the third Earl of Harrowby, to whom the Society owes a heavy debt for the advantages derived from his leadership.

In his review of the past year's operations, the secretary, Rev. J. Sharp, mentioned that two new agencies had been formed in Central America and North Malaysia—the Philippines and Indo-China. Colportage has been begun in Montenegro, and is resumed in Crete; and two colporteurs started for the Society at Omdurman in February last. On the whole 770 colporteurs are employed abroad, who sold nearly 2,000,000 copies of the Scriptures last year.

There are now over 7,600 auxiliaries, branches, and associations, of which nearly 5,700 are in England and Wales. No less than 582 native Christian Bible women are supported in the East, chiefly in connection with thirty different missionary organizations. Among British troops embarking for the South African war, 126,000 Gospels and Testaments have been distributed. In Cape Colony and the Transvaal many thousands of Scriptures have been supplied to the sick and wounded and prisoners, irrespective of race or party, to the military hospitals, to British prisoners at Pretoria, and to Boer prisoners sailing for St. Helena.

Translations or revisions are going on in

OVER 100 DIFFERENT LANGUAGES.

Several hundred translators, revisers, and assistants are organized in various committees in charge of this world-wide task. Last year's total receipts were £211,468; and the expenditure, covering translation, revising, printing, and binding Scriptures, grants, agencies, colportage, depôts and other charges, £235,210. Thus there is a deficit on the year's working of £23,742. The record in issues (Bibles, Testament and portions) is over 5,047,000 copies; and some of the items of circulation are—in Germany, 314,000 copies; in India, 541,000; in the Russian Empire, 568,000; and in China, 856,000. The issues in China exceed 1,000,000 volumes.

Sir Joseph Pease, Bart. (vice-president), speaking from the chair, voiced a message of sympathy to the bereaved Countess of Harrowby, and made appreciative reference to the interest taken by the late Earl in the circulation of the Scriptures through this Society. The life of their late president was a very instructive and eminently useful one in political, educational and religious directions. He was an honest, straightforward, God-fearing man, not only upon this platform, but throughout his public life. It was most interesting to trace England's history alongside her Bible, from the days of Wycliffe to the last translation made. The platform of the Society is, he rejoiced to say, an all-pull-together one as regards both Conformists and Nonconformists. The openings for the Society's work grow faster than the income increases; and there is need to enforce the fact that an ever-increasing area of influence at home and abroad should add to the funds of a Society which seeks to spread Christ's Gospel throughout the world.

Three reasons for supporting the Society were advanced by Bishop Ingham, late of Sierra Leone. Experience had proved the quickening power of God's Word; hidden in the heart, it had prevailed against sin; and close acquaintance with its truths makes it and silver. It is for us to make that saying true in this money-greedy age. In view of such a work, the words of Lord Salisbury at the meeting of the British Empire League were worthy of repetition: "The course of events"—which, said the speaker, I should prefer to call the acts of providence—"have called this country to exercise an influence over the character and progress of the world such as has never been exercised in any empire before." Resolutions, moved and carried, mean that all who approve the Society's record must work harder for the cause than ever before.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, said it was nearly twenty-five years since he first advocated the cause from the platform; but since then he had joined in doing so, upon one memorable occasion with Archbishop Thomson and Charles Haddon Spurgeon. Links between the Society and the Church which the speaker represented are growing more beneficial; Wesleyan missionaries using versions of the Bible in upwards of forty languages, and giving their services to translation and revision as opportunity serves. The good results of the Society's operations lay broad and apparent upon the face of modern history. Those who would discourage the circulation of Holy Scripture in a free and broadcast way, because of the liability of the human mind to error, forget that the Bible is not a mere text-book, but is addressed to the mind, heart, conscience, affections, moral nature, and will of men and women the world over. The Book is of mankind; and it is unreasonable to find theoretical fault with a revelation which has, from age to age, proved itself efficient for the purpose which it everywhere proclaims.

Very eloquent was the appeal that followed from Dean Lefroy, of Norwich. The combination of praise to God for his Word, and prayer for prosperity in the thing whereunto it is sent, follow a principle which subdues the tendency to personal inflation in the Christian and casts him upon God. In the Bible there is a designed unity, and a miraculous affinity between books written by different persons, with different aims, in different ages, but all converging in a glorious unity. The very reverse is the case with secular literature. Results equal to "Christ in you, the hope of glory," cannot be produced by travel, education, science, or the excogitation of the human mind; but this is the gift of God the Holy Ghost using, most generally, the Word which is the outcome and revelation of the Divine Mind. Every child of God who has supernatural life from the Holy Ghost, through the power of the Word, as he turns to Christ for succour, is working out the mysterious coincidence of the historic with the supernatural, and realizes before angels and men the lofty character which God expects when He says,

"YE ARE MY WITNESSES."

We have joy in the scattering of God's Word to every nation under heaven, but our enthusiasm is chilled by the fact that we, in this Society, need means to the extent of over £23,000. Surely this amount and more can be realized for a Society which, as its Report proved, is thoroughly alive to its opportunities. We are not so innocent as to suppose that the wealth of our country has been adequately tapped in view of the whole world now open to the emissaries of the Cross.

Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., said it was gratifying to find that the executive of the Society and their agents are men of prayer. "Why need we bother the heathen with our Bible?" was a question often asked. Without a word against any man's faith, it may be said that nothing outside Christianity satisfies human longings and points man to God. Hinduism, for instance, speaks of countless gods to be feared, but reveals not one to be loved. Other addresses followed from Rev. J. Hinton Knowles (a C.M.S. translator of the Scriptures into Kashmiri) and Mr. Caleb R. Kemp (Chairman of Committee).

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THE work of this Mission during the past twelve months was passed in review at a meeting held on Monday week in connection with the eleventh anniversary, at St. Paul's Church Room, Onslow Square, S.W., by kind permission of Rev. Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, President of the Mission, who also occupied the chair.

From a statement made by Prediger C. T. Lipshytz, the secretary, it appeared that in a year of peculiar difficulty and trial, when the calls of war and famine funds have made great demands upon the liberality of Christians in England, the Mission has had a larger income than ever before. Receipts for the year, amounting to £1,346, were expended in the work done, with the exception of a few shillings. Towards building the Gordon Calthrop Memorial Mission House a sum of £3,500 has been received. A large and increasing number of Jews have come to the services and classes; it is believed that the Mission has obtained the confidence of the Jews in a marked degree.

It was stated that workers of the Mission are constantly visiting the Jews in Jewish restaurants, and in other places of resort. It is in the homes of the people that the closest touch is obtained with them; and instances can be given of distinct and definite blessing resulting from this visitation. As to alleviation and distress, no case is relieved until the workers are able to personally testify to its worthiness.

At Vine House, Walthamstow, the residence of Mr. Lipshytz is combined with the home for converts and inquirers. During the year thirty-three have been sheltered there, from a few days to several months. Living under the same roof, Mr. Lipshytz is able to find out who are really genuine inquirers and converts.

Preb. Webb-Peploe, speaking of the new site, mentioned that at the back there is a Jewish synagogue; and that, in a spiritual sense, at any rate, it is hoped to break down "the middle walk of partition" between Jew and Gentile. The difficulties of the enterprise are bravely faced by the workers of the Mission, who seek entire freedom from rivalry with other organizations of a like character. The work is essentially of a paternal and brotherly nature, and involves the searching out of Jews one by one by those who, as are able strongly to commend to their brethren the doctrine of Christ. To the success of this work, the chairman said he could personally testify.

Bishop Barry followed. After referring to the active interest taken by the late Rev. Gordon Calthrop in this Mission, he said that the world in general owes much to the Jew; for he occupies the unique but strange and mysterious position of being scattered everywhere, greatly persecuted, but standing as a continual witness for the one true and living God. Christian duty to this people is very simple—namely, to bear witness among them for Christ, quite independently of any results that God may be pleased to give.

Rev. J. A. Faithfull, of Whitechapel, thought that the spirit of thankfulness evident in the report is almost certain to be an earnest of blessing in the future. Sympathetic advocacy of Jewish claims was made by Rev. R. C. Joynt, with a strong personal application in regard to prayer and devotion of means for the work. Rev. A. Bernstein also spoke in favour of the aims of the Mission.

Bluejackets and Royal Marines.

THE perseverance and patience which have characterized the labours of that devoted friend of the sailor, Miss Agnes Weston, continue to be abundantly rewarded. Her ready access to the hearts of sailors is an evidence of the graceful and zealous manner in which her plans for winning their souls for Christ are carried out.

Year by year the work at Portsmouth and Devonport continues to receive that practical recognition it so worthily deserves. The interest manifested in its development was attested on Tuesday afternoon, when Exeter Lower Hall was crowded on the occasion of the annual meeting. On the platform were to be seen the brilliant uniform of the Royal Marine and the blue serge of the bluejacket, with two of the petty officers of H.M.S. Powerful and members of the Naval Brigade. Prior to the commencement of the meeting these joined heartily in familiar choruses and hymns.

The past year, in the words of Miss Weston, has been one of varied experiences. But the clouds have not been without their silver lining. In no dark period of war have the spiritual interests of the Army and Navy commanded more attention. From the Portsmouth Sailors' Rest, like similar institutions, there has flowed a stream of Gospel literature, which has found its way to the field of battle, for while Miss Weston regards the work amongst the Navy as her own, the benefits of her institutions are not limited to that class of Her Majesty's service. The circulation of Ashore and Afloat and the Monthly Letters continues to increase, and last year 1,284,000 copies were sent out. The is still maintained by Miss Weston herself, notwithstanding the heavy calls upon her time and resources by reason of the ever-expanding work at home. Her monthly letters are messages eagerly sought for, and heartily appreciated, whether the recipient be on sea or land. Articles to the value of £2,500 have been dispatched to the seat of war for the soldiers and sailors.

Evidence of appreciation on the part of the men was furnished by a chief petty officer of the Powerful, who, in relating his experiences at Ladysmith, said that the first things they received were Miss Weston's presents—"teetotal" Christmas puddings, and never did puddings taste better! "My pudding was eaten, but I have saved the tin and turned it into a money-box; let's have a silver collection." A collection had already been taken, but there were which was filled before it had gone the round of the hall.

An idea of the magnitude of the business operations at the "Rests" was conveyed by the statement of Miss Wintz. During the last ten months there was an increase of 20,000 in the number accommodated, while the sum taken over the counters amounted to £20,000. The consumption of food is astounding, though less remarkable in the light of the announcement by Miss Wintz as to the enormous appetite of "Jack," who often requires eight or nine eggs to make a meal!

The principles of temperance are strenuously upheld, and this element of the work, in harmony with every other phase, has been attended with encouraging results. During the year 5,978 pledges had been taken at the homes. The two men of the Powerful, in recalling their experiences amongst the sailors, spoke of the earnestness with which temperance work is taken up by their comrades who have been influenced at the Sailors' Rests, and led to see the wisdom and advantage of becoming abstainers, and waging war with one of the most powerful evils which beset the sailor on every hand.

Sergeant May was presented with a silver bar in recognition of his ten years' abstinence in the Royal Marines, and a silver medal was also handed to Mr. Ward, for five years' adherence to the temperance pledge. The honours were bestowed by Miss Weston, and the recipients were hearty in their expressions of gratitude for the ministry of the Sailors' Rests.

The gathering was exceptionally enthusiastic, and the appeal of the Superintendent and founder of this beneficent agency for a continuance of the prayerful sympathy of Christians in her efforts in the interests of the sailors, is not likely to be disregarded.

London City Mission.

IN common with kindred societies, and with the Christian Church at large, this Mission has been diligently engaged during the past year in that great spiritual warfare with the powers of evil in which there can be no truce, the sole weapon relied upon by the Society being "the Sword of the Spirit," God's Word. Some details of the work were made known at the sixty-fifth annual meeting in Exeter Hall, on Thursday morning last week.

On March 31 there were 458 missionaries on the staff, of whom 335 are engaged in domiciliary visitation, 104 in the visitation of special classes, and nineteen in the visitation of Welsh, Jews, and foreigners. It is hoped that Christian liberality may provide for steady increase of the number, though there is no immediate prospect of advance in this respect. Overcrowding, scepticism, the secularization of the Lord's Day, the drinking habits of the people, gambling and betting, and immorality of the grossest character, are aspects of the non-religious character of the people, which amply prove that the work of the Society is of the utmost importance to London's well-being. There are many districts within the boundaries of the Society's present operations, which are most necessitous; and there is ample room, if funds are forthcoming, for a large addition to the staff of missionaries, even if the area be not enlarged. Among are 1,492 drunkards hopefully reclaimed, 4,986 persons who have become attendants at places of worship, 1,659 are communicants, and 545 were restored to Church communion.

Whilst the people are dealt with en masse in mission rooms and open-air meetings, the main part of the work is with individuals. In private dwellings, in factories and workshops, on the silent canals as well as on the noisy highways of the city, and even in public-houses, it is personal dealing which mostly occupies the time and attention of the missionaries.

Subscriptions and donations amounted to £40,607, showing a falling-off of £1,576 in ordinary receipts. But there is cause of thankfulness to God, in that immediate anxiety has been relieved by a legacy of Consols to the value of £40,215, with an increase in smaller legacies of £2,128. Thus the necessity of reducing the number of missionaries has been obviated. It may be thought that this should lead to appointment of additional missionaries to some of the necessitous districts already referred to; but for many years expenditure has exceeded receipts, and deficits of the past ten years reach no less than £41,234. Moreover, £59,081 was expended last year; and but for the one large legacy, another serious deficit would have been added to those of preceding years. Therefore thankfulness to God for deliverance from present difficulties must be combined with careful use of the reserve fund so remarkably restored to the society.

Words strongly commendatory of the aims and methods of the Mission were spoken from the chair by the Marquis of Northampton. After pointing out the equal claims of Christian Missions carried on at home and abroad, he testified to the tact, perfect temper, and he had witnessed on the part of City Missionaries labouring among 'busmen, whose calling makes a religious life almost impossible. One great temptation of 'busmen lies in the fact that 'buses commonly start and end their journeys at public-houses. Much more might
